Exemptions; church conducting several activities. A discussion is presented of exemptions from excise taxes on fuel, oil, tires, and parts used on buses operated by a tax-exempt church in connection with (1) regularly scheduled Sunday school classes, (2) a regularly staffed kindergarten, (3) a music education program, and (4) recreational programs.

Rev. Rul. 80-88

ISSUE

May taxable fuels and articles be sold exempt from the manufacturers and retailers excise taxes to a church for use in the activities described below?

FACTS

A church operates the following activities:

(1) Regularly scheduled Sunday school classes for all age groups in the congregation. Classes are taught by a volunteer faculty at the church classroom facility and at various other class locations, including a junvenile detention center and a nursing home.

(2) A regularly staffed kindergarten, using the standard curriculum of the local board of education.

(3) A music education program conducted by the music ministry and employing three professional instructors in music education, two full-time and one part-time. The program encompasses age groups from first graders through adults who meet regularly at the church for instruction. Both vocal and instrumental theory are included in the program and some classes are held at other locations, such as music camps and clinics. This program is much more extensive than the regular church choir program. Many persons, however, participate in both activities.

(4) Recreational programs that include skating, swimming, a baseball league, and picnics. The recreational programs are open to all members of the church.

The church purchases buses that it uses to provide transportation in connection with the various activities described above. The buses are also used for choir trips and to transport church members to retreats. In operating the buses, the church purchases fuel, oil, tires, and parts.

The church is exempt from federal income tax under section 501(a) of the Code as an organization described in section 501(c)(3).

LAW AND REGULATIONS

The applicable sections of the Internal Revenue Code and Manufacturers and Retailers Excise Tax Regulations are sections 4041(g)(4), 4063 (a)(6), 4221(a)(5), 4221(d)(7), 4221(e)(5), 4221(e)(6), 6421(b)(1) (B), 6424(a)(2), 6427(b)(1)(B), 48.4041-13, and 48.4221-6.

Under sections 4063(a)(6) and 4221(e)(6) of the Code, as amended by the Energy Tax Act of 1978, Pub. L. No. 95-618 (1978), 1978-3 C.B. Vol. 2, effective December 1, 1978, buses and bus parts or accessories are exempt from the manufacturers excise tax.

Under sections 4041(g)(4) and 4221(a)(5) of the Code, exemptions from the retailers and manufacturers excise taxes are provided for fuels and articles sold to a nonprofit educational organization for its exclusive use. Under section 4221(d)(5) and sections 48.4041-13 and 48.422-6 of the regulations, the term "nonprofit educational organization" includes a school operated as an activity of an organization described in section 501(c)(3) which is exempt from income tax under section 501(a), provided the primary function of such school is the presentation of formal instruction and provided such school normally maintains a regular faculty and curriculum and normally has a regularly enrolled body of pupils or students in attendance at the place where its educational activities are regularly carried on.

Under section 4221(e)(5) of the Code, as amended by the Energy Tax Act, effective December 1, 1978, the manufacturers excise tax on tires does not apply in the case of tires or inner tubes for tires sold for use by the purchaser on or in connection with a qualified bus. Under section 4221(d)(7) a "qualified bus" includes a school bus that is defined as any automobile bus substantially all the use of which is in transporting students and employees of schools. In Senate Report No. 95-529, Pub. Law 95-618, 1978-3 (Vol. 2) C.B. 248, the Committee indicates that in reference to a school bus, the term "substantially all" means at least 85 percent. The term "school" is defined by section 4221(d)(7)(C) as an educational organization that normally maintains a regular faculty and curriculum and normally has a regularly enrolled body of pupils or students in attendance at the place where its educational activities are carried on.

Under sections 6421(b)(1)(B) and 6427(b)(1)(B) of the Code, as amended by the Energy Tax Act, effective December 1, 1978, if gasoline and other fuels are used in an automobile bus while engaged in the transportation of students and employees of schools (as defined in section 4221(d)(7)(C)), the ultimate purchaser of the fuels is entitled to a payment by the Secretary equivalent to the excise tax on such fuels.

Under section 6424(a)(2) of the Code, as amended by the Energy Tax Act, effective December 1, 1978, if lubricating oil (other than cutting oil and oil that has previously been used) is used in a qualified bus (as defined in section 4221(d)(7)), the ultimate purchaser of the lubricating oil is entitled to a payment by the Secretary equivalent to the manufacturers excise tax on such lubricating oil.

ANALYSIS AND HOLDINGS

In determining whether certain activities conducted by an income tax-exempt organization qualify as a school for purposes of the excise tax exemptions for nonprofit educational organizations, each activity must qualify on its own, rather than all activities being considered on a cumulative basis. Thus, each activity must meet the statute and regulation requirements of faculty, curriculum, and student body. In addition, taxable fuels and articles purchased by the organization must be for the exclusive use of the qualifying school activities. See, for example, Rev. Rul. 75-314, 1975-2 C.B. 442, and Rev. Rul. 74-234, 1974-1 C.B. 316, which illustrate how the nonprofit educational exemption from certain excise taxes applies where a religious organization conducts an exempt school activity.

In this case, the Sunday school described in (1), the kindergarten described in (2), and the music education program described in (3) meet the school activity requirements of the statute and regulations in that their primary function is the presentation of formal instruction and that they maintain a regular faculty and curriculum and normally have a regularly enrolled body of students in attendance at the place where their educational activities are regularly carried on. The recreational programs described in (4), the regular church choir program, and the church retreats do not meet such requirements, and thus do not qualify as school activities. Moreover, they are not merely incidental to the qualifying school activities since they are available to the entire church congregation. See Rev. Rul. 68-342, 1968-1 C.B. 484.

Accordingly, the nonprofit educational exemptions provided by sections 4041(g)(4) and 4221(a)(5) of the Code apply to taxable fuels and articles sold to the organization for exclusive use in activities (1), (2), and (3), but the exemptions do not apply to fuels and articles sold for use in activity (4) or for use in the retreats and choir program.

Under section 4221(e)(5) of the Code, effective December 1, 1978, however, tires and tubes may be purchased tax free by the organization for use on a bus if substantially all the use of the bus (at least 85 percent) is in providing transportation in connection with activities (1), (2), and (3), thus meeting the definition of a qualified bus under section 4221(d)(7) even if the bus is used for some nonexempt activities. Further, if lubricating oil purchased by the organization is used in a qualified bus, under section 6424(a)(2), the organization will be entitled as the ultimate purchaser to a payment equivalent to the manufacturers tax imposed on lubricating oil.

In addition, where gasoline and other fuels are purchased by the organization tax paid because the organization does not qualify for the nonprofit educational exemption under section 4221(a)(5) of the Code, any portion of such fuels used in an automobile bus while transporting students and employees in connection with school activities (1), (2), or (3) will entitle the organization to a credit or refund under sections 6421(b)(1)(B) and 6427(b)(1)(B), effective December 1, 1978, with respect to the excise tax on such portion of the fuels.

Exemptions; United Nations Secretariat. The exemptions from the federal excise taxes referred to in Rev. Rul. 73-198 apply to the Secretaries-General of the United Nations, Under Secretaries-General, Assistant Secretaries-General of the United Nations, and officials of equivalent rank who possess diplomatic privileges and immunities. However, the exemptions do not apply to members of the United Nations Secretariat. Rev. Rul. 73-198 amplified.

Rev. Rul. 80-89

ISSUE

Are members of the United Nations Secretariat exempt from the federal excise taxes?

FACTS

Members of the United Nations Secretariat are employed and paid by the United Nations. The Secretary-General, Under Secretaries-General, Assistant Secretaries-General, and officials of equivalent rank, their spouses, and their minor children, have the privileges and immunities, exemptions and facilities accorded to diplomatic envoys in accordance with international law.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Rev. Rul. 73-198, 1973-1 C.B. 425, relates to the exemptions from Federal excise taxes with respect to foreign diplomatic and consular officers, and other nondiplomatic officers, agencies and commissions of foreign governments. The revenue ruling concludes that exemptions from certain excise taxes are extended to officers of missions to the United Nations serving in a representative capacity and to family members living with such officers.

Rev. Rul. 75-203, 1975-1 C.B. 336, states that observers to the United Nations are not officers of missions to that organization, nor do they come within the exempt category of nondiplomatic officers, agencies and commissions of foreign governments, since the United Nations observers are not in this country to conduct working relationships with American individuals or organizations on behalf of their home governments. Accordingly, the exemptions from the Federal excise taxes referred to in Rev. Rul. 73-198 do not apply to permanent observers to the United Nations.

Members of the United Nations Secretariat are not officers of missions to that organization, nor do they come within the exempt category of nondiplomatic officers, agencies and commissions of foreign governments, because the members of the Secretariat are not in this country to conduct working relationships with American individuals or organizations on behalf of their home governments.

HOLDING

The exemptions from the federal excise taxes referred to in Rev. Rul. 73-198 do not apply to members of the United Nations Secretariat. However, the exemptions from the federal excise taxes referred to in Rev. Rul. 73-198 apply to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, Under Secretaries-General, Assistant Secretaries-General of the United Nations, and officials of equivalent rank who possess diplomatic privileges and immunities.

EFFECT ON OTHER DOCUMENTS

26 CFR 48.4061(b)-2: Definition of parts or accessories.

Cranes installed on trucks; job-site operations. The tax imposed by section 4061 does not apply to sales of certain mast and boom type cranes having lifting capacity of 5,000 or 6,000 pounds that are mounted on small trucks and designed for job-site operations rather than for typical loading or unloading duties.

Rev. Rul. 80-90

ISSUE

Does the manufacturers excise tax on automotive parts or accessories apply to sales of certain cranes designed to be mounted on trucks?

FACTS

The cranes are of the mast and boom type, and are normally mounted on small trucks in the right rear corner of the body to perform lifting operations at field locations and job-sites. The cranes have lifting capacities of 5,000 or 6,000 pounds, and are available with fixed boom lengths from 9 to 20 feet. They are driven by a truck or carrier battery which provides 30 to 80 minutes of operation. Further, they have a winch speed from 2 to 30 feet per minute, a rotation speed of ½ to 1 revolution per minute, and an elevation speed from 2 to 25 feet per minute. Some of the cranes have equipment to eliminate any "creep" in the hold positions and other equipment to prevent operation of more than one function at a time. The cranes have current selling prices of $4,000 to $7,000.

The lifting capacity of the cranes enables them to lift articles which are too heavy to be transported by the trucks on which the cranes are mounted. In addition, the available load space within the truck body prevents placing such articles on the truck.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4061(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code imposes a manufacturers excise tax on the sale of automotive parts or accesories.

Section 48.4061(b)-2(a) of the Manufacturers and Retailers Excise Tax Regulations provides that the term "parts or accessories" includes (1) any article the primary use of which is to improve, repair, replace, or serve as a component part of an automobile truck chassis or body, (2) any article designed to be attached to or used in connection with such chassis or body to add to its utility or ornamentation, and (3) any article the primary use of which is in connection with such chassis or body, whether or not essential to its operation or use.

Section 48.4061(b)-2(a) of the regulations provides further that an article is not a taxable part or accessory even though it is designed to be attached to the vehicle or to be primarily used with it if the article is the load being transported and the primary function of the article is to serve a purpose unrelated to the vehicle as such. On the other hand, an article such as loading or unloading equipment designed to be attached to or to be primarily used with a truck is a taxable part or accessory inasmuch as it contributes to the load-carrying function of the truck.

Rev. Rul. 75-88, 1975-1 C.B. 341, sets forth an administrative test to assist in determining the taxability of cranes of the mast and boom type. In applying this test, it will be presumed that cranes of such type that (1) measure 25 feet or less is extended horizontal reach, from the center line of the mast, without readily removable extensions, and (2) can be mounted on trucks for use in loading or unloading such trucks, are articles that are designed and primarily used for loading and unloading such trucks. Therefore, the tax imposed by section 4061 (b)(1) of the Code would apply to such cranes. However, the presumption established by this test is rebuttable if it can be established that such determination is inconsistent with section 48.4061(b)-2(a) of the regulations.

Rev. Rul. 79-192, 1979-1 C.B. 340, concluded that an article is a part or accessory under section 48.4061(b)-2(a) of the regulations only if it contributes as much or more to the highway transportation function than to the non-transportation function. In other words, an item which contributes primarily to the non-highway transportation function of the vehicle is not taxable.

The cranes in question measure less than 25 feet in extended horizontal reach and can be mounted on trucks for use in loading or unloading the trucks. Thus, the cranes meet (1) and (2) of the test set forth in Rev. Rul. 75-88 and are presumed to be taxable.

However, such determination is inconsistent with section 48.4061(b)-2(a) of the regulations because the cranes are primarily designed for job-site operations rather than as typical loading and unloading cranes. Loading and unloading cranes for small trucks typically have lifting capacities of 1,000 to 2,000 pounds; articulating, folding or extendable booms; a hydraulic pump power source which permits an indefinite work cycle; faster winch speeds of 60 to 120 feet per minute; faster rotation speeds of 2 to 3 revolutions per minute; faster elevation speeds of 30 to 50 feet per minute; and current selling prices as low as $600 to $700.

HOLDING

The presumption of taxability established under Rev. Rul. 75-88 is rebutted with respect to these cranes. Accordingly, the tax imposed by section 4061(b)(1) of the Code on automotive parts or accessories does not apply to sales of the described cranes.

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE.—CHAPTER 1, SUBCHAPTER A, PART 5.—TEMPORARY INCOME TAX REGULATIONS UNDER THE REVENUE ACT OF 1978

Tentative Refund Under Claim of Right Adjustment

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Temporary regulations.

SUMMARY: This document contains a temporary regulation that prescribes the rules for applying for a tentative refund under a claim of right adjustment. Changes to the applicable tax law were made by the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1].

DATE: The regulation applies to applications for tentative refund filed after November 5, 1978.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: Richard L. Mull of the Legislation and Regulations Division, Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service, 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224, Attention CC:LR:T (202-566-3458, not a toll-free number).

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

This document contains a temporary regulating to applications for a tentative refund ("quick" refund) under a claim of right adjustment. The temporary regulation prescribes the method of applying for the "quick" refund and indicates the information that must be contained in the application.

Section 6411(d) of the Code (as added by section 504 of the Revenue Act of 1978) establishes a "quick" refund procedure for an overpayment of tax under section 1341(b)(1). The procedure is similar to that available under section 6411(a) for tentative carryback adjustments. Under new section 6411(d), the Internal Revenue Service must review an application, determine the amount of the overpayment, and apply, credit, or refund the overpayment to the taxpayer within 90 days after the application is filed (or, if later, within 90 days after the last day of the month in which the tax return for the year the overpayment occurs must be filed, including extensions).

Taxpayers are not required to use the "quick" refund procedure but may continue to use the normal procedure under section 6402 for obtaining a refund or credit of an amount treated as an overpayment under section 1341 (b)(1). For refunds not required to be reported to the Joint Committee on Taxation, refunds under the normal procedure will be as effective as under the "quick" refund procedure.

The temporary regulation prescribes the method of applying for the "quick" refund. For corporations, the application must be filed on Form 1139. For other taxpayers, the application must be filed on Form 1045. Special rules apply for applications filed before February 7, 1980. The regulation also indicates the time and place for filing.

The application must contain certain information necessary to make the computation under section 1341(b) (1). The application is not a claim for credit or refund in determining whether a claim was filed timely under section 6511.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of this regulation is Richard L. Mull of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

WAIVER OF CERTAIN PROCEDURAL REQUIREMENTS

A determination has been made by Jerome Kurtz, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that there is need for immediate guidance to enable taxpayers to file applications for tentative refunds under a claim of right adjustment. This is because section 6411(d) is effective for applications filed after November 5, 1978, and because the application must be made in the manner prescribed by regulations. Because of the immediate need for this regulation, compliance with the procedural requirements of paragraph 8 through 14 of the final Treasury directive (43 FR 52120), relating to improving regulations, would be impracticable and, therefore, these requirements have not been followed.

Adoption of regulation

Accordingly, 26 CFR Part 5 is amended by adding a new section 5.6411-1, to read as follows:

§ 5.6411-1 Tentative refund under claim of right adjustment.

(a) Effective date. This section applies to applications for tentative refunds filed after November 5, 1978, under section 6411(d).

(b) In general. Section 6411(d) allows taxpayers to apply for a tentative refund of amounts treated under section 1341(b)(1) as an overpayment of tax under a claim of right adjustment. This section contains rules for filing an application for this tentative refund. The computation of amounts treated as an overpayment must be made in accordance with section 1341 and the regulations under that section.

(c) Method of applying for tentative refund—(1) In general. For a corporation, the application is made by filing Form 1139. For taxpayers other than corporations, the application is made by filing Form 1045. The application must be made by filing those forms even if the taxpayer is not applying for a tentative carryback adjustment under section 6411(a). If the taxpayer files the form to apply for the section 6411(d) tentative refund only, it may disregard those lines on the form used to compute the section 6411(a) carryback adjustment. If the taxpayer has a carryback of a net operating loss, credit, or capital loss for the taxable year (determined without the deduction described in section 1341(a)(2)) and applies for both the section 6411(a) tentative carryback adjustment and the section 6411(d) tentative refund, an ordering rule applies. The taxpayer must take into account any adjustments made in applying for the tentative carryback adjustment under section 6411(a) before determining the amount of the overpayment for which an application under section 6411(d) is being made. The taxpayer must attach to the form a separate schedule containing the information required under paragraph (d) of this section.

(2) Applications made before February 7, 1980. Applications made before February 7, 1980 that are made under penalties of perjury will be considered meeting the requirements of this section if made by filing a separate statement whether or not it is attached to Form 1139 or 1045. This application, however, must contain the information required under paragraph (d) of this section (other than paragraph (d)(2)).

(d) Information required—(1) In general. The application must contain (i) the taxpayer's name, address, and identification number and (ii) the information set forth in paragraph (d)(2) and (3) of this section, determined in accordance with section 1341 and the regulations under that section. For example, the decrease in tax under paragraph (d)(3)(iii) of this section is determined under § 1.1341-1(d)(4).

(2) Computation under section 1341(a)(4). The application must contain the following information related to the computation under section 1341(a)(4):

(i) The amount of income restored by the taxpayer to another during the taxable year and the amount of the corresponding deduction described in section 1341(a)(2);

(ii) The tax for the taxable year computed with the deduction described in section 1341(a)(2); and

(iii) The tax for each prior taxable year (determined before adjustment under section 1341) to which any net operating loss described in section 1341(b)(4)(A) must be carried and the decrease in tax for each of those years that results from the carryback of that loss.

(3) Computation under section 1341(a)(5). The application must contain the following information related to the computation under section 1341(a)(5):

(i) The tax for the taxable year without the deduction described in section 1341(a)(2);

(ii) The tax for each prior taxable year (determined before adjustment under section 1341) for which a decrease in tax is computed under section 1341(a)(5)(B);

(iii) The decrease in tax for each prior taxable year computed under section 1341(a)(5)(B), including any decrease resulting from a net operating loss or capital loss described in section 1341(b)(4)(B); and

(iv) The amount treated as an overpayment of tax under section 1341(b)(1).

(e) Time and place for filing. The application must be filed no earlier than the date of filing the return for the taxable year of restoration and no later than the date 12 months from the last day of that taxable year. The application must be filed with the Internal Revenue Service Center (or other office) where the taxpayer filed its return for the taxable year of restoration.

(f) Not a claim for credit or refund. An application for tentative refund under section 6411(d) is not a claim for credit or refund. The principles of paragraph (b)(2) of § 1.6411-1 apply in determining the effect of an application for a tentative refund. For example, the filing of an application for tentative refund under section 6411(d) is not a claim for credit or refund in determining whether a claim for credit or refund was timely filed.

There is need for immediate guidance with respect to the provisions contained in this Treasury decision. For this reason, it is found impracticable to issue it with notice and public procedure under subsection (b) of section 553 of Title 5 of the United States Code or subject to the effective date limitation of subsection (d) of that section.

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in sections 6411(d)(1) and 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (92 Stat. 2880; 26 U.S.C. 6411(d)), (68A Stat. 917; 26 U.S.C. 7805).

SUPREME COURT OF THE
UNITED STATES
No. 78-1453

United States et al., Petitioners,
v. Harvey F. Euge

[444 U.S.]

On Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit

[February 20, 1980]

Syllabus

No. 78-1453. Argued November 26, 1979—Decided February 20, 1980

Section 7602 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 authorizes the Internal Revenue Service to summon individuals to "appear," and "to produce such books, papers, records, or other data, and to give testimony," as may be relevant to a tax investigation. During an investigation of respondent's income tax liability, in an effort to determine whether deposits in certain bank accounts not registered in respondent's name represented income attributable to him, an IRS agent issued a summons requiring respondent to appear and execute handwriting exemplars of the various signatures appearing on the bank signature cards. When respondent refused to comply with the summons, the United States brought suit to enforce it. The District Court held that the summons should be enforced, but the Court of Appeals reversed, holding that the summons authority under § 7602 does not authorize the IRS to compel the execution of handwriting exemplars.

Held: The IRS is empowered to compel handwriting exemplars under its summons authority conferred by § 7602.

(a) While § 7602's language may not be explicit in authorizing handwriting exemplars, the duty to appear and give testimony has traditionally encompassed a duty to provide some forms of nontestimonial, physical evidence, including handwriting exemplars. By imposing an obligation to produce documents as well as to appear and give testimony, § 7602's language suggests an intention to codify a broad testimonial obligation, including an obligation to provide some physical evidence relevant and material to a tax investigation. From this authority to compel the production of some physical evidence, it can properly be concluded that the authority extends to the execution of handwriting exemplars, one variety of physical evidence.

(b) This Court has consistently construed congressional intent to require that if the claimed summons authority is necessary for the effective performance of congressionally imposed responsibilities to enforce the Internal Revenue Code, that authority should be upheld absent express statutory prohibition or substantial countervailing congressional policies.

(c) The authority claimed here is necessary for the effective exercise of the IRS's enforcement responsibilities. Handwriting exemplars are often an important evidentiary component in establishing tax liability, the use of such exemplars being an effective method for determining whether a particular name is an alias of a taxpayer.

(d) Moreover, the authority claimed here is entirely consistent with the statutory language and is not in derogation of any countervailing policies or any constitutional rights, compulsion of handwriting exemplars being neither a search or seizure subject to Fourth Amendment protections nor testimonial evidence protected by the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination.

587 F. 2d 25, reversed.

Rehnquist, J., delivered the opinion of the Court, in which Burger, C. J., and Stewart, White, Blackmun, and Powell, JJ., joined. Brennan, J., filed a dissenting opinion, in which Marshall and Stevens, JJ., joined. Marshall, J., filed a dissenting opinion.

Mr. Justice Rehnquist delivered the opinion of the Court.

The United States sued in the District Court seeking enforcement of an Internal Revenue Service summons requiring respondent to appear and provide handwriting exemplars. Enforcement was denied by the Court of Appeals for the Eighth Circuit, United States v. Euge, 587 F.2d 25 (CA8 1978) (en banc), and we granted certiorari.[1] We now hold that Congress has empowered the IRS to compel handwriting exemplars under its summons authority conferred by 26 U.S.C. § 7602.

I

The facts are not in dispute. In October 1977, an agent in the Intelligence Division of the Internal Revenue Service was assigned to investigate respondent's income tax liability for the years 1973 through 1976. Respondent had not filed any tax returns for those years. The Service sought to employ the "bank deposits method" of reconstructing respondent's income for those years as a means of calculating his tax liability. Under this method of proof, the sums deposited in the taxpayer's bank accounts are scrutinized to determine whether they represent taxable income.

During the course of the investigation, the agent found only two bank accounts registered in respondent's name. Twenty other bank accounts were discovered, however, which the agent had reason to believe were being maintained by respondent under aliases to conceal taxable income. The statements for these accounts were sent to post office boxes held in respondent's name; the signature cards for the accounts listed addresses of properties owned by respondent; and the agent had documented frequent transfers of funds between the accounts.

[1] The Fourth Circuit reached a contrary result in United States v. Rosinsky, 547 F. 2d 249 (CA4 1977). The Sixth Circuit decided this issue in accord with the Eighth Circuit. United States v. Brown, 536 F. 2d 117 (CA6 1976).

In an effort to determine whether the sums deposited in these accounts represented income attributable to respondent, the agent issued a summons on October 7, 1977, requiring respondent to appear and execute handwriting exemplars of the various signatures appearing on the bank signature cards. Respondent declined to comply with the summons.

The United States commenced this action under 26 U.S.C. § 7604(a). The District Court held that the summons should be enforced, ordering respondent to provide 10 handwriting exemplars of eight different signatures. The Court of Appeals reversed, ruling that the summons authority vested in the Internal Revenue Service under 26 U.S.C. § 7602 does not authorize the IRS to compel the execution of handwriting exemplars.[2]

II

The structure and history of the statutory authority of the Internal Revenue Service to summon witnesses to produce evidence necessary for tax investigations has been repeatedly reviewed by this Court in recent years. See Reisman v. Caplin, 375 U.S. 440 (1964) [1964-1 C.B. (Part 1) 517]; United States v. Powell, 379 U.S. 48 (1964) [1965-1 C.B. 547]; Donaldson v. United States, 400 U.S. 517 (1971) [1971-1 C.B. 416]; United States v. Bisceglia, 420 U.S. 141 (1975) [1975-1 C.B. 379]; Fisher v. United States, 425 U.S. 391 (1976) [1976-1 C.B. 411]; United States v. LaSalle National Bank, 437 U.S. 298 (1978) [1978-2 C.B. 336]. Under § 7602, the Secretary of the Treasury, and therefore the IRS as his designate,[3] is authorized to summon individuals to "appear before the Secretary . . . and to produce such books, papers, records, or other data, and to give testimony, under oath, as may be relevant or material to such inquiry. . . ."[4] The question presented here is whether this power to compel a witness to "appear," to produce "other data," and to "give testimony," includes the power to compel the execution of handwriting exemplars. We conclude that it does, for several reasons. While the language may not be explicit in its authorization of handwriting exemplars, the duty to appear and give testimony, a duty imposed by § 7602, has traditionally encompassed a duty to provide some forms of non-testimonial, physical evidence, including handwriting exemplars. Further, this Court has consistently construed congressional intent to require that if the summons authority claimed is necessary for the effective performance of congressionally imposed responsibilities to enforce the tax code, that authority should be upheld absent express statutory prohibition or substantial countervailing policies. The authority claimed here is necessary for the effective exercise of the Service's enforcement responsibilities; it is entirely consistent with the statutory language; and it is not in derogation of any constitutional rights or countervailing policies enunciated by Congress.

A

Through § 7602, Congress has imposed a duty on persons possessing information "relevant or material" to an investigation of federal tax liability to produce that information at the request of the Secretary or his delegate. That duty to provide relevant information expressly obligates the person summoned to produce documentary evidence and to "appear" and "give testimony." Imposition of such an evidentiary obligation is, of course, not a novel innovation attributable to § 7602. The common law has been the source of a comparable evidentiary obligation for centuries. In determining the scope of the obligation Congress intended to impose by use of this language, we have previously analogized, as an interpretive guide, to the common-law duties attaching to the issuance of a testimonial summons. See United States v. Bisceglia, 420 U.S. 141, 147-148 (1975); United States v. Powell, 379 U.S. 48, 57 (1964). Congress, through legislation, may expand or contract the duty imposed,[5] but absent some contrary expression, there is a wealth of history helpful in defining the duties imposed by the issuance of a summons.

The scope of the "testimonial"[6] or evidentiary duty imposed by common law or statute has traditionally been interpreted as an expansive duty limited principally by relevance and privilege. As this Court described the contours of the duty in United States v. Bryan, 339 U.S. 323, 331 (1950): "[P]ersons summoned as witnesses by competent authority have certain minimum duties and obligations which are necessary concessions to the public interest in the orderly operation of legislative and judicial machinery. . . . We have often iterated the importance of this public duty, which every person within the jurisdiction of the Government is bound to perform when properly summoned." While the Court recognized that certain exemptions would be upheld, the "primary assumption" was that a summoned party must "give what testimony one is capable of giving" absent an exemption "grounded in a substantial individual interest which has been found, through centuries of experience, to outweigh the public interest in the search for truth." Ibid.

[2] The precise reasons for the Court's holding are not clear. In the opinion, the Court suggests that the statute does not authorize the IRS to compel a taxpayer to create evidence "out of thin air." 587 F. 2d, at 27, n. 3. The opinion also states, however, that it adopts the views expressed in the dissenting opinion in United States v. Campbell, 525 F. 2d 604 (CA8 1975). The principal reason forwarded in that decision for declining to construe § 7602 to authorize production of handwriting exemplars was the conclusion that such an order would constitute a seizure in violation of the Fourth Amendment. Neither rationale supports the conclusion reached by the Court of Appeals.

[3] Responsibility for administration and enforcement of the revenue laws is vested in the Secretary of the Treasury. 26 U. S. C. § 7801(a). The Internal Revenue Service, however, is organized to carry out those responsibilities for the Secretary. See Donaldson v. United States, supra, 400 U. S., at 534; 35 Fed. Reg. 2417 et seq. (1970). For the purposes of this opinion, we refer to the authority and responsibilities of the Secretary and the Service interchangeably.

[4] "SEC. 7602. Examination of Books and Witnesses.

"For the purpose of ascertaining the correctness of any return, making a return where none has been made, determining the liability of any person for any internal revenue tax or the liability at law or in equity of any transferee or fiduciary of any person in respect of any internal revenue tax, or collecting any such liability, the Secretary or his delegate is authorized—

"(1) To examine any books, papers, records, or other data which may be relevant or material to such inquiry;

"(2) To summon the person liable for tax or required to perform the act, or any officer or employee of such person, or any person having possession, custody, or care of books of account containing entries relating to the business of the person liable for tax or required to perform the act, or any other person the Secretary may deem proper, to appear before the Secretary or his delegate at a time and place named in the summons and to produce such books, papers, records, or other data, and to give such testimony, under oath, as may be relevant or material to such inquiry; and

"(3) To take such testimony of the person concerned, under oath, as may be relevant or material to such inquiry."

[5] Legislative efforts to expand the scope of the testimonial obligation would, of course, be limited by the applicable constitutional guarantees.

[6] The word "testimony" has been used loosely in this context to refer to physical and documentary, as well as oral, evidence. See 8 Wigmore on Evidence § 2194, at 76 (McNaughton Rev. 1961).

One application of this broad duty to provide relevant evidence has been the recognition, since early times, of an obligation to provide certain forms of nontestimonial physical evidence.[7] In Holt v. United States, 218 U.S. 245, 252-253 (1910) (Holmes, J.) the Court found that the common-law evidentiary duty permitted the compulsion of various forms of physical evidence. In Schmerber v. California, 384 U.S. 757, 764 (1966), this Court observed that traditionally witnesses could be compelled, in both state and federal courts, to submit to "fingerprinting, photographing, or measurements, to write or speak for identification, to appear in court, to stand, to assume a stance, to walk, or to make a particular gesture." See also United States v. Wade, 388 U.S. 218 (1967). In Gilbert v. California, 388 U.S. 263, 266-267 (1967), handwriting was held, "like the body itself" to be an "identifying physical characteristic," subject to production. In United States v. Dionisio, 410 U.S. 1 (1973), and United States v. Mara, 410 U.S. 19 (1973), this Court again confirmed that handwriting is in the nature of physical evidence which can be compelled by a grand jury in the exercise of its subpoena power. See also United States v. Mullaney, 32 Fed. 370 (CC Mo. 1887).

This broad duty to provide most relevant, nonprivileged evidence has not been considered to exist only in the common law. The Court has recognized that by statute "Congress may provide for the performance of this duty." Blackmer v. United States, 284 U.S. 421, 438 (1932). By imposing an obligation to produce documents as well as to appear and give testimony, we believe the language of § 7602 suggests an intention to codify a broad testimonial obligation, including an obligation to provide some physical evidence relevant and material to a tax investigation, subject to the traditional privileges and limitations. This conclusion seems inherent in the imposition of an obligation to "appear," since an obligation to appear necessarily entails an obligation to display physical features to the summoning authority. Congress thereby authorized the Service to compel the production of some physical evidence and it is certainly possible to conclude that this authorization extended to the execution of handwriting exemplars, one variety of relevant physical evidence. This construction of the language conforms with the historical notions of the testimonial duty attaching to the issuance of a summons.[8]

B

Congress certainly could have narrowed the common-law testimonial duty in enacting § 7602 and thus we do not rely solely on the common-law meaning of the statutory language. Section 7602 does not, by its terms, compel the production of handwriting exemplars, and therefore, a narrower interpretation of the duty imposed is not precluded by the actual language of the statute. A narrower interpretation is precluded, however, by the precedents of this Court construing that statute. As early as 1911, this Court established the benchmarks for interpreting the authority of the Internal Revenue Service to enforce tax obligations in holding that, "the administration of this statute may well be taken to embrace all appropriate measures for its enforcement, [unless] there is . . . substantial reason for assigning to the phrase[s] . . . a narrower interpretation." United States v. Chamberlin, 219 U.S. 250, 265 (1911). This precise mode of construction has consistently been applied by this Court in construing the breadth of the summons authority Congress intended to confer in § 7602. In United States v. Powell, 379 U.S. 48 (1964), the Court declined to construe § 7605(b), prohibiting the Secretary from conducting "unnecessary examinations," to require probable cause for the issuance of a § 7602 summons. The Court found that "although a more stringent interpretation is possible, one which would require some showing of cause for suspecting fraud, we reject such an interpretation because it might seriously hamper the Commissioner in carrying out investigations he thinks warranted. . . ." Id., at 53-54. In Donaldson v. United States, 400 U.S. 517 (1917), the Court refused to hold that the summons authority could not be used whenever there was a potential that the civil investigation might later lead to criminal prosecution. In construing the scope of the summons authority, the Court emphasized that it refused to draw the line in a manner that would "stultify enforcement of federal law." Id., at 536. Finally, in United States v. Bisceglia, 420 U.S. 141 (1975), the Court upheld the Service's authority to issue a John Doe summons to a bank in order to discover the identity of an individual unknown to the Service. The Court reasoned that absent that construction, "no meaningful investigation of such events could be conducted" and thus "settled principles of statutory interpretation require that we avoid such a result absent unambiguous directions from Congress." Id., at 150. There is thus a formidable line of precedent construing congressional intent to uphold the claimed enforcement authority of the Service if such authority is necessary for the effective enforcement of the revenue laws and is not undercut by contrary legislative purposes.[9]

[7] Wigmore has identified the testimonial duty as including an obligation "to disclose for the purpose of justice all that is in his control which can serve the ascertainment of the truth, [and] this duty includes not only mental impressions preserved in his brain and the documents preserved in his hands, but also the corporal facts existing on his body." 8 Wigmore on Evidence § 2194, at 76 (McNaughton Rev. 1961).

[8] As indicated elsewhere, we do not suggest that the evidentiary obligation codified in § 7602 in all respects conforms to the common law. We rely on the analogy only as one interpretive guide.

Applying these principles, we conclude that Congress empowered the Service to seek, and obliged the witness to provide handwriting exemplars relevant to the investigation. First, there is no question that handwriting exemplars will often be an important evidentiary component in establishing tax liability. The statutory framework, as reviewed in the numerous precedents recited, supra, imposes on the Secretary of Treasury, and the IRS as his designate, a broad duty to enforce the tax laws. 26 U.S.C. § 7601(a). Congress has legislated that the Secretary is "required to make the inquiries, determinations, and assessments of all taxes . . . imposed by this title. . . ." 26 U.S.C. § 6201(a). Under § 6301 the Secretary "shall collect taxes imposed by the Internal Revenue laws." In order to fulfill these duties, the Service will often need to determine whether a particular name is an alias of a taxpayer. One effective method for resolving that issue is through the use of handwriting exemplars.[10] As we recognized in Bisceglia, the IRS does have a need for investigative devices which assist them in ascertaining the identity of tax evaders. In Bisceglia, we held, in language relevant to this case, that:

> "[I]f criminal activity is afoot the persons involved may well have used aliases or taken other measures to cover their tracks. Thus, if the Internal Revenue Service is unable to issue a summons to determine the identity of such persons, the broad inquiry authorized by § 7601 will be frustrated in this class of cases. Settled principles of statutory interpretation require that we avoid such a result absent unambiguous directions from Congress." 420 U.S., at 150.

There is certainly nothing in the statutory language,[11] or in the legislative history,[12] precluding the interpretation asserted by the Service. Nor is there any constitutional privilege of the taxpayer or other parties that is violated by this construction. Compulsion of handwriting exemplars is neither a search or seizure subject to Fourth Amendment protections, United States v. Mara, supra, nor testimonial evidence protected by the Fifth Amendment privilege against self-incrimination. Gilbert v. California, 388 U.S. 263 (1967). The compulsion of handwriting exemplars has been the subject of far less protection than the compulsion of testimony and documents.[13] Since Congress has explicitly established an obligation to provide the more protected forms of evidence, it would seem curious had it chosen not to impose an obligation to produce a form of evidence tradition has found it less important to protect.[14]

As we have emphasized in other cases dealing with § 7602 proceedings, the summoned party is entitled to challenge the issuance of the summons in an adversary proceeding in federal court prior to enforcement, and may assert appropriate defenses. See Bisceglia, supra, 420 U.S., at 151. The Service must also establish compliance with the good-faith requirements recognized by this Court, United States v. LaSalle National Bank, 437 U.S. 298, 318 (1978), and with the requirement of § 7605(b) that "no taxpayer shall be subjected to unnecessary examination or investigations. . . ." These protections are quite sufficient to lead us to refuse to strain to imply additional ones from the neutral language Congress has used in § 7602.

[9] Congressional intent to provide the Secretary with broad latitude to adopt enforcement techniques helpful in the performance of his tax collection and assessment responsibilities is expressed throughout the Act. In § 6302, for example, Congress has conferred the Secretary with discretion to devise methods of tax collection not specifically provided by statute:

"Whether or not the method of collecting any tax imposed . . . is specifically provided for by this title, any such tax may . . . be collected by . . . other reasonable devices or methods as may be necessary or helpful in securing a complete and proper collection of the tax."

[10] The United States suggests there are numerous uses of handwriting exemplars helpful to the Service. Not only are they useful in identifying the holder of a bank account, but they are also said to be useful for identifying persons who file multiple tax returns under false names claiming income tax refunds, purchase of money orders under false names, and forgery of joint returns to take advantage of lower joint rates.

[11] Respondent argues that the language of § 7602 suggests that it only requires the production of documents already in existence. Since handwriting exemplars must be created by the witness, it is argued that the statute is inapplicable. First, we do not view the exhibition of physical characteristics to be equivalent to the creation of documentary evidence. See United States v. Dionisio, 410 U. S. 1, 6 (1973). Further, the statute obviously contemplates the transformation of some evidence not formerly tangible, since it obligates the summoned individual to provide testimony. The testimony, of course, creates evidence not previously in existence. We see no difference between the nature of the evidence created when the witness is ordered to talk and that created when he is ordered to write.

We express no opinion on the scope of the Service's authority to otherwise order the witness to generate previously nonexistent documentation under § 7602. The Service in fact has expressly disclaimed any intention to order the creation of documents. The Internal Revenue Manual § 4022.64(4) (1977) provides that an administrative summons:

"should not require the witness to do anything other than to appear on a given date to give testimony and to bring with him/her existing books, papers, and records. A witness cannot be required to prepare or create documents."

The section states, however, that "[t]he giving of exemplars, for example, handwriting exemplars, at an appearance pursuant to a summons is not 'creating a document.' "

[12] The legislative history is simply unilluminating. The only conclusion which that history supports is that Congress did not intend to change the expanse of the § 7602 summons authority by its amendments in 1954. H. R. Rep. No. 1337, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. (1954); S. Rep. No. 1622, 83d Cong., 2d Sess. (1954). Since there are no pre-1954 interpretations of the statute precluding the issuance of handwriting exemplars, the legislative history sheds no light on the construction intended by Congress.

[13] Gilbert v. California, 388 U. S. 262 (1967), demonstrates the minimal level of protection afforded handwriting exemplars, and the reasons why such protection is unnecessary. The Court found that production of the exemplars was not subject to the Fifth Amendment privilege, and that their creation did not represent a critical stage requiring counsel. The Court found only a "minimal risk that the absence of counsel might derogate from [a] right to a fair trial." Id., at 267. The Court concluded that, "If for some reason, an unrepresentative exemplar is taken, this can be brought out and corrected through the adversary process of trial since the accused can make an unlimited number of additional exemplars for analysis and comparison by government and defense handwriting experts." Ibid.

[14] Palmer v. United States, 530 F. 2d 787 (CA8 1976), similarly construed 28 U. S. C. § 1826(a). That statute authorizes the imposition of contempt on witnesses who refuse to "testify or provide other information." The statute does not explicitly authorize contempt sanctions for refusal to execute handwriting exemplars. The Court found that the legislative history indicated that Congress had intended, through the use of the language employed in the statute, to "codify present civil contempt practice." Since that practice had included the power to punish a witness for refusing to create a handwriting exemplar, the Court reasoned that Congress must have thought this phrasing adequate to cover production of handwriting samples.

We accordingly reverse the judgment of the Court of Appeals refusing enforcement of the summons.

Reversed.

Part III. Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous

26 CFR 601.402: Sales taxes collected by return.
(Also Part I, Section 4063.)

Rev. Proc. 80-9

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this revenue procedure is to provide guidelines whereby manufacturers of automotive parts or accessories and purchasers of such articles may register to sell and purchase taxable articles tax free for resale with the first retail sales of light-duty trucks.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND

Under section 4063(e) of the Internal Revenue Code, the tax on automotive parts or accessories imposed by section 4061(b) does not apply to the sale by the manufacturer, producer, or importer of any article that is to be resold by the purchaser on or in connection with the first retail sale of a light-duty truck, as described in section 4061(a)(2), or that is to be resold by the purchaser to a second purchaser for resale by such second purchaser on or in connection with the first retail sale of a light-duty truck. Section 4063(e) was added by the Revenue Act of 1978, Pub. L. 95-600 (1978), 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 158, effective December 1, 1978.

Section 4221(c) of the Code provides that, in the case of any article sold free of tax under section 4063(e), if the manufacturer in good faith accepts a certification by the purchaser that the article will be used in accordance with the applicable provisions of law, no tax shall thereafter be imposed under chapter 32 of the code in respect of such sale by such manufacturer. Section 4222(a) provides that section 421 shall not apply with respect to the sale of any article unless the manufacturer, the first purchaser, and the second purchaser (if any) are all registered under this section and that registration shall be made at such time, in such manner and form, and subject to such terms and conditions, as the Secretary or the Secretary's delegate may by regulations prescribe.

Under section 4222(d) of the Code, the provisions of section 4222 regarding registration may be extended to, and made applicable with respect to, the exemption under section 4063(e) to the extent provided by regulations prescribed by the Secretary.

SEC. 3. PROCEDURE

.01 No regulations have yet been prescribed that would make the registration provisions of section 4222 of the Code applicable to section 4063(e). Consequently, registration is not yet required in order to make tax-free sales and purchases under section 4063(e). However, manufacturers and purchasers may register to sell or purchase parts or accessories tax free for resale with the first retail sales of light-duty trucks.

.02 A seller and purchaser may register by filing a Form 637 with the District Director of Internal Revenue for the district in which the principal place of business of the applicant is located (or if there is no principal place of business in the United States, with the Director of International Operations, Internal Revenue Service, Washington, D.C. 20225). The person who receives a validated Certificate of Registry (Validated Form 637) is considered to be registered for purposes of selling or purchasing taxable parts or accessories tax free for resale on or in connection with the first retail sales of light-duty trucks. A purchaser who is registered should furnish to the seller, as evidence in support of each tax-free sale, information that the articles are being purchased for the exempt purpose and should include the registration number of the purchaser. The information should be in writing and may be noted on the purchase order or other document furnished by the purchaser to the seller in connection with the sale.

.03 If, however, the seller and the purchaser do not register for purposes of the exemption under section 4063(e), then for each sale of taxable parts or accessories, the purchaser must furnish an exemption certificate to the seller as evidence that the articles are being purchased for resale on or in connection with the first retail sales of light-duty trucks.

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

.01 The purpose of this Revenue Procedure is to state the requirements of the Internal Revenue Service (IRS) and the Social Security Administration (SSA) relating to substitutes for Form W-2, Wage and Tax Statement, Form W-2P, Statement for Recipients of Periodic Annuities, Pensions, Retired Pay or IRA Payments, and Form W-3, Transmittal of Income and Tax Statements (hereinafter referred to as Forms W-2, W-2P, and W-3). The IRS provides two Form W-2 sets, a six part and a four part. The official Form W-2P is provided as a six part set. The official Form W-3 is provided as a two part set.

.02 Rev. Proc. 79-21, 1979-15 I.R.B. 31, was amended and supplemented by Announcement 79-98, 1979-27 I.R.B. 21. The text of Announcement 79-98 was reflected in Rev. Proc. 79-21, when printed in the 1979-1 C.B. at page 541.

SEC. 2. GENERAL RULES FOR FILING FORMS W-2 AND W-2P

.01 Employers and payers (hereafter and where applicable collectively referred to as payers) with computer capability are encouraged to use magnetic media for filing Forms W-2 (Copy A) and W-2P (Copy A) with the SSA. Requests for additional information concerning magnetic media filing should be directed to either the Regional IRS Magnetic Media Coordinator or to the Regional SSA Magnetic Media Coordinator. Since many states and localities accept Forms W-2 and W-2P on magnetic media, savings may be obtained if a similar medium is used for filing with both the SSA and state or local agencies. Magnetic media users can design their own statements to give to employees, pensioners, annuitants, recipients of retired pay, recipients of IRA (Individual Retirement Account) payments, and recipients of disability income (hereafter and where applicable collectively referred to as payees). Statements designed by payers must comply with the requirements of Section 5 below.

.02 The following Technical Information Bulletins (TIB) contain the specifications and procedures for filing Forms W-2 (Copy A) and W-2P (Copy A) data on magnetic media directly with SSA:

1 TIB-4a—Magnetic Tape Reporting, "Submitting Wage and Tax Data to Federal and State Agencies" Form W-2 (Copy A);

2 TIB-4b—Magnetic Tape Reporting, "Submitting Annuity, Pension, Retired Pay or IRA Payments to the Federal Government on Magnetic Tape" Form W-2P (Copy A);

3 TIB-4c—Diskette and Disk Cartridge Reporting, "Submitting Wage and Tax Data to the Federal Government on Diskette and Disk Cartridge" Form W-2 (Copy A); and

4 TIB-3—Magnetic Tape Reporting for State and Local Employing Entities, Form W-2 (Copy A).

Copies of these publications are available at any IRS Service Center; IRS District Office; and SSA, (Reports Preparation Section, P.O. Box 2317, Baltimore, Maryland 21203); or by contacting the Regional SSA Magnetic Media Coordinator.

.03 Payers not using magnetic media must file Copy A of Form W-2 or Copy A of Form W-2P with SSA on either an official form or a privately printed substitute paper form meeting the specifications shown below.

.04 Payers using magnetic media are cautioned to obtain the most recent Technical Information Bulletins and supplements due to possible changes in the specifications and procedures.

Sec. 3. General Rules for Filing Form W-3

.01 Employers and payers (hereafter and where applicable collectively referred to as payers) required to file Forms W-2 or W-2P must transmit Forms W-2 or W-2P with Form W-3.

.02 Form W-3 must be the same width (i.e., 7 inches, 7.5 inches, or 8 inches) as the Forms W-2 or W-2P filed.

.03 Payers using magnetic media must transmit magnetic media Forms W-2 or W-2P with Form 4804, Annual Summary and Transmittal of Income, Tax, and Information Statements on Magnetic Media, or a facsimile thereof. SSA will provide Form 4804 to all approved magnetic media filers.

Sec. 4. Paper Substitutes for Forms W-2 (Copy A), W-2P (Copy A), and W-3

.01 Paper substitutes conforming to the specifications contained in this revenue procedure may be privately printed without the prior approval of the IRS. Proposed substitutes not conforming totally to these specifications must be submitted by letter to the Commissioner of the IRS, Attention: TX:R:I, 1111 Constitution Ave., N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224, for consideration. These requests should contain an explanation of the specific need for the deviations and the number of Forms W-2, W-2P, and/or W-3 to be printed.

.02 Forms W-2, W-2P, and W-3 are subject to annual review and possible change. Payers are cautioned against overstocking supplies of privately printed substitutes.

.03 Copies of the official form for the reporting year may be obtained from any IRS office. The IRS provides only cut sheet sets with no carbon interleaves for Forms W-2, W-2P, and W-3.

.04 Substitute Forms W-2, W-2P, and W-3 transmitted to the SSA should generally contain only data provided to payees and summary data as requested by the form's instructions.

.05 Substitute Forms W-2, W-2P, and W-3 may be redesigned as to the spacing for state and local tax data as long as the vertical and horizontal spacing for all federal payment and data boxes are in compliance with the specifications contained herein.

.06 The sizes for the ballot boxes on all Forms W-2 (Copy A), W-2P (Copy A), and W-3 are as follows:

1 For Forms W-2, ballot boxes must be 8-point boxes;

2 For Forms W-2P, ballot boxes must be 8-point boxes; and

3 For Forms W-2, ballot boxes must be 8-point boxes.

NOTE: More than 50% of the applicable ballot box must be covered by an "X."

Sec. 5. Requirements for Substitute Forms Furnished to Payees (Copies B, C, and 2 of the Official Six Part Set of Forms W-2 and W-2P)

.01 All payers, including those filing Copy A using magnetic media, must furnish payees with at least two statements. The dimensions of these copies may be expanded from the dimensions of the official form to allow space for conveying additional information such as withholding from pay for health insurance, union dues, bonds, charity, etc. This may permit the payer to eliminate other statements or notices which would otherwise be furnished to payees. The maximum allowable dimensions are:

1 depth should be no more than 5 inches; and

2 width no more than 8 inches.

.02 The paper for all copies should be white. The substitute Copy B (or its equal), that payees are instructed to attach to their federal income tax return, must be at least 24-pound paper (basis 17 x 22-1000), while the other copies furnished the payee should be at least 18-pound paper (basis 17 x 22-1000).

.03 Chemical transfer paper is permitted only if the following standards are met:

1 All copies must be clearly legible;

2 All copies must be able to be photocopied; and

3 Fading must not be of such a degree as to preclude legibility and the ability to photocopy.

In general, black chemical transfer inks are preferred; other colors are permitted only if the above standards are met. "Spot carbons" are not permitted.

.04 Interleaved carbon must meet the requirements specified in .03 above.

NOTE: Chemical transfer paper is permitted for additional payee copies.

.05 Substitute forms for payees need contain only the payment boxes and captions that are applicable (in any desired sequence). Other boxes contained on the official form may be omitted, except that in all cases the payee name, address and social security number must be present. Payment boxes and captions that are applicable must be clearly identified, using where possible the same wording as on the official form. If the form contains additional data (e.g., savings bonds withholding, retirement withholding, payroll savings, etc.), there should be a special highlighting of the areas pertaining to (1) Federal income tax withheld, (2) Wages, tips, and other compensation, and (3) Advance EIC payment.

.06 For substitute forms for payees (Copies B, C, and 2 of Forms W-2 and Copies B, C, and 2 of Forms W-2P), the following reqiurements must be met:

1 All copies of Forms W-2 and W-2P must contain the form title. For Form W-2, the title is "Form W-2 Wage and Tax Statement." For Form W-2P, the title is "Form W-2P Statement for Recipients of Periodic Annuities, Pensions, Retired Pay, or IRA Payments." Note: The title "Form W-2" or "Form W-2P" does not appear on Copy 2.

2 If the substitute forms are not labelled as to the disposition of the copies, then written notification must be provided to each payee as specified below:

(a) The first copy of the form must be filed with the employee's (or recipient's) federal tax return.

(b) The second copy of the form is for the employee's (or recipient's) records.

(c) If applicable, the third copy of the form must be filed with the employee's state, city, or local income tax return.

3 If the substitute forms are labelled, then the forms must contain the applicable description:

(a) "Copy B, to be filed with employee's Federal tax return," "Copy C, for employee's records," and the designation "Form W-2 Department of the Treasury—Internal Revenue Service," or

(b) "Copy B, file with recipient's Federal tax return," "Copy C, for recipient's records," and the designation "Form W-2P Department of the Treasury—Internal Revenue Service."

(c) The form number and reference to the Department of the Treasury—Internal Revenue Service should be omitted from other copies provided in the set.

4 Such substitutes are acceptable and payees should be advised that substitute wage and tax statements are acceptable for filing with their federal income tax returns.

Sec. 6. Requirements for Substitute "Privately Printed" Forms W-2 (Copy A), Forms W-2P (Copy A), and Forms W-3 That Payers Submit to the SSA

.01 Payers may file privately printed substitute Form W-2 and W-2P with the SSA (hereafter referred to as a substitute Copy A). Payers may file privately printed substitute Forms W-3 with the SSA (hereafter referred to as a substitute W-3). The substitute form must be an exact replica of the official repro-proof with respect to layout and contents. Chemical transfer paper and "spot carbons" are not permitted for Copy A or for Form W-3 filed with SSA. The dimensions of a substitute form may differ as far as width (see Section 6.05 below) and the printing of the Government Printing Office (GPO) symbol must be deleted (see Section 6.12 below). The specifications and allowable tolerances for the Copy A of substitute Forms W-2 and W-2P are provided in Exhibits A, B, C, E, F, G, and H respectively. The specifications and allowable tolerances for Forms W-3 are provided in Exhibits D, I, and J.

NOTE: Printers of Forms W-2 or W-2P that are wider than 7 inches must provide Forms W-3 that are of the same width as the Forms W-2 or W-2P (i.e., 7½" width Forms W-3 with 7½" width Forms W-2 and W-2P; 8" width Forms W-3 with 8" width Forms W-2 and W-2P).

.02 Color and quality of paper.

1 Paper for Copy A and for Form W-3, (cut sheets and continuous pin-feed forms) to be filed with SSA, as specified by JCP 0-25, dated November 29, 1978, must be: White 100% bleached chemical wood, optical character recognition (OCR) bond produced in accordance with the following specifications:

.03 All printing will be in red OCR dropout ink, as specified below, except for the '22222', '55555', or '33333' at the top of the form and the descriptive information at the bottom (see Exhibits K, L, M and N) which will be printed in nonreflective black ink. All other printing will be in red OCR dropout ink with or comparable to the specifications below. The screened area of any substitute form (Copy A of Forms W-2 and W-2P, and the Form W-3 that is sent to SSA) should generally correspond to that present on the official form. Vertical rules require screening of .05 inches on each side of an inside rule. Horizontal screening should follow the standard format and allow for typewriter spacing. All screened areas are to be printed in the red OCR dropout ink. The numbered captions are printed as a solid with no screened background. (See Exhibits) Printing in red OCR dropout ink other than those listed below must be cleared by contacting: Manager of Media Support, Recognition Equipment, Inc., P.O. Box 222307, Dallas, Texas 75222; telephone number 214-438-8611, extension 1416. The red OCR dropout ink specifications already approved by Recognition Equipment, Inc., are:

Ink Manufacturer	Red Ink Identification No.
Gans Ink Co.	CS-310
General Printing Inks Div. (Sun Chemical Corp.)	SS-40B
Ink Masters, Inc. (Chicago)	B-6056
Inmont Canada, Ltd.	4T-39605
Lorilleux Lefranc	U-17410
Sinclair & Valentine (U.S.)	J-24893
Toyo Ink Company	OMR-57

.04 Typography. Type must be substantially identical in size and shape with corresponding type on the official form. NOTE: The form identifying number must be in OCR A font.

1 On Copy A of Forms W-2 and W-2P and for Form W-3, all the perimeter rules must be 1-point (0.014 inch), while all other rules must be one-half point (0.007 inch).

2 Vertical rules must be parallel to the left edge of the document; horizontal rules parallel to the top edge.

.05 Dimension. Three official Forms W-2, W-2P (Copy A) or one official Form W-3 are contained on a single page which is 7 inches wide (exclusive of any snap-stubs) by 11 inches deep.

The width of privately printed substitute pages must be 7 inches, 7½ inches, or 8 inches exclusive of any left or right snap-stubs, or pin-feed holes, although adherence to the size of the official page is preferred. If a 7 inch form is produced, the image must be an exact copy of the official repro-proof. If the width of the substitute page is increased, the width of specified fields on the substitute page must be increased in accordance with Exhibits E, F, G, H, I, and J. The top margin must be ⅓ inch and be free of all printing; the right margin must be ¼ inch plus or minus .0313 inch and must be free of all printing. For Forms W-2, the combination width of Box 1, "Control number", and the box containing the Form Identifying Number must always be 2.2 inches. For Forms W-2P and W-3, the combination width of Box 1, "Control Number", and the box containing the Form Identifying Number must always be 2.15 inches.

.06 The depth of the individual image on a page (for Forms W-2 and W-2P) must be the same (3⅔ inches) as that of the official repro-proof. The depth of the Form W-3 on a page must be 3.37 inches.

.07 The words "Do Not Cut or Separate Forms on This Page" must be printed in red OCR dropout ink between the three Forms W-2 or W-2P (Copy A) (see Exhibits A, B, and C) and must also be present on 7½-inch- and 8-inch-wide substitute Forms W-2 or W-2P. Perforations are required on all copies (except Copy A) to enable the separation of individual forms.

.08 The words "Please return this entire page" must be printed on all Forms W-3 (see Exhibit D) whether Forms W-3 are 7 inches wide, 7½ inches wide, or 8 inches wide.

.09 Privately printed continuous substitute Forms W-2 and W-2P (Copy A) must be perforated at each 11" (3-on) page depth. No perforations are allowed between the 3⅔" forms on a single copy page of Copy A.

NOTE: Perforations are required between all the other individual copies (Copy 1, B, C, 2, and D) included in the set.

.10 The back of a substitute Copy A must be free of all printing.

.11 Carbonized. "Chemical transfer paper" and "spot carbons" are not permitted for Copy A of Forms W-2 or W-2P or for Form W-3. Interleaved carbon must be of good quality to assure legibility of information on all parts to preclude smudging, and should be black (see Section 5.04).

.12 Printer's symbol. The GPO symbol must not be placed on substitute Copy A of Forms W-2 and W-2P. In the place of the GPO symbol, the employer identification number (EIN) of the forms printer must be printed in the bottom margin on the face of each individual sheet of Copy A. In addition, the EIN of the forms printer must be printed on the face of the Form W-3 which is filed with SSA.

.13 All printers of substitute or privately printed Forms W-2, W-2P, or W-3 are requested to provide 3 copies of each version of each form to SSA, P.O. Box 2317, Baltimore, Maryland 21235. Paper substitutes conforming to the specifications contained in this procedure may be sent to SSA directly. Paper substitutes requiring IRS consideration and approval should be sent to SSA only after IRS approval has been granted.

Sec. 1. Additional Instructions

.01 Arrangement of assembly. Except as provided below, if magnetic media is not used for filing with SSA, the substitute copies of Forms W-2 and W-2P assembly should be arranged in the same order as the official Forms W-2 and W-2P. Copy A first, followed sequentially by perforated sets (Copies 1, B, C, 2, and D). The substitute form to be filed with SSA by the payer must carry the designation Copy A.

1 Copy D for employer or payer. It is not required that privately printed substitute forms contain a copy to be retained by payers although payers must be prepared to verify or duplicate this information if it is requested by the IRS or SSA.

2 Additional copies. Except as provided in the arrangement of the official assemblies, additional copies which may be prepared by payers shall not be placed ahead of the copy "For employee's records," Copy C (Forms W-2) or "For Recipient's Records," Copy C (Form W-2P). Instructions similar to those contained on the back of Copy C of the official form should be provided to each employee (recipient). For Form W-2, the social security (FICA) rates applicable for the current tax year must:

(a) appear either on the front or the back of the copy (Copy C) retained by the employee; or

(b) be communicated to the employee via a separate statement. The IRS recommends that the other text on the back of the official form Copy C be provided to the employee.

.02 All privately printed Forms W-2 and W-2P (Copy A) must have the tax year printed on the bottom face of each, using identical type to that of the official format.

.03 The substitute Copy B (or its equal), which the payee is instructed to attach to his/her federal income tax return, must be at least 24-pound paper (basis 17 x 22-1000), while the other copies furnished the payee should be at least 18-pound paper (basis 17 x 22-1000).

.04 The OCR bond Form W-3 that is filed with SSA must have no printing on the reverse side.

.05 Instructions for Form W-3. Instructions similar to those provided as part of the official form must be provided as part of any substitute Form W-3.

.06 All privately printed Forms W-3 must have the tax year printed on the bottom face of each Form W-3, using identical type to that of the official format.

.07 The copy of the substitute Form W-3 which contains the instructions and is to be retained by the employer should be at least 18-pound paper (basis 17 x 22-1000).

Sec. 8. Instructions for Payers

.01 Only originals or ribbon copies of Copy A of Forms W-2 and W-2P and of Form W-3 may be filed. Carbon copies and photocopies are not acceptable.

.02 The Service requests the cooperation of the payers in typing or machine printing whenever possible and in providing good quality data entries on the forms, i.e., using black ribbon, inserting data in the middle of blocks, well separated from other printing and guidelines, and taking any other measures that will guarantee clear, sharp images. However, payers are not required to acquire equipment solely for the purpose of preparing these forms.

.03 The employer identification number (EIN) may be entered anywhere in Box 2 along with the Payer's name and address on Copy A of Forms W-2 and W-2P. (If this is done, the EIN need not be entered in Box 3 of either Form W-2 or W-2P.) For Forms W-3, the EIN must be entered where prescribed by the Form W-3 Instructions.

.04 The payer's name, address and EIN may be preprinted.

.05 State agencies. The amounts of wages paid and employee contributions withheld under a state-federal agreement, entered into pursuant to Section 218 of the Social Security Act, may be shown in the space on Form W-2 for Federal Insurance Contribution Act Wages and Employee Tax. In such cases, the identification number assigned by the Social Security Administration to the state (prefixed by 69) should be shown in the employer name and address area block on Form W-2. This "69" number may be preprinted. For Form W-3, the identification number must be entered where prescribed by the Form W-3 Instructions.

.06 The optional employer's state number may be preprinted in the employer's (payer's) name, address, and ZIP code box. If this is done, Box 4 of Forms W-2 and W-2P need not be completed, so long as the applicable state taxing authority does not object.

.07 The preparation and filing instructions for Forms W-2 and W-2P are contained in the 1980 Instructions for Forms W-2 and W-2P. The preparation and filing instructions for Form W-3 are contained as part of the 1980 Form W-3 snap set assembly.

.08 To avoid confusion and questions by payees, payers are encouraged to delete the following items from copies of Forms W-2 and W-2P provided to payees:

1 Form identifying number (e.g., 22222, 55555);

2 The words "subtotal" and "void" and their boxes;

3 Any other captions or box number that would not be of any informational use to payees.

.09 Payers are encouraged to use IRS-supplied labels for affixing to all Forms W-3 filed with SSA.

Sec. 9. Reproduction Proofs

Order blanks for reproduction proofs are mailed annually to requesters of record, and on request to other users. Reproduction copies of Forms W-2 (Copy A), W-2P (Copy A), and W-3 (Page 1) consist of two parts each. Part 1 is line art, i.e., type and ink. Part 2 is a black solid which should be photographically screened by the user to allow a 10%-20% dot pattern when printed in red OCR dropout ink. In some cases where the production method requires the use of something other than a standard dot pattern, the printed value of part 2 must still be 10%-20%. Printers and others wishing to obtain reproduction proofs may send their requests to the Commissioner of IRS, Attention: RM:FM:P, 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224. A charge of $1 per page will be made for each reproduction proof regardless of page size. Invoices will be mailed after orders have been filled.

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on Subpart A, Tax Conventions and related Treasury Decisions and Revenue Rulings; Subpart B, Legislation and related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of Revenue Rulings, Revenue Procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical Indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

Rev. Rul. 80-91 [1]

ISSUE

Will an authority that is a political subdivision of a state comply with the arbitrage yield restrictions of section 103(c) of the Internal Revenue Code with respect to an issue of its obligations in the situation described below?

FACTS

Authority P is a political subdivision of the state of O that was created by O to construct, finance and operate college dormitories in O. On January 2, 1974, P issued bonds that were used to construct dormitories.

On January 7, 1976, P issued advance refunding bonds to refund the 1974 bonds. Proceeds of the refunding bonds were to be held in escrow until 1984. The yield on the refunding bonds was 7 percent, as computed under section 1.103-13(c) of the proposed Income Tax Regulations published in the Federal Register of May 3, 1973 (38 F.R. 10944). A major portion of the proceeds of the refunding bonds were invested in United States Treasury obligations—State and Local Government Series (SLGS), at a restricted yield that was not materially higher than the yield on the advance refunding bonds. Amounts representing a minor portion of the proceeds of the advance refunding bonds were invested at an unrestricted yield of 9 percent. At the time of issuance P executed a certification in accordance with the provisions of section 1.103-13(a)(2)(ii) of the proposed regulations published in the Federal Register of May 3, 1973 (38 F.R. 10944).

On January 2, 1980, P redeemed a portion of the SLGS constituting the major portion of the escrow investment and redeemed all of the SLGS constituting the minor portion of the escrow investment and reinvested them in a new series of SLGS. P allocated 52 percent of the reinvested SLGS to the major portion and 48 percent to the minor portion. The reason P entered into this escrow restructuring transaction was to invest the minor portion at a rate higher than 9 percent. P paid $225,000 in "costs" to financial advisors and counsel in connection with the escrow restructuring. A reasonable fee for such services was $100,000.

Although P entered into the transaction for the purpose of increasing the yield on its minor portion investments, P allocated 47 percent of the "costs" of the transaction to the major portion investments, which are subject to restrictions on yield, and 53 percent to the minor portion investments, which are not subject to restrictions on yield. Thus, P took into account 47 percent of its "costs" for the escrow restructuring transaction ($105,750) in computing the yield on the major portion of the SLGS subject to yield restrictions.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 103(a)(1) of the Code provides that gross income does not include interest on the obligations of a state or a political subdivision of a state.

Section 103(c)(1) of the Code provides that, with certain minor exceptions, the interest on any arbitrage bond will not be excludable from gross income.

Section 103(c)(2) of the Code provides that the term "arbitrage bond" means any obligation that is issued as part of an issue all or a major portion (more than 15 percent) of the proceeds of which are reasonably expected to be used directly or indirectly (A) to acquire securities or obligations that may be reasonably expected at the time of issuance of such issue, to produce a yield over the term of the issue that is materially higher than the yield on obligations of such issue, or (B) to replace funds that were used directly or indirectly to acquire securities or obligations described in section 103(c)(2)(A).

T.D. 7627 (44 F.R. 32657), 1979-28 I.R.B. 5, which adopted the final arbitrage bond regulations, provides that, for governmental obligations issued on or before the effective date of the final regulations (May 31, 1979), the proposed income tax regulations, as amended, under section 103(c) of the Code shall apply.

Section 1.103-13(a)(2)(i) of the proposed regulations published in the Federal Register of May 3, 1973 (38 F.R. 10944), applicable to the advance refunding bonds, provides, in part, that under section 103(c)(2) of the Code the determination whether an obligation is an arbitrage bond depends upon the issuer's reasonable expectations, as of the date of issue, regarding the amount and use of the proceeds of the issue. The reasonable expectations regarding the amount and use of the proceeds of a governmental obligation may be established by the certification described in section 1.103-13(a)(2)(ii).

[1] Also released as News Release IR-80-32, dated March 19, 1980.

Example (1) of section 1.103-13(a)(2)(v) of the final regulations illustrates the effect of a no-arbitrage certification. In this example, city A issues bonds to construct a water treatment facility and in the certification A includes a statement that 85 percent of the receipts from the sale of the bonds will be used for construction costs within three years of the date of issue of the bonds. Subsequently, construction of the water treatment facility was determined by the Environmental Protection Agency to have certain adverse effects. As a result, 85 percent of the receipts from the sale of the bonds will not be expended for project costs within three years of the date of issue of the bonds. The example concludes that the certification is conclusive as to the issuer's reasonable expectations that 85 percent of the receipts will be expended for construction costs within three years of the date of issue of the bonds.

Section 1.103-13(c)(1) of the proposed regulations published in the Federal Register of May 3, 1973 (38 F.R. 10944), provides that an amount equal to the sum of the administrative costs of issuing, carrying, and repaying an issue of governmental obligations shall be treated as a discount on the selling price of such issue. An amount equal to the sum of the administrative costs to be incurred in purchasing, carrying, and selling or redeeming a class of acquired obligations shall be treated as a premium on the purchase price of such acquired obligations.

Section 1.103-13(b)(5) of the proposed regulations published in the Federal Register of December 3, 1975 (40 F.R. 56448), applicable to the advance refunding bonds, provides, in the case of a refunding issue, that prior to the date on which the last obligation of the prior issue is discharged, the yield produced by acquired obligations allocated to the proceeds (other than transferred proceeds) of the refunding issue is materially higher than the yield produced by such issue if the yield of such acquired obligations exceeds the yield of such issue.

P allocated 47 percent of the "costs" of the escrow restructuring to the 52 percent of the SLGS that were reinvested as a major portion. In addition, P allocated 53 percent of the "costs" of the escrow restructuring to the 48 percent of the SLGS that were reinvested as a minor portion. Because the underlying motive and real purpose of the escrow restructuring was to increase the yield on the securities in the minor portion, the allocation of 47 percent of the administrative costs to the major portion is unreasonable. As a result, the excessive amounts may not be taken into account in computing the yield on the major portion investments. Thus, the yield on the SLGS allocated to the major portion exceeds 7 percent.

The result would be the same even if it were reasonable to allocate 47 percent of the administrative costs of the escrow restructuring to the major portion because the "costs" paid by P in excess of reasonable administrative costs may not be taken into account in computing the yield on the major portion investments.

The "reasonable expectations" test contained in section 103(c) of the Code and the certification procedure contained in section 1.103-13(a)(2) of the proposed and the final regulations both provide a high degree of certainty by generally assuring that the bonds will not be arbitrage bonds in the event of occurrences that are beyond the control of the issuer. Compare example (1) of section 1.103-13(a)(2)(v) of the final regulations which concerns the reasonable expectations of an issuer with respect to a matter it did not reasonably expect to occur and was beyond its control. However, neither the reasonable expectations test nor the certification procedure provides protection in this particular case where the issuer has taken deliberate and intentional actions to produce arbitrage.

HOLDING

P has failed to comply with the arbitrage yield restrictions of section 1.103-13(b)(5) of the proposed regulations. The no-arbitrage certification made by P will not prevent the advance refunding bonds from being arbitrage bonds. Therefore, the advance refunding bonds issued by P are arbitrage bonds within the meaning of section 103(c)(2) of the Code and the interest on the bonds is not excludable from the gross income of the bondholders under section 103(a)(1).

Rev. Rul. 80-92 [1]

ISSUE

Will an authority that is a political subdivision of a state comply with the arbitrage yield restrictions of section 103(c) of the Internal Revenue Code with respect to an issue of its obligations in the situation described below?

FACTS

Authority Q is a school district that is a political subdivision of the state of R. On January 2, 1976, Q issued its advance refunding bonds to refund construction bonds that were issued by Q in 1975. The refunding bonds have a yield of 8 percent.

A major portion of the proceeds of the advance refunding bonds were immediately invested in United States Treasury obligations—State and Local Government Series (SLGS) at a restricted yield of 8 percent. Amounts representing a minor portion of the proceeds of the advance refunding bonds were immediately invested in SLGS at an unrestricted yield of 9 percent. On January 2, 1980, Q redeemed the SLGS that it had purchased in 1976. Q used the proceeds of the redemption to purchase United States Treasury bonds with an interest rate of 8 percent from S, an unrelated third person.

At par value the Treasury bonds have a yield of 8 percent. However, Q acquired the Treasury bonds at a time when their fair market value was below par. At fair market value, the yield on the Treasury bonds is 13 percent. Although Q knew the fair market value of the bonds, Q purchased a portion of the Treasury bonds at par. Q allocated the purchases at par to the major portion and computed the yield on those Treasury bonds by taking into account as the purchase price the par value of the Treasury bonds.

Q allocated all of the costs of the purchase of the Treasury bonds to the minor portion of the escrow for the advance refunding bonds. At the time of the issuance of the advance refunding bonds Q executed a no-arbitrage certification in accordance with the provisions of section 1.103-13(a)(2)(ii) of the proposed Income Tax Regulations published in the Federal Register of May 3, 1973 (38 F.R. 10944).

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 103(a)(1) of the Code provides that gross income does not include interest on the obligations of a state or a political subdivision of a state.

Section 103(c)(1) of the Code provides that, with certain minor exceptions, the interest on any arbitrage bond will not be excludable from gross income.

Section 103(c)(2) of the Code provides that the term "arbitrage bond" means any obligation that is issued as part of an issue all or a major portion (more than 15 percent) of the proceeds of which are reasonably expected to be used directly or indirectly (A) to acquire securities or obligations that may be reasonably expected at the time of issuance of such issue, to produce a yield over the term of the issue that is materially higher than the yield on obligations of such issue, or (B) to replace funds that were used directly or indirectly to acquire securities or obligations described in section 103(c)(2)(A).

Section 1012 of the Code provides that the basis of property is the cost.

T.D. 7627 (44 F.R. 32657), 1979-28 I.R.B. 5, which adopted the final arbitrage bond regulations, provides that, for governmental obligations issued on or before the effective date of the final regulations (May 31, 1979), the proposed income tax regulations, as amended, under section 103(c) of the Code shall apply.

Section 1.103-13(a)(2)(i) of the proposed regulations published in the Federal Register of May 3, 1973 (38 F.R. 10944), applicable to the advance refunding bonds, provides, in part, that under section 103(c)(2) of the Code the determination whether an obligation is an arbitrage bond depends upon the issuer's reasonable expectations, as of the date of issue, regarding the amount and use of the proceeds of the issue. The reasonable expectations regarding the amount and use of the proceeds of a governmental obligation may be established by the certification described in section 1.103-13(a)(2)(ii).

Example (1) of section 1.103-13(a)(2)(v) of the final regulations illustrates the effect of a no-arbitrage certification. In this example, city A issues bonds to construct a water treatment facility and in the certification A includes a statement that 85 percent of the receipts from the sale of the bonds will be used for construction costs within three years of the date of issue of the bonds. Subsequently, construction of the water treatment facility was determined by the Environmental Protection Agency to have certain adverse effects. As a result, 85 percent of the receipts from the sale of the bonds will not be expended for project costs within three years of the date of issue of the bonds. The example concludes that the certification is conclusive as to the issuer's reasonable expectations that 85 percent of the receipts will be expended for construction costs within three years of the date of issue of the bonds.

Section 1.103-13(b)(5) of the proposed regulations published in the Federal Register of December 3, 1975 (40 F.R. 56448), applicable to the advance refunding bonds, provides, in the case of a refunding issue, that prior to the date on which the last obligation of the prior issue is discharged, the yield produced by acquired obligations allocated to the proceeds (other than transferred proceeds) of the refunding issue is materially higher than the yield produced by such issue if the yield of such acquired obligations exceeds the yield of such issue.

The question in cases concerning the purchase of property at above fair market value is whether the price paid in excess of the market value is for a purpose other than the acquisition of the property. In such cases it is incumbent upon the taxpayer to show that the amount paid is for no purpose other than the acquisition of the property. See Majestic Securities Corp. v. Commissioner, 42 B.T.A. 698 (1940), aff'd, 120 F.2d 12 (8th Cir. 1941) and New Hampshire Fire Insurance Co. v. Commissioner, 2 T.C. 708 (1943).

In this case, Q knowingly paid in excess of fair market value for part of the Treasury bonds. Therefore, Q must show that such excess was paid only for the acquisition of the Treasury bonds.

If Q paid fair market value for the Treasury bonds, the yield on the Treasury bonds would have exceeded the yield on the issue of Q's obligations by more than the amount permitted by section 1.103-13(b)(5) of the proposed regulations. Thus, the amounts that Q paid to S in excess of the fair market value of the Treasury bonds were amounts paid in an attempt to reduce yield on the acquired obligations and are not part of the purchase price of the obligations.

Therefore, in this case, the cost to Q of the Treasury bonds under section 1012 of the Code is their fair market value and not the stated cost of par value. The fact that the purchase price of the Treasury bonds to Q is the fair market value means that the yield on the Treasury bonds exceeds 8 percent.

The "reasonable expectations" test contained in section 103(c) of the Code and the certification procedure contained in section 1.103-13(a)(2) of the proposed and the final regulations both provide a high degree of certainty by generally assuring that the bonds will not be arbitrage bonds in the event of occurrences that are beyond the control of the issuer. Compare example (1) of section 1.103-13 (a) (2) (v) of the final regulations which concerns the reasonable expectations of an issuer with respect to a matter it did not reasonably expect to occur and was beyond its control. However, neither the reasonable expectations test nor the certification procedure provides protection in this particular case where the issuer has taken deliberate and intentional actions to produce arbitrage.

HOLDING

Q has failed to comply with the arbitrage yield restrictions of section 1.103-13(b) (5) of the proposed regulations. The no-arbitrage certification made by Q will not prevent the advance refunding bonds from being arbitrage bonds. Thus, the advance refunding bonds issued by Q are arbitrage bonds within the meaning of section 103(c) (2) of the Code and the interest on the bonds is not excludable from the gross income of the bondholders under section 103(a) (1).

Rev. Rul. 80-93

ISSUE

Is a depreciation deduction allowable for costs paid to a public utility company to assist in construction of an electrical distribution system and for land preparation costs that are incurred in connection with the development of a mobile home park?

FACTS

The taxpayer owns and operates a mobile home park in which it rents sites to tenants on a monthly basis. The taxpayer constructed asphalt roadways, concrete sidewalks, laundry facilities, storm sewers, and assets at each individual site that include a concrete driveway, patio, and mobile home supports.

The major part of the taxpayer's land preparation costs was incurred in the clearing, grubbing, cutting, filling, and rough grading necessary to bring the land to a suitable grade. Additional land preparation costs were incurred in the digging and the rough and finish grading necessary to construction of the roadways, sidewalks, driveways, patios, and mobile home supports. Land preparation costs do not include the cost of construction of the depreciable roadways, sidewalks, driveways, patios, and mobile home supports. Replacement of the roadways, sidewalks, driveways, patios and mobile home supports will not require additional digging or grading.

Other land preparation costs were incurred in the excavation and backfilling necessary to construction of the laundry facilities and the storm sewer system. Replacement of the underground components of these facilities owned by the taxpayer will require excavation and backfilling.

At the taxpayer's request, a public utility company installed an underground electrical distribution system instead of a less expensive system aboveground. The taxpayer contracted to pay the additional cost and to assist the utility company in the cost of a natural gas distribution system. The utility company will retain full ownership, provide all necessary maintenance, and replace the systems as necessary.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 167(a) of the Internal Revenue Code provides that there shall be allowed as a depreciation deduction a reasonable allowance for the exhaustion, wear and tear, and obsolescence of property used in the trade or business.

Section 1.167(a)-2 of the Income Tax Regulations provides that the depreciation allowance applies only to that part of tangible property subject to wear and tear, to decay or decline from natural causes, to exhaustion, and to obsolescence, but not to land apart from the improvements or physical development added to it.

Section 263(a) (1) of the Code provides that no deduction shall be allowed for any amount paid out for permanent improvements or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate.

Costs for land preparation such as site clearing, grubbing, cutting, filling, and rough grading are one time only expenditures. Such work will not be affected by replacement of the components of the mobile home park. Similarly, the digging and rough and finish grading associated with construction of the roadways, sidewalks, and the assets at the individual home sites have a useful life that extends beyond the life of those assets since the work will not have to be repeated when the assets are replaced. On the other hand, the excavation and backfilling required for installation of the laundry facilities and the storm sewer system are so closely associated with those assets that replacement of the assets will require the physical destruction of that land preparation. See Rev. Rul. 74-265, 1974-1 C.B. 56, and Rev. Rul. 72-96, 1972-1 C.B. 67.

The amounts paid to the utility company for the installation of the underground electrical distribution system and the natural gas distribution system are expenditures that increase the value of the land. They are nonrecurring because the utility company will repair and replace the systems as necessary.

HOLDING

Land preparation costs, such as those for necessary clearing, grubbing, cutting, filling, and rough and finish grading (generally or with respect to individual assets), that will be unaffected by replacement of the components of the mobile home park and therefore will not be replaced contemporaneously therewith are nonrecurring general land improvement costs. These one time land preparation costs are considered inextricably associated with the land and, as such, are to be added to the taxpayer's cost basis in the land and are not depreciable.

Those land preparation costs that are so closely associated with assets such as the storm sewers and laundry facilities that they will be retired, abandoned, or replaced contemporaneously with those assets are to be capitalized and depreciated over the estimated useful lives of the assets with which they are associated.

The amounts paid to the utility for the underground electrical system and the gas distribution system are nonrecurring costs for betterments that increase the value of the land. As such, these amounts are capital expenditures within the meaning of section 263(a) of the Code that are includible in the taxpayer's cost basis of the land and are not depreciable.

ISSUE

Is a deduction or a credit allowable under section 164(a) or section 901(b) of the Internal Revenue Code for social security taxes paid or accrued to the Federal Republic of Germany on or after December 1, 1979?

FACTS AND LAW

On December 1, 1979, pursuant to section 233(a) of the Social Security Act, 42 U.S.C. section 433 (1979), the United States entered into an agreement with the Federal Republic of Germany establishing a totalization arrangement between the United States social security system and the German social security system for the purpose of establishing an individual's entitlement to and the amount of benefits on the basis of such individual's period of coverage under both systems.

Section 317(b)(4) of the Social Security Amendments of 1977, Pub. L. 95-216, 1978-1 C.B. 462, 467, provides that, notwithstanding any other provision of law, social security taxes paid by any individual to a foreign country shall not be deductible by, or creditable against the income tax of, any such individual where an agreement pursuant to section 233 of the Social Security Act has been entered into between such foreign country and the United States.

HOLDING

Procedure for election to treat an interest in certain joint tenancies as a qualified joint interest

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Temporary regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides temporary regulations for a husband and wife who elect to treat their interest in certain jointly held property as a "qualified joint interest" for Federal estate tax purposes. The regulations reflect changes made in the applicable tax law by the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1] and provide instructions on the manner and effect of making the election.

DATE: The regulations apply to certain property held jointly on December 31, 1976.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

This document contains temporary regulations providing instructions for taxpayers who elect to treat as a qualified joint interest their interest in property placed in joint tenancy before January 1, 1977. The election is available under section 2040(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as added by section 702(k) of the Revenue Act of 1978 (Pub. L. 95-600, 92 Stat. 2932).

The temporary regulations provided by this document will remain in effect through December 31, 1981.

PROVISIONS OF THE REGULATIONS

In general, on the death of a joint tenant, the entire value of property owned in joint tenancy is included in the decedent's gross estate except for the portion of the value of the property attributable to the consideration furnished by the survivor. Section 2040(b) of the Code, added by the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1], provides that in the case of a "qualified joint interest" created after December 31, 1976, only one half of the value of the property will be included in the gross estate of the first joint tenant to die.

Under section 2040(d) of the Code, added by the Revenue Act of 1978, a husband and wife may elect to treat an interest in certain property placed in joint tenancy before January 1, 1977 as a "qualified joint interest" without going through a formal severance and re-creation of the joint tenancy. This election must be made for a calendar quarter ending on or before December 31, 1979.

The regulation provides that the spouse who furnished more than one-half of the consideration for the property must make the election by including the amount of the gift in a timely filed gift tax return and by paying any gift tax due as a result. The regulation provides deadlines for filing the return as well as a formula for computing the amount of the gift.

The regulation also provides that in the case of real property an election under section 2040 will have the same effect as a post-1976 election under section 2515, and that in the case of personal property, an election under section 2040 will have the same effect as the creation of a post-1976 joint interest under section 2515A. Therefore, once the election is made to treat an interest in property as a qualified joint interest, additions to the value of the property made by one spouse must be included in any gift tax returns required to be filed for any taxable period in which total gifts to the donee spouse exceed the $3,000 annual exclusion. For these purposes, additions in value include mortgage payments on indebtedness secured by the property as well as improvements made to the property.

WAIVER OF CERTAIN PROCEDURAL REQUIREMENTS OF TREASURY DIRECTIVE

A determination has been made by Jerome Kurtz, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, that there is an immediate need for regulations under section 2040(d) because the election thereunder will not be available after the due date (including extensions thereof) for Federal gift tax returns for the last quarter of 1979. Compliance with the procedural requirements of paragraphs 8 through 14 of the Treasury directive relating to improved regulations (43 FR 52120) would therefore be impractical and, accordingly, the requirements have been waived.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of this regulation was Stephen J. Small of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both in matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations:

Accordingly, the following temporary regulations are adopted and inserted in new Part 23, Temporary Estate Tax Regulations under the Revenue Act of 1978 (26 CFR Part 23):

§ 23.1 Election and eligibility to treat interests in property held jointly on December 31, 1976, as qualified joint interests.

(a) Election as a qualified joint interest—(1) In general. If a taxpayer has elected to have an interest in property held jointly by a husband and wife on December 31, 1976, treated as a "qualified joint interest," the effect, from the deemed date of such election, shall be

(i) in the case of real property, as if an election under section 2515, as applicable to post-1976 transfers, had been made, and

(ii) in the case of personal property, as if a post-1976 joint interest described in section 2515A had been created.

For estate tax purposes, one-half of the value of the property is includible in the estate of the first joint tenant to die; and, for gift tax purposes, any subsequent additions to the value of a joint tenancy in real property must be treated as transfers at the time the additions occur.

(2) Eligibility. Any husband and wife who before January 1, 1977, created an interest in property as joint tenants with right of survivorship or as tenants by the entirety and who continue to hold such interest may elect to treat their interest as a qualified joint interest if:

(i) Such joint interest was created by either spouse, or both (for rules involving the creation of a joint tenancy by husband and wife, see § 25.2515-1 (b)) and

(ii) In the case of a joint tenancy with right of survivorship, only the husband and the wife are joint tenants.

An interest in property received as an into vivos or testamentary gift by husband and wife as joint tenants or tenants by the entirety is not an interest created by either spouse. See paragraph (c)(1)(ii) of § 25.2515-1.

(3) Time and manner of making election.

In order to elect under this section, the spouse who furnished more than one-half of the consideration for the property must include the amount of the gift in a timely filed Federal gift tax return for any calendar quarter in 1977, 1978 or 1979, pay any gift tax due as a result, and attach to the gift tax return a statement of consent. The statement of consent must be signed by the donee spouse and must indicate that the donee spouse consents to the election to treat the interest as a qualified joint interest as of the date of the deemed making of the gift. The election and gift are deemed made on the last day of the calendar quarter for which the return is filed. See section 6075(b) for the time for filing the gift tax return and section 6081 for extensions of time for filing the return. The return required by this section must be filed even though the amount involved does not exceed the exclusion provided by section 2503(b). No election may be made under this section after the death of the donor.

(b) Determination of amount of gift—(1) Amount of gift. Except as provided in subparagraph (5), the amount of any gift is one-half of the amount which bears the same ratio to the excess of the value of the property on the date of the deemed making of the gift over the value of such property on the date of the creation of the joint interest, as

(i) the excess of the consideration furnished by the donor over the consideration furnished by the donor's spouse, bears to

(ii) the total consideration furnished by both spouses. Under no circumstances can the amount of the gift be less than zero.

(2) Value of the property. For purposes of subparagraph (1), the value of the property on the date of the creation of the interest shall be the fair market value of the property on that date minus the amount of any original acquisition indebtedness. The value of the property on the date of the deemed making of the gift shall be the fair market value of the property on that date reduced by any outstanding indebtedness that is secured by the property.

(3) Consideration furnished. For purposes of subparagraph (1), the consideration furnished by each spouse shall be the total of the consideration furnished by that spouse at or prior to the time of the creation of the interest plus any subsequent payments by that spouse of mortgage principal on the original acquisition indebtedness. See paragraph (c)(1) of § 25.2515-1 for a discussion of what constitutes consideration and the value thereof. The phrase "original acquisition indebtedness" means indebtedness incurred (and secured by the property) upon the original acquisition of the property by either or both spouses and any refinancing of the original acquisition indebtedness to the extent of the unamortized balance of such original acquisition indebtedness. Repayments of mortgage principal on any such subsequent indebtedness shall be deemed to be reductions of the original acquisition indebtedness until the total principal amount of the original acquisiton indebtedness has been paid. Payments by either spouse that are a further reduction of any such subsequent indebtedness or are a reduction of other indebtedness secured by the property shall not be included as consideration furnished under this section.

(4) Subsequent payments. In order to elect under this section, a taxpayer must be able to substantiate the amount and origin of the consideration furnished at the time of the creation of the interest. Any subsequent payments of mortgage principal the amount and origin of which cannot be substantiated will be deemed to be furnished in the same proportion as the consideration furnished at the time of the creation of the interest. Where a payment reducing the acquisition indebtedness is attributable to the income from the property the payment shall be deemed to have been made by each spouse in the same proportion that each spouse's prior consideration bears to the total consideration furnished to that time.

(5) Creation that was not treated as a gift. For purposes of subparagraph (2), the value of the property on the date of the creation of the joint interest shall be treated as zero, if—

(i) in the case of real property, the creation was not treated as a gift under section 2515, or

(ii) in the case of personal property, the transfer was required to be included on a gift tax return when created but was not so included, and the period of limitations on assessment under section 6501 has expired with respect to such gift.

(c) Substantial improvements—(1) In general. A substantial improvement of any property shall, for purposes of this section, be treated as the creation of a separate joint interest. An election under this section to treat an interest in underlying property as a qualified joint interest shall operate to treat any substantial improvement on such property made prior to January 1, 1977, as a separate qualified joint interest. An improvement shall be deemed to be a substantial improvement if—

(i) the cost of the improvement exceeded $10,000, or

(ii) the initial value of the improvement increased the fair market value of the property immediately before the improvement by more than 10 percent.

(2) Value of the improvement. The initial value of a substantial improvement shall be equal to the fair market value of the property immediately after the improvement less the fair market value of the property immediately before the improvement. In the absence of appraisals immediately before and immediately after the improvement, the cost of the improvement will be acceptable as proof of its initial value. For purposes of computing the amount of gift of both the substantial improvement and the original property, the ratio represented by the initial value of the substantial improvement over the fair market value of the property immediately after the improvement shall remain constant. (For an illustration of a substantial improvement for which consideration was furnished as a result of refinancing the original property, see example 6 of this section.)

(3) Absence of consideration. If the creation of the joint interest was not treated as a gift under section 2515 and if all of the consideration for a substantial improvement is furnished by increasing the amount of indebtedness secured by the property, such consideration shall be deemed to be furnished in the same proportion as the total consideration furnished by both spouses for the property to that time as determined under § 23.1(b).

(d) Severance and re-creation of joint interest. If, before January 1, 1977, a husband and wife had a joint interest in property with right of survivorship, and after December 31, 1976, (but prior to January 1, 1980) they sever and re-create the joint interest in such property (or in property the basis of which in whole or in part reflects the basis of such property), treatment as a qualified joint interest will be available only if the requirements of paragraphs (a) and (b) are met. If a timely gift tax return was filed as a result of such severance and re-creation but the amount of the gift was improperly computed or the required consent was not attached, treatment of the interest as a qualified joint interest from the date of the original filing will be permitted, if the gift tax return is corrected by the donor so that it is in compliance with the requirements of this section and any resulting deficiency (with interest) is paid.

(e) Examples. This section may be illustrated by the following examples.

Example 1. In 1962, Mr. A paid $20,000, the full amount of the down payment for a house having a fair market value of $65,000. Mr. and Mrs. A took title as joint tenants with right of survivorship and assumed a mortgage for $45,000. No gift tax return was filed. Over the years, Mr. A made all the mortgage payments with his own funds. Principal payments totaled $41,000. Mr. and Mrs. A would like to have their interest in the house treated as a qualified joint interest for Federal estate tax purposes. On December 31, 1979, the fair market value of the house is $117,000, and the balance due on the mortgage is $4,000.

Mr. and Mrs. A make the election by timely filing a gift tax return on April 15, 1980, along with the statement of consent. The amount of the gift is computed as follows:

The amount of the gift is ½ of x in the formula

where V_1 is the value of the property on the date of the deemed making of the gift; V_2 is the value of the property on the date of the creation of the interest (which is deemed to be zero if the creation of the joint interest was not treated as a gift at that time); D.C. is the consideration furnished by the donor; and S.C. is the consideration by the donor's spouse.

Here, the value of the property on the date of the creation of the interest, for purposes of this section, is 0 and the value of the property at the date of the gift is $113,000 ($117,000 − $4,000). Accordingly, the formula becomes

$$\frac{x}{($117{,}000 - $4{,}000) - 0} = \frac{[$20{,}000 + $41{,}000] - 0}{[$20{,}000 + $41{,}000] + 0}$$

$$\text{gift} = $\ 56{,}500$$

Example 2. Assume the same facts as in example 1, except that Mr. A contributed $15,000 of the down payment and Mrs. A contributed $5,000. The amount of the gift is now $47,238, computed in the following manner:

$$\frac{x}{($117{,}000 - $4{,}000) - 0} = \frac{[$15{,}000 + $41{,}000] - $5{,}000}{[$15{,}000 + $41{,}000] + $5{,}000}$$

$$\frac{x}{$113{,}000} = \frac{$51{,}000}{$61{,}000}$$

$$\text{gift} = $47{,}238$$

Example 3. Assume the same facts as in example 1, except that from 1962 to 1970 Mr. A made all the mortgage payments ($10,000) with his own funds and from 1970 through 1979 Mrs. A contributed half of each mortgage payment ($31,000 ÷ 2 = $15,500). Mr. A's contribution to the mortgage, then, has been $25,500, and Mrs. A's contribution has been $15,500.

The amount of the gift is now $27,787, computed in the following manner:

$$\frac{x}{($117{,}000 - $4{,}000) - 0} = \frac{[$20{,}000 + $25{,}500] - $15{,}500}{[$20{,}000 + $25{,}000] + $15{,}500}$$

$$\frac{x}{$113{,}000} = \frac{$30{,}000}{$61{,}000}$$

$$x = $55{,}574$$

Example 4. Assume the same facts as in example 1, except that in 1965, when the house was worth $70,000, Mr. A had a garage built on the property for $6,000. Mr. A paid the entire $6,000 and filed a gift tax return for the gift he made at that time. Since the garage neither cost $10,000 nor increased the value of the property immediately before the improvement by more than 10 percent, the garage is not considered to be a substantial improvement.

For purposes of § 23.1(b), even though a gift tax return was filed in 1965 with respect to the $6,000, the creation of the interest in 1962 was not treated as a gift and the value of the property on that date (V_2 in the formula) is treated as zero.

Example 5. In 1968, Mr. and Mrs. B purchased a farm for $50,000, and took title jointly. The farm included farmland, a home, and a barn. Mr. B made the full $10,000 down payment. In 1974, when the property was worth $100,000 and the balance on the mortgage was $30,000, Mr. B arranged to refinance his mortgage, increasing it to $80,000. He invested the additional $50,000 he received in securities. Mr. B has made all the principal payments on the mortgage since the purchase (a total of $18,000). At no time has Mr. B filed a gift tax return.

On December 31, 1979, the fair market value of the entire property is $150,000 and the balance on the new mortgage is $72,000. Mr. and Mrs. B elect at that time to have their interest in the property treated as a qualified joint interest. The amount of the gift is computed as follows:

$$\frac{x}{($150{,}000 - $72{,}000) - 0} = \frac{[$10{,}000 + $18{,}000] - 0}{[$10{,}000 + $18{,}000] + 0}$$

$$\frac{x}{$78{,}000} = \frac{$28{,}000}{$28{,}000}$$

$$\text{gift} = $39{,}000$$

Example 6. Assume the same facts as in example 4, except that with the additional $50,000 he received, Mr. B added another barn on his property costing $20,000 and invested the balance in securities. Immediately after the construction of the barn, the fair market value of the entire property was $120,000, and today the fair market value of the entire property is $180,000.

The second barn was a substantial improvement because it increased the fair market value of the property immediately before the improvement by 20 percent. Under paragraph (c)(2) of this section the fair market value of the barn today is deemed to be $30,000 (1/6 × $180,000). Further, under paragraph (c)(3) of this section, when all the consideration for the substantial improvement is attributable to increasing the amount of the indebtedness secured by the property, the consideration for the substantial improvement is deemed to be furnished in the same proportion as the total consideration furnished by both spouses for the property to that time, as determined under § 23.1(b).

To compute the amount of each gift it is necessary to separate the original property from the substantial improvement for purposes of determining the amount of the consideration furnished for each. Mr. A furnished $10,000 at the time of the creation of the joint interest and $10,000 (in mortgage payments) between 1968 and 1974. After 1974, since the substantial improvement represented 1/6 of the fair market value of the entire property, 5/6 of the mortgage payments from 1974 to 1978 are attributable to the underlying property (5/6 of $8,000) and 1/6 of the mortgage payments are attributable to the substantial improvement (1/6 of $8,000). The same allocation is necessary for the indebtedness. If Mrs. A had made any of the mortgage payments at any time, appropriate adjustments would have to be made. Under these facts, for the original property the formula becomes

$$\frac{x}{[5/6\ ($180{,}000) - 5/6\ ($72{,}000)] - 0} = \frac{[$10{,}000 + $10{,}000 + 5/6\ ($8{,}000)] - 0}{[$10{,}000 + $10{,}000 + 5/6\ ($8{,}000)] + 0}$$

$$\frac{x}{$90{,}000} = \frac{$26{,}667}{$26{,}667}$$

$$\text{gift} = $45{,}000$$

For the second barn, the formula becomes

$$\frac{x}{[1/6\ ($180{,}000) - 1/6\ ($72{,}000)] - 0} = \frac{[$20{,}000 + 1/6\ ($8{,}000)] - 0}{[$20{,}000 + 1/6\ ($8{,}000)] + 0}$$

$$\frac{x}{$18{,}000} = \frac{$21{,}334}{$21{,}334}$$

$$\text{gift} = $9{,}000$$

Example 7. Mr. and Mrs. C purchased a home for $150,000 in 1970, with Mr. C contributing all the consideration and Mr. and Mrs. C taking title as joint tenants. In 1977, Mr. and Mrs. C severed the joint tenancy and re-created it in order to treat the property as a qualified joint interest under section 2040(b) of the Code. No gift tax return was filed at either time. Under paragraph (d) above, treatment as a qualified joint interest is available only if the requirements of paragraphs (a) and (b) are met. If Mr. and Mrs. C still want to treat their interest in the property as a qualified joint interest, he must timely file a gift tax return and pay any tax due based on the value of the property on the last day of the reporting period in which the election is made.

Example 8. Assume the same facts as in example 7, except that Mr. C filed a gift tax return in 1977. Under paragraph (d) above, for certain joint interests in property created after December 31, 1976, and prior to January 1, 1980, treatment as a qualified joint interest is available only if the requirements of paragraphs (a) and (b) are met. If, for example, Mr. C failed to compute the amount of the gift in accordance with the formula in paragraph (b) or failed to attach a statement of consent, treatment of the interest as a qualified joint interest from the date of the original filing will be permitted only if a corrected gift tax return is filed that is in compliance with the requirements of this section.

Example 9. In 1960, Mr. and Mrs. D purchased a home for $24,000. Mr. D made the down payment of $5,000, and they took title jointly. In 1974, when the balance on the mortgage was $1,000 and the house was worth $65,000, Mr. and Mrs. D refinanced their mortgage, increasing it to $50,000. Today the house is worth $85,000 and the balance on the new mortgage is $46,000. Mr. D has made all the mortgage payments and has not at any time filed a gift tax return.

If Mr. and Mrs. D elect to have their interest treated as a qualified joint interest, the consideration furnished by Mr. D, in addition to the amount of the down payment, will be limited to the amount of the original acquisition indebtedness ($19,000) under § 23.1(b).

Example 10. In 1970, Mr. and Mrs. E purchased a home for $25,000. In 1977, when the home was worth $80,000, Mr. and Mrs. E added a new wing, with a bedroom, bathroom, and family room. The addition cost $20,000 and is a substantial improvement. No gift tax return was filed at any time.

Mr. and Mrs. E may elect to treat their original interest in the home as a qualified joint interest by complying with the requirements of this section. However, since the substantial improvement was a separate interest and was not created before January 1, 1977, it is not eligible for the special election provided under this section. Treatment of their interest in the substantial improvement as a qualified joint interest is available only by severing and re-creating the interest.

(f) Effective date. This section is effective for elections made for calendar quarters beginning after December 31, 1976, and before January 1, 1980.

This Treasury decision adds temporary regulations to enable taxpayers to comply with the new law on the election to treat an interest in property as a qualified joint interest. Because the election will be available only through 1979, it is impractical to issue this Treasury decision with notice and public procedure under subsection (b) of section 553 of title 5 of the United States Code or subject to the effective date limitation of subsection (d) of that section.

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in section 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (68A Stat. 917, 26 U.S.C. 7805).

Section 4371.—Imposition of Tax [Miscellaneous Excise Taxes]

26 CFR 46.4371-2: Imposition of tax on policies issued by foreign insurers; scope of tax.
(Also Section 4372.)

Foreign insurer; indemnity bond vs. insurance policy. A domestic corporation that maintains disability plans covering its U.S. citizen or resident employees and former employees entered into a contract with a foreign insurer that is neither doing business nor authorized to do business in the U.S. In return for an actuarially computed annual payment, the insurer, which is not a party to the plans, indemnifies the corporation for all required plan payments. It incurs no liability to the employees or former employees and is responsible for neither plan performance failures nor the application or disposition of money paid to the corporation under the contract. The insurer has the right to audit claims against the plans and to protest what it feels are improper payments. The contract is a policy taxable under section 4371(2) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-95

ISSUE

Whether the agreement described below, between a domestic corporation and a foreign insurer, is taxable either as an indemnity bond under section 4371(1) of the Internal Revenue Code at the rate of four cents on each dollar, or as a policy of life, sickness or accident insurance under section 4371(2) at the rate of one cent on each dollar.

FACTS

X, a domestic corporation, maintains long-term disability plans under which it is required to make payments to its United States citizen or resident employees and former employees. X entered into a contract with Y, a foreign insurer that is neither authorized to do business nor doing business in the United States. Under the contract, Y agrees to indemnify X for all payments X is obligated to make to its employees and former employees under the disability plans. In consideration, Y receives from X an annual payment that is actuarially computed on the basis of a disability table.

Y is not a party to any of X's employee disability plans and incurs no liability to any individual employee or former employee claiming a disability payment under one of the plans. Further, Y is not responsible for any failure of X to perform its duties under the disability plans, nor is Y responsible for the application or disposition by X of any money received from Y under their contract. The settlement and payment of disability claims is handled entirely by X. Under its contract with X, Y does have the right to audit claims made against a disability plan, and to protest when it feels X has improperly made a payment under a plan.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4372(c) of the Code defines "indemnity bond" as any instrument by whatever name called whereby an obligation of the nature of an indemnity, fidelity or surety bond is made, continued, or renewed. The term includes any bond for indemnifying any person who shall have become bound or engaged as surety, and any bond for the due execution or performance of any contract, obligation, or requirement, or the duties of any office or position, and to account for money received by virtue thereof, where a premium is charged for the execution of such bond.

Section 4372(e) defines "policy of life, sickness, or accident insurance, or annuity contract" as any policy or other instrument by whatever name called whereby a contract is made, continued, or renewed with respect to life or hazards to the person of a citi- or resident of the United States.

The contract between X and Y is an agreement wherein Y's liability to X is contingent upon one of X's employees or former employees becoming disabled. The contract between X and Y is not an indemnity bond subject to the tax imposed by section 4371(1) of the Code. However, the question remains whether the contract is a policy of life, sickness or accident insurance taxable under section 4371(2).

Although the independent and separate nature of the disability plans means that X's employees or former employees are not parties to the contract between X and Y, this lack of privity is not necessarily determinative as to the nature of that contract.

The character of the risk covered by the contract is "with respect to the life or hazards of the person" as that phrase is used in section 4372(e) of the Code, because (1) the premium is actuarially computed on the basis of a disability table, (2) the contract is directly related to X's disability plans (because the sole basis for a claim by X under its contract with Y is a prior payment by X to an employee or former employee under a disability plan), and (3) Y has the right to audit and protest the payments by X under the disability plans.

Because Y is obliged to indemnify X for losses sustained by X under the disability plans, the risk assumed by Y under the contract is the same as the risk borne by X under the disability plans. The fact that X has passed its risk to Y does not change the nature of the risk. The arrangement is similar to one of reinsurance in which the primary insurer transfers some or all of the risk it has assumed to a second insurance company. Thus the risk insured against under the contract is the risk of injury to employees or former employees of X. Therefore, the contract is a policy of "sickness or accident insurance" within the meaning of section 4372(e) of the Code.

HOLDING

The contract between X and Y is taxable at the rate of one cent on each dollar under section 4371(2) of the Code.

Section 4372.—Definitions [Policies Issued by Foreign Insurers]

Whether a certain insurance agreement between a domestic corporation and its foreign affiliate regarding the domestic corporation's employees is taxable under section 4371(1) or section 4371(2) of the Code. See Rev. Rul. 80-95, page 15.

Section 4942.—Taxes on Failure to Distribute Income

26 CFR 53.4942(a)-3: Qualifying distributions defined.
(Also Sections 170, 4945; 1.170A-1, 53.4945-1.)

Qualifying distribution; private foundation; exempt cemetery company. An unrestricted contribution made by a private foundation to an exempt cemetery company that is not described in section 170(c)(2)(B) of the Code is not a qualifying distribution within the meaning of section 4942(g) and is a taxable expenditure within the meaning of section 4945(d)(5).

Rev. Rul. 80-97

ISSUE AND FACTS

Is an unrestricted contribution to a cemetery company exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(13) of the Internal Revenue Code but not described in section 170(c)(2)(B), made by an organization that is a private foundation under section 509(a), a taxable expenditure within the meaning of section 4945(d)(5) or a qualifying distribution within the meaning of section 4942(g)?

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4942(g) of the Code provides in part that the term "qualifying distribution" means any amount paid to accomplish one or more of the purposes described in section 170(c)(2)(B).

Section 4945(d)(5) of the Code provides that the term "taxable expenditure" means any amount paid or incurred by a private foundation for any purpose other than one specified in section 170(c)(2)(B).

Section 170(c)(2)(B) of the Code describes an organization that is organized and operated exclusively for religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes, or to foster national or international amateur sports competition, or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals.

Section 501(c)(13) of the Code provides for the exemption from federal income tax of cemetery companies owned and operated exclusively for the benefit of their members or which are not operated for profit.

Section 170(c)(5) of the Code provides that the term "charitable contribution" includes a contribution or gift or for the use of a cemetery owned and operated exclusively for the benefit of its members, if such company is not operated for profit.

Although a cemetery company exempt under section 501(c)(13) of the Code is an organization to which contributions are deductible under section 170(c)(5), it is not an organization organized and operated exclusively for the purposes described in section 170(c)(2)(B).

HOLDING

Since the private foundation's contribution to the cemetery company is not an amount paid to accomplish one or more of the purposes described in section 170(c)(2)(B) of the Code, the contribution is a taxable expenditure within the meaning of section 4945(d)(5) and is not a qualifying distribution within the meaning of section 4942(g).

Compare section 53.4947-1(b)(2)(vii) of the Foundation Excise Tax Regulations which provides an exception to this rule for certain trusts described in section 4947(a)(1) of the Code that are devoted to section 170(c)(5) purposes together with section 170(c)(2)(B) purposes. Payments under the terms of the governing instrument of such a trust to an organization described in section 170(c)(5) are not considered a violation of section 4945(d)(5) and are considered qualifying distributions under section 4942.

26 CFR 53.4945-1: Taxes on taxable expenditures.

Whether a contribution to a cemetery company exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(13) of the Code, made by an organization that is a private foundation under section 509(a), is a qualifying distribution within the meaning of section 4945(g) and if it is not, whether it is a taxable expenditure within the meaning of section 4945(d)(5). TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE.—CHAPTER 61, SUB-

CHAPTER B, PART 404.—TEMPORARY REGULATIONS ON PROCEDURE AND ADMINISTRATION UNDER THE TAX REFORM ACT OF 1976

Disclosure of return information to and by officers and employees of the Department of Commerce for certain statistical purposes and related activities.

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Temporary regulations.

SUMMARY: This document contains amendments to the temporary regulations relating to the disclosure of certain return information to and by officers and employees of the Department of Commerce for certain statistical purposes and related activities. These amendments are intended to clarify the existing regulations and expand them in one minor respect. They affect all disclosures to and by the Bureau of the Census.

DATE: The regulations apply to disclosures of return information after December 31, 1976.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: David E. Dickinson of the Legislation and Regulations Division, Office of the Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service, 1111 Constitution Avenue N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224 (Attention: CC:LR:T) (202-566-3218).

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

This document contains amendments to the temporary regulations relating to disclosure of return information to and by the Bureau of the Census under section 6103(j)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as added by section 1202 of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (Pub. L. 94-455, 90 Stat. 1688) [1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, 143].

DISCLOSURE OF RETURN INFORMATION ONLY FOR CERTAIN STATISTICAL ACTIVITIES CARRIED OUT BY BUREAU OF THE CENSUS

The Bureau of the Census conducts statistical and related activities under Title 13 of the United States Code. Its basic functions prescribed by statute are carried out under chapter 5 of Title 13. Under chapter 1, however, the Bureau is authorized to make, upon request, special statistical compilations and surveys on a cost reimbursement basis for other Federal agencies, State and local governments, or any other public or private person or agency. Section 6103(j)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code, and § 404.6103(j)(1)-1(b) of present temporary regulations, require the Internal Revenue Service to disclose return information to the Bureau for the purpose of structuring censuses and conducting related statistical activities authorized by law. Read literally, these disclosure provisions would apply to the disclosure of return information by the Service to the Bureau for purposes of carrying out statistical activities under chapter 1, as well as chapter 5, of Title 13.

The legislative history of section 6103(j)(1) of the Code indicates that, despite the language of section 6103(j)(1), Congress, in enacting that provision, was concerned with preserving the ability of the Bureau properly to carry out its functions under chapter 5 of Title 13 and not with statistical studies performed on a contractual basis under chapter 1. Accordingly, these proposed amendments of § 404.6103(j)(1)-1(b) would restrict the use of return information by the Bureau to censuses and related statistical activities conducted or prepared under the authority of chapter 5 of Title 13.

DISCLOSURE OF TAXPAYER NAME INFORMATION TO THE BUREAU OF THE CENSUS FOR PURPOSES OF CARRYING OUT A CHAPTER 5 ACTIVITY

Under § 404.6103(j)(1)-1(b)(1) of present temporary regulations, the Bureau of the Census is authorized to use certain described return information for described censuses, statistical programs, and program evaluation. These regulations provide, however, that the taxpayer's name can be used only where necessary to evaluate the completeness of census coverage, i.e., census undercount. It has since developed, however, that the Bureau needs the authority to use taxpayer names for other statistical activities carried out under chapter 5 of Title 13. For example, if the Bureau were denied the use of taxpayers' names, its ability to conduct samples necessary to these chapter 5 activities would be impaired. Section 404.6103(j)(1)-1(b)(1) of present temporary regulations would, therefore, be amended to delete the restriction on the Bureau's use of taxpayers' names in conducting an activity under the authority of chapter 5.

DISCLOSURE OF EARNED INCOME CREDIT INFORMATION

In order to improve its estimates of per capita income for all geographic areas included in the general revenue sharing program, the Bureau of the Census needs access to the amount by which the earned income credit claimed on individual returns exceeds Federal income tax liability. Accordingly, a new subdivision (xiv) is added to § 404.6103(j)(1)-1(b)(1) to authorize the Service to disclose this information.

WAIVER OF PROCEDURAL REQUIREMENT OF TREASURY DIRECTING

There is need for expeditious adoption of the regulations contained in this document in order to prevent impairment of the present ability of the Bureau of the Census satisfactorily to conduct and prepare intercensal estimates, statistics programs, censuses and related program evaluation authorized by chapter 5 of Title 13, United States Code. For this reason, Jerome Kurtz, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, has determined that the provisions of paragraphs 8 through 14 of the Treasury Directive implementing Executive Order 12044 must be waived.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of this regulation was David E. Dickinson of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations:

In order to amend the temporary regulation on Procedure and Administration (26 CFR Part 404) to allow for certain additional disclosures to and by the Bureau of the Census, § 404.6103(j)(1)-1(b) of such regulations is amended as follows:

Paragraph 1. Paragraph (b)(1) is amended to read as follows:

§ 404.6103(j)(1)-1 Disclosures of return information to officers and employees of the Department of Commerce for certain statistical purposes and related activities.

* * * * *

(b) Disclosure of return information to officers and employees of the Bureau of the Census. (1) Officers or employees of the Internal Revenue Service will disclose the following return information reflected on returns of an individual taxpayer to officers and employees of the Bureau of the Census for purposes of, but only to the extent necessary in, conducting and preparing, as authorized by chapter 5 of Title 13, United States Code, intercensal estimates of population and per capita income for all geographic areas included in the general revenue sharing program and demographic statistics programs, censuses and related program evaluation:

(i) Taxpayer identity information (as defined in section 6103(b)(6)), validity code with respect to the taxpayer identifying number (as described in section 6109), and taxpayer identifying number of spouse, if reported;

(ii) District office and service center codes;

(iii) Marital status;

(iv) Numbers and classifications of reported exemptions;

(v) Adjusted gross income;

(vi) Wage and salary income;

(vii) Dividend income;

(viii) Interest income;

(ix) Gross rent and royalty income;

(x) Entity code;

(xi) Residence information from the revenue sharing question;

(xii) Code indicators for Form 1040; Schedules C, D, E, F, and SE;

(xiii) Julian date relative to filing; and

(xiv) Amount by which the earned income credit exceeds Federal income tax liability.

Par. 2. Paragraph (b)(2) is amended by deleting "for purposes of conducting, as authorized by law," and inserting in lieu thereof "for purposes of, but only to the extent necessary in, conducting and preparing, as authorized by chapter 5 of Title 13, United States Code,".

Par. 3. Paragraphs (b)(3) and (4) are amended by deleting "for purposes of conducting and preparing, as authorized by law," and inserting in lieu thereof "for purposes of, but only to the extent necessary in, conducting and preparing, as authorized by chapter 5 of Title 13, United States Code,".

There is a need for immediate guidance with respect to the provisions contained in this Treasury decision. For this reason, it is found impracticable to issue it with notice and public procedure under subsection (b) of section 553 of Title 5 of the United States Code or subject to the effective date limitation of subsection (d) of that section.

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in sections 6103(j)(1) and 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (90 Stat. 1678, 68A Stat. 917; 26 U.S.C. 7805 and 6103(j)(1)).

26 CFR 301.7216-2: Disclosure or use without formal consent of the taxpayer.

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE.—CHAPTER I, SUBCHAPTER F, PART 301.—PROCEDURE AND ADMINISTRATION

Allowable disclosure or use of tax return information under section 7216.

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Adoption of final regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides final Regulations on Procedure and Administration relating to allowable disclosure or use of tax return information by tax return preparers under section 7216 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. These regulations provide necessary guidance to tax return preparers for compliance with the law.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On December 12, 1974, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Regulations on Procedure and Administration (26 CFR Part 301) under section 7216 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (39 FR 43312). The amendments in the appendix to the notice of proposed rulemaking expand and augment the list of disclosures or uses of tax return information which can be made without violating section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1. There was no request for a public hearing, and none was held.

After consideration of all comments regarding the proposed amendments, this Treasury decision adopts the amendments, as set forth in full below, to the Regulations on Procedure and Administration. Section § 301.7216-2 (n), as proposed, has been revised to make clear that a disclosure made in a bona fide though erroneous belief that a crime has been committed is excepted from section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1.

In addition, a further notice of proposed rulemaking is being published contemporaneously with this Treasury decision. This further notice contains two proposed amendments to certain regulations under section 7216, which regulations are the subject of this Treasury decision.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISIONS

Section 7216(a) of the Code provides that, as a general rule, any tax return preparer who discloses or uses any tax return information other than for the specific purpose of preparing, or assisting in the preparation of, any tax return of the taxpayer by or for whom the information was made available to a tax return preparer shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. Section 7612(b)(3) provides that subsection (a) shall not apply to a disclosure or use of information which is permitted by regulations.

These amendments to § 301.7216-2 expand the list of disclosures or uses of tax return information to which the criminal sanction of section 7216(a) does not apply. The propriety of such disclosures or uses under ethical rules of conduct governing the practice of law or accountancy is beyond the scope of the proposed amendments.

Paragraph (c) of § 301.7216-2 is expanded to permit disclosure pursuant to an administrative order, demand, summons, or subpoena issued by any Federal regulatory agency.

Paragraph (e) of § 301-7216-2 expands allowable disclosure and use of tax return information by attorneys and accountants preparing tax returns. An attorney or accountant can use such information, or disclose it to another person in his firm who may use it, to render other legal or accounting services for the taxpayer, or, with the taxpayer's express or implied consent, make the information available to third parties. An attorney or accountant can take tax return information into account and act upon it, or disclose it to another person in his firm to take it into account and act upon it, while performing legal or accounting services for a client other than the taxpayer, where such information is or may be relevant to the services for such other client and its consideration by those performing the services is necessary to perform those services properly, but disclosure or use under this provision is limited to members or employees of the firm, unless such disclosure to an outsider is specifically excepted by another provision of § 301.7216-2 or § 301.7216-3.

Paragraph (n) of § 301.7216-2 permits disclosure of tax return information to Federal or State officials to inform them of activities which may constitute, or may have constituted, a violation of Federal or State criminal laws.

COMMENTS

A number of commenters requested clarification in § 301.7216-2(e) of the scope of a term used in the existing regulations, "lawfully engaged in the practice of law or accountancy." The suggestion was made that disclosure by employees of law or accounting firms who are not themselves lawyers or accountants but who receive tax return information should expressly be excepted from section 7216(a). The reason that lawyers and accountants are excepted from the criminal sanctions of section 7216 is because they are bound by codes of professional conduct and legal strictures that do not apply to nonprofessional employees. Moreover, paragraph (e), by expressly permitting attorneys and accountants to disclose tax return information to employees of their firms, so that such employees may make specified use of such information, by implication permits these employees to disclose such information to an attorney or accountant of the firm.

Another suggestion was to limit "lawfully engaged" to include only those licensed or registered with local authorities or, alternatively, to include only those admitted to practice before the Internal Revenue Service. This phrase as now used is intended to include only those licensed or registered locally and it is not considered necessary to state this expressly. Expanding the term to include tax return preparers admitted to Internal Revenue Service practice would except from section 7216 persons frequently not bound by professional canons of ethics or local laws, in violation of the rationale of the attorney/accountant exception.

Commenters also criticized another phrase in existing paragraph (e) as overly broad and vague. This paragraph provides that an accountant (and proposed paragraph (e) that an attorney as well) may make disclosure to third parties with the "implied consent" of the taxpayer. The term "implied consent" has been construed with adequate specificity in other areas of law and has sufficiently precise meaning to be commonly understood. This Treasury decision is not intended to alter these phrases, "lawfully engaged in the practice of law or accountancy" and "implied consent", as used in existing § 301.7216-2(e).

Other suggestions concerned the similar treatment of atorneys and accountants. A suggestion was made that the two professions should not be treated identically. While the attorney-client privilege has no exact counterpart in the accounting profession in most States, nonetheless State-licensed accountants are subject to sufficient professional discipline and legal restraint to be excepted with State-licensed attorneys from the sanctions of section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1. Another proposal was that attorneys and State-licensed accountants should be completely excepted from the criminal provisions of section 7216(a) since professional ethics and State regulation insure "the highest standard of professional conduct." It is believed that this Treasury decision will not unduly hamper the conduct of these professionals and that they should not be completely excepted.

It was suggested that the proposed limit on disclosure pursuant to an administrative order, summons or subpoena in being limited to orders, etc., issued by a regulatory agency would probably exclude Internal Revenue Service orders, as well as other nonregulatory agency orders. This proposal has been taken into account in new proposed regulations under § 301.7216-2 contained in the notice of proposed rulemaking published contemporaneously with this Treasury decision. New proposed paragraph (c) would broaden the types of administrative bodies whose orders for disclosure of tax return information will be excepted from the criminal sanction of section 7216(a).

One criticism made was that the proposed rules could easily be construed as mandating unethical conduct by permitting disclosure by tax return preparers notwithstanding confidential relationships and constitutional rights. Code section 7216 and regulations issued thereunder do not mandate but rather decriminalize certain disclosures and uses. The propriety of such action under other laws or under ethical rules of conduct governing the practice of law or accountancy is beyond the scope of the amendments.

With regard to proposed paragraph (n) of § 301.7216-2, concern was expressed that this paragraph might be construed to impose an affirmative duty to disclose the commission of a crime. It is again emphasized that these proposed amendments are merely exceptions to a criminal provision and are not intended to authorize conduct forbidden elsewhere.

Commenters also suggested with respect to paragraph (n) that disclosure made in the bona fide though mistaken belief that a crime has been committed should be excepted. Language has been added to this paragraph to clarify that such good faith disclosure in fact comes under the protection of paragraph (n).

Finally, it was observed that paragraph (n) on disclosure to Federal and State officials omits disclosure to local officials, although disclosure pursuant to the order of a local court is permissible under § 301.7216-2(c). This matter is a subject of the new proposed regulations under § 301.7216-2 contained in the notice of proposed rulemaking published contemporaneously with this Treasury decision.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is Catherine Kelly Bouknight of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, 26 CFR Part 301 is amended by revising § 301.7216-2(c) and (e) and by adding a new paragraph (n) thereto, to read as follows:

§ 301.7216-2 Disclosure or use without formal consent of the taxpayer.

* * * * *

(c) Disclosure pursuant to an order of a court or of a Federal regulatory agency. The provisions of section 7216 (a) and § 301.7216-1 do not apply to any disclosure of tax return information if such disclosure is made pursuant to any one of the following documents:

(1) The order of any court of record, Federal, State, or local, or

(2) An administrative order, demand, summons, or subpoena issued by any Federal regulatory agency in the performance of its duties.

Information must be clearly identified in the document in order to be disclosed under this paragraph (c).

(e) Certain disclosure by attorneys and accountants. The provisions of section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1 do not apply to any disclosure of tax return information permitted by this paragraph (e).

(1) A tax return preparer who is lawfully engaged in the practice of law or accountancy and prepares a tax return for a taxpayer may use the tax return information of the taxpayer, or disclose such information to another employee or member of the preparer's law or accounting firm who may use it, to render other legal or accounting services to or for such taxpayer. Thus, for example, a lawyer who prepares a tax return for a taxpayer may use the tax return information of the taxpayer for, or in connection with, rendering legal services, such as estate planning or administration, or preparation of trial briefs or trust instruments, for the taxpayer or the estate of the taxpayer; or if another member of the same firm renders the other legal services for the taxpayer, the lawyer who prepared the tax return may disclose the tax return information to that other member for use in rendering those services for the taxpayer. In further illustration, an accountant who prepares a tax return for a taxpayer may use the tax return information, or disclose it to another member of the firm for use, for, or in connection with, the preparation of books of account, working papers, or accounting statements or reports to or for the taxpayer. Further, in the normal course of rendering such legal or accounting services to or for the taxpayer, the attorney or accountant may, with the express or implied consent of the taxpayer, make such tax return information available to third parties, such as stockholders, management, suppliers, or lenders.

(2) A tax return preparer who is lawfully engaged in the practice of law or accountancy and prepares a tax return for a taxpayer may (i) take such tax return information into account, and may act upon it, in the course of performing legal or accounting services for a client other than the taxpayer or (ii) disclose such information to another employee or member of the preparer's law or accounting firm to enable that other employee or member to take the information into account, and act upon it, in the course of performing legal or accounting services for a client other than the taxpayer, when such information is or may be relevant to the subject matter of such legal or accounting services for the other client and its consideration by those performing the services is necessary for the proper performance by them of such services. In no event, however, may such tax return information be disclosed to a person who is not an employee or member of the law or accounting firm unless such disclosure is exempt from the application of section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1 by reason of another provision, other than this paragraph, of § 301.7216-2 or § 301.7216-3.

(3) The application of this paragraph may be illustrated by the following examples:

* * * * *

Example (1). A, a member of an accounting firm, renders an opinion on a financial statement of M Corporation that is part of a registration statement filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission. After the filing of such registration statement, but before its effective date, B, a member of the same accounting firm, prepares an income tax return for N Corporation. In the course of preparing such income tax return, B discovers that N does business with M and concludes that information he is given by N should be considered by A to determine whether the financial statement reported on by A contains an untrue statement of material fact or omitted to state a material fact required to keep the statement from being misleading. B discloses to A the tax return information of N for this purpose. A determines that there is an omission of material fact and that an amended statement should be filed. A so advises M and the Securities and Exchange Commission. A explains that the omission was revealed as a result of confidential information which came to A's attention after the statement was filed, but A does not disclose the identity of the taxpayer or the tax return information itself. Section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1 do not apply to the foregoing disclosure of N's tax return information by B to A and the use of such information by A in advising M and the Securities and Exchange Commission of the necessity for filing an amended statement. Section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1 would apply to a disclosure of N's tax return information to M or to the Securities and Exchange Commission unless such disclosure is exempt from the application of section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1 by reason of another provision of either § 301.7216-2 or § 301.7216-3.

Example (2). A, a member of an accounting firm, is conducting an audit of M Corporation, and B, a member of the same accounting firm, prepares an income tax return for D, an officer of M. In the course of preparing such return, B obtains information from D indicating that D, pursuant to an arrangement with a supplier doing business with M, has been receiving from the supplier, a percentage of the amounts which the supplier invoices to M. B discloses this information to A who, acting upon it, searches in the course of the audit for indications of such a kickback scheme. As a result, A discovers information from audit sources which also, but independently, indicates the existence of such a scheme. Without revealing the tax return information A has received from B, A brings to the attention of officers of M the audit information indicating the existence of the kickback scheme. Section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1 do not apply to the foregoing disclosure of D's tax return information by B to A, the use by A of such information in the course of the audit, and the disclosure by A to M of the audit information indicating the existence of the kickback scheme. See also § 301.7216-2(j). Section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1 would apply to a disclosure to M, or to any other person not an employee or member of the accounting firm, of D's tax return information furnished to B.

(n) Disclosure to report the commission of a crime. The provisions of section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1 do not apply to the disclosure of any tax return information to the proper Federal or State official in order, and to the extent necessary, to inform the official of activities which may constitute, or may have constituted, a violation of Federal or State criminal laws. In addition, such a disclosure made in the bona fide but mistaken belief that the activities constituted a violation of criminal law is not subject to section 7216(a) and § 301.7216-1.

(Vol. 1) 1] and also the need for clarification of existing law. This regulation affects certain persons who assist others in completing their Federal income tax returns and provides guidance needed to comply with law.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

This document contains an amendment to the Regulations on Procedure and Administration (26 CFR Part 301) under section 7701(a)(36) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, relating to the definition of income tax return preparer.

Section 163 of the Revenue Act of 1978 authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury, through the Internal Revenue Service, to enter into agreements with nonprofit agencies or organizations pursuant to which the Service will provide training and technical assistance enabling volunteers of these institutions to assist the elderly in completing their Federal income tax returns. In addition to this Tax Counseling for the Elderly program, the Internal Revenue Service has established a Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program, which provides assistance to individual taxpayers in completing their Federal income tax returns through the use of Service-trained volunteers.

Section 1203 of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1] established duties for income tax return preparers and provided penalties for the breach of those duties. On November 23, 1977, the Federal Register published regulations to implement most of the provisions of section 1203 (42 FR 59961). Those regulations included a provision, § 301.7701-15, relating to the definition of income tax return preparer found in section 7701(a)(36) of the Code. Only preparers as so defined in the Code and regulations are subject to the duties and penalties imposed by section 1203.

In enacting these preparer measures in the Tax Reform Act of 1976 Congress sought to subject persons preparing returns for a fee to a specific set of requirements. However, Congress did not intend those requirements to apply to persons merely assisting others to complete their returns in a nonprofit, noncommercial setting such as volunteers under the Tax Counseling for the Elderly and the VITA programs. Assistance under these programs is provided to taxpayers free of charge. In addition, volunteers under the VITA program receive no amounts from any source in participating in the program, while volunteers under the Tax Counseling for the Elderly program may receive only reimbursement of expenses from the Internal Revenue Service through the sponsoring organizations. Further, section 163(c)(2) of the Revenue Act of 1978 in general exempts these reimbursed amounts from income and social security taxes.

Accordingly, this document amends § 301.7701-15 to make clear that volunteers under the VITA and Tax Counseling for the Elderly programs are not considered income tax return preparers for purposes of section 1203 of the Tax Reform Act of 1976. Similarly, this regulation makes clear that organizations sponsoring or administering these programs are not considered preparers with respect to such sponsorship or administration.

This regulation does not meet the Treasury criteria for a significant regulation under paragraph 8 of the final Treasury directive for improving government regulations appearing in the Federal Register for Wednesday, November 8, 1978 (43 FR 52120).

Adoption of amendment to the regulations

Accordingly, 26 CFR Part 301 is amended by adding to § 301.7701-15 a new paragraph (a)(7) reading as follows:

§ 301.7701-15 Income tax return preparer.

(a) In general. * * *

(7) The following persons are not income tax return preparers:

(i) Any individual who provides tax assistance under a Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program established by the Internal Revnue Service;

(ii) Any organization sponsoring or administering a Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program established by the Internal Revenue Service, but only with respect to that sponsorship or administration;

(iii) Any individual who provides tax counseling for the elderly under a program established pursuant to section 163 of the Revenue Act of 1978; and

(iv) Any organization sponsoring or administering a program to provide tax counseling for the elderly established pursuant to section 163 of the Revenue Act of 1978, but only with respect to that sponsorship or administration.

Rev. Rul. 72-376, 1972-2 C.B. 647; Rev. Rul. 74-221, 1974-1 C.B. 365; and Rev. Rul. 74-300, 1974-1 C.B. 169, involving the purchase by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (FHLMC) of mortgage loans and interests therein from savings and loan associations and other eligible sellers and the sale of participation sales certificates to investors including other savings and loan associations, remain applicable under the circumstances described below?

FACTS

Rev. Rul. 71-399, as amplified by Rev. Rul. 72-376 and Rev. Rul. 74-221, set forth the tax consequences of the purchase of mortgage participation certificates and whole mortgage loans by FHLMC from savings and loan associations and the issuance by FHLMC of sales certificates to other savings and loan associations and exempt employees trusts. Rev. Rul. 74-300 holds that a real estate investment trust owning certificates issued by the FHLMC is considered as owning "real estate assets" within the meaning of section 856(c)(5)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code and its interest income from such certificates is "interest on obligations secured by mortgages on real property" under section 856(c)(3)(B).

Rev. Rul. 71-399, as amplified, states in part, that the arrangement whereby FHLMC purchases mortgage participation certificates and whole mortgage loans from savings and loan associations followed by FHLMC's sale of its own sales certificates to certain other organizations does not create an association taxable as a corporation, but constitutes a trust; the holders of FHLMC certificates discussed in Rev. Rul. 71-399, as amplified, are owners of the trust under Subpart E of subchapter J of the Code and each certificate holder is treated as the owner of an undivided interest in the entire trust (corpus as well as ordinary income), and that the sale of the FHLMC certificates to the holders transfers equitable ownership in the underlying mortgages to the holders of the certificates.

As decsribed in the above-mentioned rulings, FHLMC combines participation certificates and whole mortgage loans (or interests therein) purchased by it into a "pool" and sells its own participation sales certificates (PCs) representing undivided interests in each of the mortgage loans represented by the participation certificates purchased by FHLMC and undivided interests in each of the whole loans owned by FHLMC. The savings and loan associations and other mortgage originators ("seller/servicers") from whom FHLMC purchases either participation certificates or whole loans generally continue to service such loans.

Rev. Rul. 72-376 and Rev. Rul. 74-221 require that the PCs sold by FHLMC must bear sufficient identification so as to permit tracing them to the participation certificates purchased by FHLMC and to the whole loans owned by FHLMC to which PCs relate and to the underlying mortgages represented by the participation certificates in FHLMC's hands. FHLMC uses a number of internal accounting systems between itself and the seller/servicers, including a fiscal reporting month by the seller/servicers, to insure not only the presence of an ability to trace required by those revenue rulings, but also the ability for FHLMC to verify that the payments received by FHLMC from the seller/servicers are correct.

Under FHLMC procedures PCs are sold by FHLMC representing undivided interests in a pool of mortgages and interests therein as constituted at that time. The ultimate size of a pool formed by FHLMC is adjusted to meet increased or decreased market demands of the purchasers of PCs, as well as to take into account information regarding specific mortgages that is not furnished to FHLMC by the seller/servicer until after the month the pool is formed, or to the extent furnished, has not yet been processed by FHLMC. The adjustments to the pool size by FHLMC are made no later than the date of the first remittance check to holders of its PCs in such pool.

FHLMC is obligated under an agreement with the PC holders to remit to each PC holder the PC holder's pro rata share of principal received by FHLMC and interest to the extent of the certificate rate. The agreement permits FHLMC to make regular monthly payments of principal and interest to PC holders on an estimated basis before actual mortgage loan payment data is processed by FHLMC. In arriving at the amount to be paid to a PC holder, FHLMC makes a calculation based in part on its own experience as to how much principal is due for the normal calendar month to its PC holders. Any minor variances in making this calculation of principal are adjusted by FHLMC in the payment for the fol-following month to its PC holders. This process is repeated for the life of the PC and upon the final payment with respect to the PC all the principal acquired by the PC holder will have been remitted by FHLMC.

In making the calculation discussed in the preceding paragraph, FHLMC follows a set procedure to handle mortgage loans that are prepaid. FHLMC retains any interest remitted by the seller/servicer for the period from the first day of the calendar month to the date of prepayment if the mortgage loan is paid in full or in part on or before the 20th day of the month. FHLMC remits a full 30 days' interest to its PC holders with respect to mortgage loans which are prepaid after the 20th of the month. This FHLMC procedure is fully disclosed to prospective PC holders in FHLMC's PC Offering Circular, as an adjustment to FHLMC's guarantee and management fee.

Upon the sale of a PC, FHLMC retains the right to repurchase such PC from its holder for an amount equal to the then unpaid principal balance of the undivided interest in each mortgage loan represented by each PC. The right to repurchase can be exercised when the dollar size of the pool, and of each PC holder's interest therein, is 10 percent or less of the initial unpaid principal balance of the pool.

While PC holders may sell their PCs to third parties (when the certificates are transferable on the books of FHLMC), the agreement with PC holders does not authorize PC holders to use PCs as a basis for forming any more pools.

HOLDING

The holdings of Rev. Rul. 71-399, as amplified by Rev. Rul. 72-376, Rev. Rul. 74-221, and Rev. Rul. 74-300, are not altered by the above-described procedures under which FHLMC purchases and sells mortgage loans provided the PCs sold by FHLMC continue to bear sufficient identification so as to permit tracing them to the participation certificates purchased by FHLMC and to whole loans owned by FHLMC to which they relate and to the underlying mortgages.

ISSUE

Are the amounts received by residents of Japan from the National Institutes of Health ("NIH") exempt from federal income taxation pursuant to Article 20 of the United States-Japan Income Tax Convention ("Treaty"), 1973-1 C.B. 630, under the circumstances described in the facts below?

FACTS

NIH has established and continues to maintain the Visiting Fellows Program ("Program") through which it invites distinguished and talented scientists from foreign countries, including Japan, to NIH for a limited amount of time (up to 3 years) for an interchange of scientific information and training at the postdoctoral research level for the purpose of furthering their development in their biomedical specialties.

Visiting Fellows are awarded between $10,000 and $12,500 under the Program as a yearly stipend from NIH to support their postdoctoral research training. These awards are made to individuals whose postgraduate experience does not exceed 3 years in a relevant health science at the time of the award. Visiting Fellows are not required to perform any services for NIH while participating in the Program and are expected to devote their time exclusively to their research training.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 894(a) of the Internal Revenue Code provides that income of any kind, to the extent required by any treaty obligation of the United States, shall not be included in gross income and shall be exempt from taxation.

Article 20(1)(a)(iii) of the Treaty provides that an individual who is a resident of Japan at the beginning of a visit to the United States and who is temporarily present in the United States for the primary purpose of studying or doing research as a recipient of a grant, allowance, or an award from a governmental, religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational institution shall be exempt from federal income taxation with respect to amounts described in Article 20(1)(b) for a period not exceeding 5 taxable years from the date of the individual's arrival in the United States.

Article 20(1)(b) of the Treaty provides that the following amounts shall be exempt from federal income taxation: (i) gifts from abroad for the purpose of maintenance, education, study, research, or training; (ii) the grant, allowance, or award itself; and (iii) income for personal services performed in the United States in an aggregate amount not in excess of $2,000 for any taxable year.

Section B(3)(a) of a National Institutes of Health Manual Transmittal Sheet (Subject: 2300-320-3, The NIH Visiting Program) released May 8, 1978, provides that Visiting Fellows are expected to devote their time exclusively to their research training and are not to perform services for NIH nor are they to be provided training assignments in grants, contracts, or any other administrative functions.

The amounts received by Visiting Fellows as fellowship awards granted by NIH to visiting scientists under the Program fall within the scope of the kind of amounts contemplated by the use of the term "grant, allowance, or award" in Article 20(1)(b)(ii) to be exempt from federal income taxation. Such amounts are not compensation for services and Visiting Fellows are not employees of NIH since it is specifically provided that they are not to perform services for NIH under the Program. Moreover, any amounts received by the Visiting Fellows while in the Program that qualify as gifts from abroad for the purpose of maintenance, education, study, research, or training under Article 20(1)(b)(i) or as income not in excess of $2,000 per year for personal services performed in the United States under Article 20(1)(b)(iii) are also exempt from federal income taxation.

In Rev. Rul. 76-567, 1976-2 C.B. 491, the taxpayer, a citizen and resident of Japan, received funds from a charitable organization paid in connection with the taxpayer's research work at an institute located in the United States. The ruling concludes that the amount paid to the taxpayer for the research work is a grant, allowance, or award from a charitable organization within the meaning of Article 20(1)(a)(iii) of the United States-Japan Income Tax Convention and, thus, is exempt from federal income tax. However, the ruling does not distinguish between an amount paid under a grant for research and an amount paid as compensation for services rendered in performing research.

HOLDING

The amounts received by residents of Japan from NIH under the Program are exempt from federal income taxation under Article 20 of the Treaty under the circumstances described in the facts above.

Tax treaties with the following countries contain provisions that are identical or substantially similar to Article 20 of the Japanese Treaty: Belgium (Article 21), Finland (Article 21), France (Article 18), Iceland (Article 22), Netherlands (Article XVIII), Norway (Article 16), Poland (Article 18), Romania (Article 20), and Trinidad and Tobago (Article 19). Therefore, amounts received by residents of these countries from NIH under the Program are exempt from federal taxation pursuant to the applicable provisions (parenthetically cited) of the tax treaties with these countries.

Part III. Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous

Delegation Order No. 66 (Rev. 10) (Effective February 28, 1980)

Authority of Regional Director of Appeals in Protested and Tax Court Cases

The authority vested in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue by 26 CFR 301.6020-1, 26 CFR 301.6201-1, 26 CFR 301.7701-9 and Treasury Department Order No. 150-37, is hereby delegated as follows:

1. (a) In each region the Regional Commissioner, Regional Director of Appeals, Chiefs and Associate Chiefs of Appeals Offices, and Appeals Team Chiefs as to their respective cases, are authorized to represent the Commissioner in determining liability, qualification, exempt status or foundation classification for the following types of cases not docketed in the United States Tax Court when the taxpayer does not agree with the determination made by the District Director or by the Director of International Operations and requests consideration by the Regional Director of Appeals:

(1) Except as excluded under paragraph 5 of this Order, liability for excise, employment, income, profits, estate (including extensions for paying estate tax under Internal Revenue Code Section 6161(a)(2) and determinations whether elections made by estates meet the conditions specified in Internal Revenue Code Sections 6166 and 6166A) and gift taxes including additions to tax, additional amounts and assessable penalties under Chapter 68 of Subtitle F of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or corresponding provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939;

(2) Initial or continuing qualification under Subchapter D of Chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and initial or continuing exempt status and foundation classification, except when a National Office ruling on the case with respect to exempt status or foundation classification, or National Office Technical Advice, with respect to qualification, exempt status or foundation classification, has been issued. In certain instances such as cases arising from the Examination Division or cases in which a National Office Technical Advice covers only a portion of the qualification issue of an employee plan, Appeals officials will have jurisdiction over the proposed action where a National Office ruling on the case with respect to exempt status or foundation classification or a National Office Technical Advice, with respect to qualification, exempt status or foundation classification has been issued. If the Appeals proposed disposition is contrary to the National Office ruling on the case with respect to exempt status or foundation classification or the National Office Technical Advice with respect to qualification, exempt status or foundation classification, the Assistant Commissioner (Employee Plans and Exempt Organizations) or the Assistant Commissioner (Technical), in Internal Revenue Code Section 521 cases, will make the final decision.

(b) The authorities delegated in this paragraph are subject to the exceptions set forth in paragraph 3 of this Order and they may not be redelegated, except, the authority with respect to appeals of assessed penalties may be redelegated by the Regional Directors of Appeals to Appeals Officers.

2. (a) In conformity with the provisions of Delegation Order No. 60 (as revised), in each income, excise, profits, estate, and gift tax case docketed in the United States Tax Court, the Regional Directors of Appeals, Chiefs and Associate Chiefs of Appeals Offices, and Appeals Team Chiefs as to their respective cases, are authorized to perform those functions delegated to the Regional Commissioner in that joint Order.

(b) The authorities delegated in this paragraph are subject to the exceptions set forth in paragraph 3 of this Order and may not be redelegated.

3. (a) The authorities delegated to the regional officials do not include authority to:

(1) Eliminate the ad valorem fraud penalty in any case in which the penalty has been determined by the district office or service center office in connection with a tax year or period, or which is related to or affects such year or period, for which criminal prosecution against the taxpayer (or related taxpayer involving the same transaction) has been recommended to the Department of Justice for willful attempt to evade or defeat tax, or for willful failure to file a return, except upon the recommendation or concurrence of Counsel; or

(2) Act in any case in which a recommendation for criminal prosecution is pending, except with the concurrence of Counsel.

(b) If the coordinating official has not concurred in any case referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Order involving an Appeals Coordinated Issue, except in the event of a final decision made by the Assistant Commissioner (Employee Plans and Exempt Organizations) or the Assistant Commissioner (Technical) as referred to in paragraph 1(a)(2) of this Order, the Regional Director of Appeals in the region having jurisdiction over the case makes the final determination as to the disposition of the Appeals Coordinated Issue. This authority may not be redelegated.

4. In any case not docketed in the Tax Court in which a statutory notice was issued by the office of a District Director, by a Service Center Director or by the Director of International Operations, the Regional Director of Appeals may relinquish the requested jurisdiction by waiver to the office of that Director. No such waiver shall be made in any case in which criminal prosecution has been recommended and not finally disposed of; nor shall such a waiver be made in any case in which the determination in the statutory notice includes the ad valorem fraud penalty. Notwithstanding any such waiver, upon filing of a petition with the Tax Court, jurisdiction shall revest in the Regional Director of Appeals.

5. The excise and employment taxes subject to the provisions of this Order include any Federal excise or employment tax under the Internal Revenue

Code of 1954, except any tax imposed by the following provisions or corresponding provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1939:

(a) Subtitle E; or

(b) Subchapter D, Chapter 78 of Subtitle F, insofar as it relates to taxes imposed under Subtitle E.

6. The authority to make and subscribe to a return under provisions of Code section 6020 is delegated to Appeals Officers.

7. The authorities contained in this Order are intended to supplement the authorities contained in Delegation Order No. 60 (as revised).

8. This Order supersedes Commissioner's Delegation Order No. 66 (Rev. 9) [1979-27 I.R.B. 18] and Chief Counsel's Order No. 1031.2C dated June 4, 1979.

N. JEROLD COHEN,
Chief Counsel.

JEROME KURTZ,
Commissioner.

Rev. Proc. 80-11

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this revenue procedure is to provide individual taxpayers guidance on reporting dividends on restricted stock that is not substantially vested within the meaning of section 83 of the Internal Revenue Code.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND

.01 Section 1.83-1 of the Income Tax Regulations provides that property transferred to an employee in connection with the performance of services is not taxable until it has become substantially vested in the employee. Until such property becomes substantially vested, the transferor shall be regarded as the owner of such property, and any income from such property received by the employee constitutes additional compensation and shall be included in the gross income of such employee for the taxable year in which such income is received. Section 3402 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to income tax collected at source) requires employers to deduct and withhold from an employee a tax on the amount of such additional compensation. Under section 31.6051-1 of the Employment Tax Regulations employers required to deduct and withhold a tax under section 3402 are required to furnish the employee a Wage and Tax Statement, Form W-2, which is required to be attached to the employee's Federal income tax return, Form 1040.

.02 Section 6042 of the Code and the regulations thereunder require every person who makes payment of dividends of more than $10 in any calendar year to make an information return on a Statement for Recipients of Dividends and Distributions, Form 1099-DIV. The Service has become aware that in some cases paying agents have issued Forms 1099 for dividends paid on restricted stock.

SEC. 3. PROCEDURE

The employee whose dividends are reflected on both a Form 1099-DIV and a Form W-2 may list the amount of the dividends reported on Form 1099-DIV on Schedule B of Form 1040, with a statement that the income has been reported as compensation in the appropriate place on Form 1040. The amount reported on the Form 1099-DIV should not be included in the total dividends shown on Schedule B or on page one of Form 1040.

SEC. 4. EFFECTIVE DATE

This revenue procedure is effective April 7, 1980, the date of its publication.

Rev. Proc. 80-12

SECTION 1. PURPOSE.

The purpose of this revenue procedure is to revoke Rev. Proc. 78-32, 1978-2 C.B. 532.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND

.01 Rev. Proc. 78-32 provides a procedure whereby a domestic corporation ("possessions corporation") may revoke its election to receive the Puerto Rico and possession tax credit under section 936 of the Internal Revenue Code in order to prevent the double taxation of dividends paid by the possessions corporation to its individual shareholders.

.02 Section 4 of Rev. Proc. 78-32 provides that consent to the revocation of the section 936 election will be granted only if legislation has not been enacted to limit the application of section 901(g) of the Code to corporate shareholders before January 1, 1979.

.03 In providing possessions corporations a tax credit equal to United States tax on possessions business activities and qualifying investment activities (section 936 of the Code), section 1051(f)(1) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, 122, expanded the intercorporate dividends-received deduction allowed under section 243 to include dividend distributions from possessions corporations. However, section 1051(d)(2) of the 1976 Act also added section 901(g), which denies the foreign tax credit for taxes paid to a foreign country or possession of the United States on such distributions. This denial was intended to apply to those taxpayers receiving the dividends-received deduction in order to eliminate the double benefit of a tax credit and a deduction with respect to the same item of income. S. Rep. No. 938, 94th Cong., 2d Sess. 282 (1976), 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 3) 320. However, the denial as enacted applied to all taxpayers, including individuals. Section 243 does not apply to individuals. Thus, if the distributing corporation had elected to avail itself of the benefit of section 936, the shareholder was denied a credit by section 901(g) for any foreign or possession tax on the dividend.

.04 Section 701(u)(1) of the Revenue Act of 1978, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, 146, makes a technical correction amending 901(g) of the Code to provide that the denial of the foreign tax credit will not apply where the dividend distribution from a possessions corporation to a shareholder-recipient is fully taxable by the United States. However, if a recipient is entitled to a dividends-received deduction under section 243 with respect to a distribution, a foreign tax credit shall not be allowed to that recipient for taxes paid to a foreign country or possession of the United States on the distribution. This change applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

SEC. 3. APPLICATION

The amendment of section 901(g) of the Code by the Revenue Act of 1978 eliminates the need for the revocation procedure provided in Rev. Proc. 78-32.

SEC. 4. INQUIRIES

Inquiries in regard to this revenue procedure should refer to its number and be addressed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Attention: T:C:C:3, 1111 Constitution Avenue, NW, Washington, DC 20224.

SEC. 5. EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE PROCEDURES

Rev. Proc. 78-32 is revoked.

Rev. Rul. 80-28, 1980-4 I.R.B. 14, 15, column 2, paragraph 1, last sentence, is corrected to read as follows:

This correction will be reflected in Rev. Rul. 80-28 when it is published in 1980-1 C.B.

If an organization listed above submits information that warrants the renewal of its classification as a public charity or as a private operating foundation, the Internal Revenue Service will issue a ruling or determination letter with the revised classification as to foundation status. Grantors and contributors may thereafter rely upon such ruling or determination letter as provided in section 1.509(a)-7 of the Income Tax Regulations. It is not the practice of the Service to announce such revised classification of foundation status in the Internal Revenue Bulletin.

Announcement 80-40

Form 1090, Statement of Income, and Profit and Loss Accounts, which is filed by railroad companies that file Form 1120, has been revised (January 1980). The account number and line items have been revised to conform to the current railroad accounts as reported to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The form has also been changed to make it the same size as Form 1120, U.S. Corporation Income Tax Return. The new revision is expected to make handling and filing the form much easier.

Copies of the form will be available on or about April 1 at Internal Revenue Service district offices.

Schedules D, Capital Gains and Losses

Announcement 80-41

A question has been raised about reporting installment payments that involve capital gains on sales that occurred before November 1, 1978.

The phrase "transactions entered into," found on the 1979 Schedules D, Capital Gains and Losses, filed with various federal income tax returns, includes installment payments.

A receipt of payment after October 31, 1978, is treated as a transaction after October 31, 1978, for purposes of the 60% capital gain deduction even if the actual sale took place before November 1, 1978. This was stated in Rev. Rul. 79-22, 1979-1 C.B. 275.

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on Subpart A, Tax Conventions and related Treasury Decisions and Revenue Rulings; Subpart B, Legislation and related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of Revenue Rulings, Revenue Procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

Announcement Relating to Decisions of the Tax Court

It is the policy of the Internal Revenue Service to announce in the Internal Revenue Bulletin at the earliest practicable date the determination of the Commissioner to acquiesce or not acquiesce in a decision of the Tax Court which disallows a deficiency in tax determined by the Commissioner to be due.

Notice that the Commissioner has acquiesced or nonacquiesced in a decision of the Tax Court relates only to the issues or issues decided adversely to the Government.

Actions of acquiescences in adverse decisions shall be relied on by Revenue officers and others concerned as conclusions of the Service only to the application of the law to the facts in the particular case. Caution should be exercised in extending the application of the decision to a similar case unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same, and consideration should be given to the effect of new legislation, regulations, and rulings as well as subsequent court decisions and actions thereon.

Acquiescence in a decision means acceptance by the Service of the conclusion reached, and does not necessarily mean acceptance and approval of any or all of the reasons assigned by the Court for its conclusions.

No announcements are made in the Bulletin with respect to memorandum opinions of the Tax Court.

The announcements published in the weekly Internal Revenue Bulletins are consolidated semiannually and annually. The semiannual consolidation appears in the first Bulletin for July and in the Cumulative Bulletin for the first half of the year and the annual consolidation appears in the first Bulletin for the following January and in the Cumulative Bulletin for the last half of the year.

26 CFR 1.61-1: Gross income.

Reimbursed expenses; political fund-raising event; state government employee. Reimbursement made by a political organization to an appointed state government employee for travel expenses incurred in attending and addressing a political fund-raising event is not includible in the individual's gross income to the extent such reimbursement does not exceed actual expenses.

Rev. Rul. 80-99

ISSUE

Is a reimbursement received by an individual, under the circumstances described below, includible in the individual's gross income pursuant to section 61 of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

An individual employed by a state government in an appointive position was invited to attend and address a political fund-raising event sponsored by a political organization described in section 527 of the Code, and was authorized to do so by the individual's superiors. The political organization reimbursed the individual for expenses incurred in attending the fund-raising event, in an amount not exceeding the individual's actual expenditures for the reasonable costs of traveling away from home to and from the event, including meals and lodging in connection therewith.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 61(a) of the Code and the Income Tax Regulations thereunder provide that, except as otherwise provided by law, gross income means all income from whatever source derived.

It is a well-established general rule that reimbursements (other than those specifically excluded by law) for personal expenses of the taxpayer are includible in the taxpayer's gross income. See, for example, Old Colony Trust Co. v. Commissioner, 279 U.S. 716 (1929), VIII-2 C.B. 222 (1929); Silverman v. Commissioner, 253 F. 2d 849 (8th Cir. 1958); Rev. Rul. 74-75, 1974-1 C.B. 19; and Rev. Rul. 79-49, 1979-1 C.B. 57.

However, it is also a well-established position of the Internal Revenue Service that reimbursements for expenses incurred by a taxpayer on behalf of another in a nonemployment context are not includible in the taxpayer's gross income. See, for example, Rev. Rul. 55-555, 1955-2 C.B. 20; Rev. Rul. 57-60, 1957-1 C.B. 25, clarified by Rev. Rul. 60-280, 1960-2 C.B. 12; Rev. Rul. 63-77, 1963-1 C.B. 177; Rev. Rul. 67-30, 1967-1 C.B. 9; Rev. Rul. 77-280, 1977-2 C.B. 14; and Rev. Rul. 79-142, 1979-1 C.B. 8.

HOLDING

The reimbursement received by the individual is not includible in the individual's gross income under section 61 of the Code because the reimbursement was made in a nonemployment context for the reasonable expenses incurred by the individual in traveling away from home on behalf of the political organization, and such reimbursement did not exceed the individual's actual expenses for such travel.

Rev. Rul. 80-100

ISSUE

Will the use of bond proceeds to acquire a perpetual easement be treated as an acquisition of land within the meaning of section 103(b)(6)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS AND LAW

M, a political subdivision of a state, proposes to issue industrial development bonds in the amount of $1,000,000 to finance the purchase of a manufacturing plant situated on land within M for lease to corporation X, a nonexempt person. Bond proceeds of $850,000 will be used to purchase the plant and land. The remaining bond proceeds of $150,000 will be used to acquire a perpetual easement to use land adjacent to the plant site that will provide better access to the plant. Under local law the easement is an interest in real estate. The political subdivision will not have any prior exempt small issues outstanding when the bonds are issued. The bonds will not be arbitrage bonds within the meaning of section 103(c) of the Code.

Section 103(a)(1) of the Code provides that interest on obligations of a political subdivision of a state is excludable from gross income. Section 103(b)(1) provides that, with certain exceptions, industrial development bonds will not be treated as obligations described in section 103(a)(1). Section 103(b)(6)(A) provides one such exception. This section provides that an exempt small issue of $1,000,000 or less of industrial development bonds will be treated as obligations described in section 103(a)(1) if substantially all (90 percent or more) of the bond proceeds are to be used for the acquisition of land or property of a character subject to the allowance for depreciation.

HOLDING

The perpetual easement to be acquired by M is an interest in land and will be treated as an acquisition of land within the meaning of section 103(b)(6)(A) of the Code. Because all of the bond proceeds will be used to acquire land, an interest in land, or property of a character subject to the allowance for depreciation, the exception provisions relating to exempt small issues under section 103(b)(6)(A) will apply. Therefore, the proposed bond issue will not be treated as an industrial development bond and the interest on the bonds will be excludable from the gross incomes of the bondholders under section 103(a)(1).

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE.—CHAPTER I, SUBCHAPTER A, PART 1.—INCOME TAX; TAXABLE YEARS BEGINNING AFTER DECEMBER 31, 1953

Qualifying distribution by private foundation of proceeds of sale of contributed property

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Final regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides final regulations relating to qualifying 100 percent distribution by a private foundation either of proceeds of the sale of contributed property or of the contributed property itself. The final regulations liberalize existing rules with respect to 100 percent distribution of contributed property by allowing the private foundation to take account of reasonable expenses incurred in the sale of contributed property, and by giving the foundation the option to calculate the fair market value of the property as its value at the date of sale or distribution if it is sold or distributed within 30 days of receipt by the foundation.

DATE: The amendments are effective on March 31, 1980.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: Eileen Murphy of the Legislation and Regulations Division, Office of the Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service, 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224 (Attention: CC:LR:T) (202-566-3297).

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

Issuance of this regulation was not preceded by publication in the Federal Register of a notice of proposed rulemaking and request for comments. These steps were dispensed with as unncessary because it is believed that this regulation, which liberalizes existing requirements, is beneficial to all interested parties.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISIONS

In order for section 170(b)(1)(A)(vii) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to percentage limitations for a charitable contribution deduction) to apply to contributions to a private "nonoperating" foundation, the foundation must distribute 100 percent of the contributions received by it. This 100 percent requirement is satisfied if an amount is distributed that is equal to the fair market value of the contributed property on the date of its contribution. This regulation project amends § 1.170A-9(g)(2)(iv) to provide that:

a. The amount of this fair market value is reduced by reasonable selling expenses, if any, incurred by the private foundation in the sale of the contributed property; and

b. At the choice of the private foundation, if the contributed property is either sold or distributed within 30 days of its receipt by the foundation, the amount of this fair market value is either—

1. The gross amount received on the sale of the property, less reasonable selling expenses incurred, or
2. An amount equal to the fair market value of the property on the date of its distribution to a public charity, and not the fair market value of the contributed property on the date of its contribution.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is Eileen Murphy of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, 26 CFR Part 1 is amended by revising § 1.170A-9(g)(2)(iv) to read as follows:

§ 1.170A-9 Definition of section 170(b)(1)(A) organization.

* * * * *

(g) Private nonoperating foundation distributing amount equal to all contributions received—

* * * * *

(2) Special rules. In applying subparagraph (1) of this paragraph—

* * * * *

(iv) For purposes of satisfying the requirements of section 170(b)(1)(D)(ii), except as provided to the contrary in this subdivision (iv), the fair market value of contributed property, determined on the date of contribution, is required to be used for purposes of determining whether an amount equal in value to 100 percent of the contributions received has been distributed. However, reasonable selling expenses, if any, incurred by the foundation in the sale of the contributed property may be deducted from the fair market value of the contributed property on the date of contribution, and distribution of the balance of the fair market value will satisfy the 100 percent distribution requirement. If a private foundation receives a contribution of property and, within 30 days thereafter, either sells the property or makes an in kind distribution of the property to a public charity, then at the choice of the private foundation the gross amount received on the sale (less reasonable selling expenses incurred) or the fair market value of the contributed property at the date of its distribution to the public charity, and not the fair market value of the contributed property on the date of contribution (less reasonable selling expenses, if any), is considered to be the amount of the fair market value of the contributed property for purposes of the requirements of section 170(b)(1)(D)(ii).

* * * * *

This Treasury decision liberalizes existing rules with respect to distributions of contributed property received by private foundations and is considered to be beneficial to all interested parties. For these reasons, it is found unnecessary to issue this Treasury decision with notice and public procedure under subsection (b) of section 553 of Title 5 of the United States Code.

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in section 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (68A Stat. 917, 26 U.S.C. 7805).

JEROME KURTZ,
Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Approved February 14, 1980.

DONALD C. LUBICK,
Assistant Secretary of the Treasury.

(Filed by the Office of the Federal Register on February 28, 1980; 8:45 a.m., and published in the issue of the Federal Register for February 29, 1980, 45 F.R. 13452)

26 CFR 1.302-1: General.

Whether a liquidating distribution by one corporation to a second corporation that includes stock in the second corporation that was held by the liquidating corporation constitutes a distribution in redemption by the second corporation to the extent it receives its own stock. See Rev. Rul. 80-101, below.

Section 311.—Taxability of Corporation on Distribution

(Also Sections 302, 331, 1001; 1.302-1, 1.331-1, 1.1001-1.)

Stock redemption; liquidation; stock for stock and other property. A corporation that transferred appreciated stock of another corporation in exchange for its own stock and other property in complete liquidation of the other corporation recognizes no gain or loss under section 311(a)(2) of the Code on the portion of the liquidating corporation's stock exchanged for its own stock of equal value, but recognizes gain under section 1001 on the portion exchanged for the other property.

Rev. Rul. 80-101

ISSUE

Do the nonrecognition of gain or loss provisions of section 311(a)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code apply to the receipt by a corporation (X) of its stock from another corporation (Y) upon the liquidation of Y?

FACTS

X corporation, an operating company, held 70 percent of the outstanding stock of Y corporation. A, an individual, held the other 30 percent of the outstanding Y stock. Y, a corporation engaged in holding certain investments, owned 25 percent of the outstanding X stock. The value of the X stock owned by Y constituted half of the net value of all of Y's assets. For various reasons, both X and A felt it would be desirable for Y to dispose of, or otherwise cease to hold, the X stock. After a series of negotiations, X and A agreed to liquidate Y and have Y distribute its assets, including the X stock, to X and A.

In accord with the plan of liquidation, Y paid all its liabilities and then distributed 70 percent of each remaining asset to X and 30 percent of each remaining asset to A. One-half of the value of the distribution to both X and A consisted of X stock. At the time of exchange, the fair market value of the Y stock held by X was 16*x* dollars and X's adjusted basis in the Y stock was 10*x* dollars. Therefore, X realized a gain of 6*x* dollars on the transaction.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Pursuant to section 336 of the Code, gain or loss realized by Y on the distribution of its property to X and A in complete liquidation is not recognized. The property received by A in the liquidating distribution from Y is treated as in full payment in exchange for A's Y stock pursuant to section 331(a), and the gain or loss realized is recognized pursuant to section 1001(c).

Upon the liquidation of Y, X in its capacity as a shareholder of Y received X stock and other assets from Y in exchange for the Y stock X owned. Under section 331(a) of the Code, the distribution is treated as received by X in full payment in exchange for the Y stock, and, under section 1001, the gain realized by X is recognized unless, as provided in section 1001(c), another provision of Subtitle A of the Code requires otherwise. There is no provision of the Code that provides nonrecognition for the gain realized by X on the liquidating distribution in its capacity as a shareholder.

However, the exchange by X of its Y stock for X stock owned by Y upon liquidation of Y meets the definition of a "redemption" as defined in section 317(b) of the Code (the acquisition by a corporation (X) of its stock from a shareholder (Y) in exchange for property (Y stock) as defined in section 317(a)). Section 311(a)(2) provides the general rule that gain or loss is not recognized to a corporation on a distribution of property with respect to its stock. Section 1.311-1(a) of the Income Tax Regulations states that the term "distributions with respect to its stock" includes distributions made in redemption of stock (other than distributions in complete or partial liquidation). Thus, since that portion of the transaction that resulted in X receiving its own stock from Y is a redemption, the general nonrecognition rule of section 311(a)(2) is applicable to that part of the Y stock that X transferred (distributed) to Y in exchange (redemption) for the X stock received from Y.

Moreover, since Y completely terminated its interest in X within the meaning of section 302(b)(3), and since the other requirements of section 311(d)(2)(A) are met, the provisions of section 311(d)(1) do not apply. Nor are any of the other exceptions to section 311(a) applicable.

Rev. Rul. 79-314, 1979-41 I.R.B. 10, holds in a similar situation that the nonrecognition provision of section 311(a) prevails over the recognition provisions of section 1001 of the Code where one corporation (X) acquires (redeems) part of its stock from a second corporation (Y) in exchange for Y stocked owned by X. Although the transaction in Rev. Rul. 79-314 did not involve the liquidation of Y, the holding therein that the nonrecognition provision of section 311(a) prevails over the general recognition provision of section 1001 is applicable to the transaction in the present case.

HOLDING

No gain is recognized to X under section 311(a)(2) on that part of the Y stock (one half) that was exchanged for X stock of equal value. However, gain is recognized to X under section 1001 on that part of the Y stock (one half) that was exchanged for property other than X stock. Thus, of the total 6*x* dollars gain realized by X 3*x* dollars is not recognized under section 311(a) and 3*x* dollars is recognized under section 1001.

Section 331.—Gain or Loss to Shareholders in Corporate Liquidations

26 CFR 1.331-1: Corporate liquidations.

Whether the provisions of section 311(a) of the Code prevail over the provisions of section 331(a) where part of the assets of each of two corporations includes some stock in the other corporation, one of the corporations is liquidated, and as part of the transaction there is an exchange of stock for stock. See Rev. Rul. 80-101, page 8.

Qualified stock options granted after May 20, 1976

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Final regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides final regulations relating to transitional rules for qualified stock options granted after May 20, 1976 and certain options exercised after May 20, 1981. Changes to the applicable tax law were made by the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1]. The regulations would provide the public with the guidance needed to comply with that Act and would affect grantors and grantees of stock options.

EFFECTIVE DATE: These regulations will be effective for taxable years ending after December 31, 1975.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGOUND

On December 18, 1978, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 1) under sections 422 and 424 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (43 FR 58830). The amendments were proposed to conform the regulations to section 603 in the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 1574). There was no request for a public hearing and accordingly none was held. One comment was received but that comment did not result in any changes to the proposed regulations because it was felt that the regulations do not require additional clarification, or the change would make the regulations inconsistent with the statute. After consideration of the comment regarding the proposed amendments, those amendments are adopted without change by this Treasury decision. The preamble to the notice of proposed rulemaking summarizes and explains the proposed amendments.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of this regulation is Annie R. Alexander of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, 26 CFR Part 1 is amended as follows:

Paragraph 1. Section 1.422 is deleted.

Par. 2. Section 1.422-2 is amended by revising the first sentence of paragraph (a)(1)(i) of § 1.422-2 and by inserting three new sentences immediately after that sentence, and by adding a new paragraph (i) to § 1.422-2. The revised and added provisions read as follows:

§ 1.422-2 Qualified stock options defined.

(a) Qualified stock option defined. (1)(i) The term "qualified stock option" means an option that meets the requirements of section 422(b) and this section. Generally, section 422(b) requires a qualified stock option to be granted to an individual after December 31, 1963, and before May 21, 1976. However, a qualified stock option may be granted after May 20, 1976, if it meets the requirements of section 422(c)(7). See paragraph (i) of this section for rules relating to options granted after May 20, 1976. * * *

(i) Certain options granted after May 20, 1976—(1) In general. An option granted to an individual after May 20, 1976 is not a qualified stock option unless the option meets the requirements of section 422(c)(7) and this paragraph. Generally, an option meets the requirements of section 422(c)(7) if it either is granted under a written plan adopted before May 21, 1976, or is substituted for a qualified stock option described in paragraph (i)(3) of this section. An option meeting the requirements of section 422(c)(7) and this paragraph that is exercised after May 20, 1981, will be treated under § 1.83-7(a) as if it were a nonqualified stock option without a readily ascertainable fair market value at the time of its grant.

(2) Options granted under a written plan adopted before May 21, 1976. (i) An option granted after May 20, 1976, is a qualified stock option if it otherwise meets the requirements of section 422(b) and this section and if the option is granted under a written plan that was adopted before May 21, 1976. A plan will be treated as having been adopted as of the date all actions needed for adoption have been completed. Ordinarily, a plan is adopted when approved by the board of directors of the granting corporation. However, if the board's action is subject to a condition or the happening of a particular event, the plan is adopted on the date the condition is met or the event occurs unless the board's resolution fixes the date of approval as the date of the board's action. For purposes of determining the date of the adoption of a plan, the date of the approval of the plan by the shareholders of the granting corporation is disregarded. Thus, it is immaterial whether the shareholders approved the plan before, on, or after May 21, 1976, although the plan must satisfy the requirements of paragraph (b) of this section, which requires that the shareholders approve the plan within 12 months before or after its adoption by the board. The authorization of specific grants of options to specific individuals under the plan is not required in order for options granted under the plan to be qualified stock options.

(ii) A corporation that merely changes its identity or place of incorporation may continue to grant qualified stock options under a written plan adopted before May 21, 1976, to the extent permissible had the change not occurred. In all other reorganizations a written option plan will be treated as being adopted after May 20, 1976, unless the corporation that adopted the plan before May 21, 1976, survives the reorganization. Of course, the surviving corporation may continue to grant options under the plan only to the extent it would have been able to do so had the reorganization not occurred.

(3) Substituted stock options. An option granted after May 20, 1976, is a qualified stock option if the option is an option that has been substituted, in a transaction to which section 425(a) applies (relating to certain corporate reorganizations, liquidations, etc.), for a qualified stock option granted before May 21, 1976 (or any option that is a qualified stock option under the requirements of section 422(c)(7)(A) or (B) and paragraph (i)(2) or (3) of this section.

(4) Modifications to option plans. An option plan adopted before May 21, 1976, may be modified after May 20, 1976, and options granted under such a plan, as modified, will be considered options granted under a plan adopted before May 21, 1976, unless the modification is considered the adoption of a new plan. See paragraph (b) of this section for rules relating to modifications that will be considered the adoption of a new plan. If a plan is modified after May 20, 1976, such that the modification is considered under paragraph (b) of this section to be the adoption of a new plan, any option granted as a result of such modification will not be a qualified stock option. An option will be considered to have been granted as a result of such modification if it could not have been granted but for such modification of the plan. For example, if the modification changes the terms of the options to be granted in such a way that the modification is considered the adoption of a new plan, then no option granted with such terms is a qualified stock option since it could not have been granted but for the modification. If a plan is modified to increase the number of shares that can be transferred upon exercise of the options granted under the plan, any option granted after the modification will be a qualified stock option only if the option could have been granted without the modification to the plan. For example, if the number of shares authorized under a plan is increased from 4,000 shares to 10,000 shares at a time when options have already been granted under the plan to purchase 3,000 of the previously authorized shares, an option granted after the modification will be a qualified stock option if it is not an option to purchase any of the additional 6,000 shares authorized by the modification. In determining for this purpose which shares are subject to a particular option, the first option granted after the modification will be considered an option to buy originally authorized shares to the extent there are any such shares not subject to a previously granted option. If options to buy originally authorized shares and options to buy additional shares are granted, the granting corporation may designate which options are options to buy originally authorized shares to the extent there are originally authorized shares not subject to a previously granted option. In the previous example, absent such a designation, if ten options were granted on different days after the plan modification, each option for the purchase of 700 shares, the first option would be a qualified stock option since 1,000 originally authorized shares are not subject to any previously granted option. The second option would not be a qualified stock option because it includes an option to buy 400 shares that were not originally authorized and therefore could not have been granted without the modification. If the order in which the ten options were granted could not be determined and no such designation were made under this paragraph, none of the options would be a qualified stock option. If the modification enlarges the class of employees eligible to receive options, any option granted to a newly eligible employee would not be a qualified stock option.

(5) Exercise of certain options after May 20, 1981. If a qualified stock option granted after May 20, 1976, is exercised after May 20, 1981, the option will be treated as if it were a nonqualified stock option that did not have a readily ascertainable fair market value at the time it was granted. Thus, if such a qualified stock option is exercised after May 20, 1981, section 421(a) will not apply to the transfer of stock pursuant to the exercise of the option, and such transfer will be taxed under section 83. See § 1.83-7(a) for rules relating to the treatment of nonqualified stock options under section 83.

Par. 3. Section 1.424 is deleted.

Par. 4. Section 1.424-2 is amended by adding a new paragraph (d)(5) to read as follows:

§ 1.424-2 Restricted stock options.

* * * * *

(d) Certain options granted after December 31, 1963. * * *

* * * * *

(5) An option granted after December 31, 1963, that is treated as a restricted stock option under section 424(c)(3) and this paragraph must be exercised before May 21, 1981, in order for section 421(a) to apply to the transfer of stock pursuant to such exercise. If such an option is exercised after May 20, 1981, section 421(a) will not apply to the transfer of stock pursuant to such exercise, and section 83 will apply to such transfer as if the option were a nonqualified stock option without a readily ascertainable fair market value at the time of its grant. See § 1.83-7(a) for rules relating to the treatment of nonqualified stock options under section 83.

26 CFR 1.424-2: Restricted stock options.

Section 461.—General Rule for Taxable Year of Deduction

26 CFR 1.461-1: General rule for taxable year of deduction.
(Also Sections 61, 162; 1.61-4, 1.162-12.)

Livestock acquired for resale; transportation costs. The cost of transportation incurred in acquiring livestock is part of the cost of the livestock that is deductible by a cash method farmer when the livestock are sold.

Rev. Rul. 80-102

ISSUE

Are transportation-in costs part of the cost of livestock that is deductible for the taxable year in which the livestock are sold by a farmer using the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting?

FACTS

X is a partnership engaged in the business of farming and uses the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting. X purchases calves from various ranchers and fattens them on its own grassland until the calves are large enough to go to a feedlot. Afterwards, the cattle are either sold as yearlings or sent to a feedlot to be sold later to a packing plant.

When X purchases the calves from ranchers, X pays the freight from the seller's ranch to its own grassland. This freight cost (hereinafter transportation-in cost) is either paid separately by X or is separately stated on the invoice given to X at the time of purchase. X treats the transportation-in cost as a deductible expense in the year in which paid regardless of when the livestock are sold.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 1.461-1(a)(1) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that under the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting amounts representing allowable deductions shall, as a general rule, be taken into account for the taxable year in which paid.

Section 1.162-12(a) of the regulations provides that a farmer who operates a farm for profit is entitled to deduct from gross income as necessary expenses all amounts actually expended in carrying on the business of farming. The purchase of feed and other costs connected with raising livestock may be treated as expense deductions.

Section 1.61-4(a) of the regulations provides that a farmer using the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting shall include in gross income the profit from the sale of purchased livestock and that the profit from such sale is to be ascertained by deducting the cost from the sales price in the year in which the sale occurs. In Alexander v. Commissioner, 22 T.C. 234 (1954), acq., 1954-2 C.B. 3, the court held that the predecessor of the above regulation was valid.

Rev. Rul. 72-113, 1972-1 C.B. 99 holds that when a taxpayer in the business of raising horses purchases several horses for breeding purposes, the transportation cost and the incidental charges incurred en route are capital expenditures under section 263(a) of the Code and are includible in the basis of the horses acquired.

In the present situation, X incurred the transportation-in cost when it purchased the calves. Section 1.162-12(a) of the regulations allows a deduction from gross income for all amounts actually expended in connection with raising livestock. But the deductible expenses under section 1.162-12(a) do not include transportation-in costs because transportation-in costs are incurred in purchasing livestock, not in raising livestock. See Rev. Rul. 72-113.

HOLDING

Transportation-in costs are part of the cost of livestock that is deductible when the livestock are sold by a farmer using the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

Section 507.—Termination of Private Foundation Status

26 CFR 1.507-3: Special rules; transferee foundations.

Transitional rules for acts of self-dealing between private foundations and disqualified persons. See T.D. 7678, page 14.

Section 508.—Special Rules with Respect to Section 501(c)(3) Organizations

26 CFR 1.508-3: Governing instruments.

Transitional rules for acts of self-dealing between private foundations and disqualified persons. See T.D. 7678, page 14.

Section 527.—Political Organizations

Political organization; "exempt function income". A political organization sold reproductions of an original work of art, which was not of a political nature, over a period of several months to raise operating funds. The sales were not undertaken to encourage support (other than financial) for the organization or for any individual seeking political office. The proceeds were not "exempt function income" within the meaning of section 527(c)(3)(C) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-103

ISSUE

Are proceeds received by a political organization from sales of art reproductions "exempt function income" within the meaning of section 527(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954?

FACTS

An organization that qualifies as a political organization under section 527(e)(1) of the Code and files its returns on a calendar year basis solicited a well-known artist to produce a work of art to be reproduced for sale by the organization to raise funds. The artist produced an original work, the subject of which was not of a political nature, and donated it to the organization. The organization contracted with a local gallery, for a fee, to have the work reproduced and to sell the reproductions at the gallery over a period of several months. At the end of this period, the gallery turned over the proceeds from the sales, less the negotiated fee, to the organization.

The sole purpose of the sales was to raise funds for the operation of the organization. The sales were not undertaken to encourage support (aside from financial) for the organization or for any individual seeking political office.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 527(c)(1) of the Code excludes "exempt function income" from the taxable income of a political organization.

Section 527(c)(3) of the Code provides that the term "exempt function income" means any amount segregated for exempt function use that is received as (A) a contribution of money or other property, (B) membership dues, a membership fee or assessment from a member of the political organization, (C) proceeds from a political fund raising or entertainment event, or proceeds from the sale of political campaign materials, that are not received in the ordinary course of any trade or business, or (D) proceeds from the conducting of any bingo game (as defined in section 513(f)(2)).

In discussing the taxation of political organizations, the Senate Finance Committee stated that political organizations are not to be taxed on proceeds received from political fund raising or political entertainment events, or proceeds from the sale of political campaign materials which are not received in the ordinary course of any trade or business. Thus, proceeds received from casual sporadic fund raising events or political entertainment events, such as an annual political dinner or an annual athletic exhibition, are to be treated as exempt function income. Similar fund raising events would include political breakfasts, receptions, picnics, dances, etc. However, in all of these cases the income would be exempt function income only if the event is a political event and is not carried on in the ordinary course of a trade or business. Factors to be taken into account in determining whether an activity is a trade or business, for purposes of this section, are to include the frequency of the event, the manner in which the event is conducted, and the span of time over which the event is carried on. Whether an event is a political fund raiser or a political entertainment event will depend upon the facts and circumstances of the particular event, taking into account the extent to which the event is related to a political activity aside from the need of the organization for income or funds. S. Rep. No. 1357, 93rd Cong., 2d Sess. 1, 28 (1974), 1975-1 C.B. 517, 533.

In this case, the sales of the reproductions were made solely for fund raising purposes, and, thus, were not related to a political activity aside from the need of the political organization to raise funds. In addition, the sales occurred over a period of several months. Therefore, the proceeds from the sales (1) were not received from a specific political fund raising event or activity, and (2) were received in the ordinary course of a trade or business. Also, the sales were not sales of political campaign materials, since the art work was not of a political nature.

HOLDING

Proceeds received by the political organization from the sales of art reproductions are not "exempt function income" within the meaning of section 527(c)(3)(C) of the Code.

Section 537.—Reasonable Needs of the Business

26 CFR 1.537-1: Reasonable needs of the business.

Transitional rules for acts of self-dealing between private foundations and disqualified persons. See T.D. 7678, page 14.

26 CFR 1.664-3: Charitable remainder unitrust.

Charitable remainder unitrust; change in percentage paid. The governing instrument of a trust, which otherwise qualifies as a charitable remainder unitrust, provides for an increase in the percentage to be paid to the income beneficiary upon the death of the donor. The trust agreement of a similar trust provides that upon the death of the first income beneficiary, an increased percentage will be paid to a new beneficiary. These provisions do not meet the "fixed percentage" requirement of section 664 of the Code, and the trusts do not qualify as charitable remainder unitrusts.

Rev. Rul. 80-104

ISSUE

Do the trusts described below qualify as charitable remainder unitrusts under section 664 of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

Situation 1. The governing instrument of a trust established by a taxpayer provides that the trustee will pay A, the unitrust amount beneficiary, seven percent of the net fair market value of the trust assets, valued annually, until the death of the donor. Upon the death of the donor the trustee is to pay A nine percent of the net fair market value of the trust assets until death. The trust otherwise meets all the requirements of a charitable remainder unitrust set forth in section 664 of the Code and the underlying regulations.

Situation 2. The facts are the same as above, except that the trust agreement provides that the trustee shall pay A seven percent until A's death, and nine percent thereafter to B until B's death.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 664(d)(2)(A) of the Code provides that a charitable remainder unitrust is a trust from which a fixed percentage (which is not less than five percent) of the net fair market value of its assets, valued annually, is to be paid, not less often than annually, to one or more persons (at least one of which is not an organization described in section 170(c) and, in the case of individuals, only to an individual who is living at the time of the creation of the trust) for a term of years (not in excess of 20 years) or for the life or lives of such individual or individuals.

Section 664(d)(2)(B) and (C) of the Code provide that a charitable remainder unitrust is a trust from which no amount other than the payments described in section 664(d)(2)(A) may be paid to or for the use of any person other an organization described in section 170(c), and following the termination of the payments, the remainder interest in the trust is to be transferred to, or for the use of, an organization described in section 170(c) or is to be retained by the trust for such a use.

Section 1.664-3(a)(1)(ii) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that a fixed percentage must be payable each year in the period specified by section 1.664-3(a)(5). This percentage may be expressed either as a fraction or as a percentage; and a percentage is fixed if it is the same either as to each recipient or as to the total percentage payable each year of the period specified in section 1.664-3(a)(5). Thus, provision for a fixed percentage that is the same every year to one income recipient until death and concurrently a fixed percentage that is the same every year to a second income recipient until death (the fixed percentage to each to terminate at their respective deaths) satisfies the rule, if the percentage given to each recipient is not less than five percent. Also, a fixed percentage (not less than five percent) to two income recipients for their joint lives and then to the survivor, satisfies the rule.

Section 1.664-3(a)(5)(i) of the regulations provides that the fixed percentage of section 1.664-3(a)(1) is payable for the period beginning with the first year of the charitable remainder trust and continues either for the life or lives of a named individual or individuals or for a term of years not to exceed 20 years.

Section 1.664-3(a)(2) of the regulations provides that the fixed percentage described in section 1.664-3(a)(1) with respect to all beneficiaries taken together must not be less than five percent. Section 1.664(a)(5)(ii) provides that this five percent requirement must be met until the termination of all of the payments required under section 1.664-3(a)(1).

Section 1.664-3(a)(1)(ii) and 3(a)(2)(ii) of the regulations permit a charitable remainder trust to provide for a reduction of the fixed percentage payable upon the death of a recipient or the expiration of a term of years provided that a distribution is made to a qualified charity at the death of such recipient or the expiration of such term of years and the total of the percentage payable after such distribution is not less than five percent.

In order to qualify as a charitable remainder unitrust, the provisions of a governing instrument (that has not adopted the income exception alternative of section 1.664-3(a)(1)(i)(b) of the regulations), must provide for an annual payout that meets the definition of a fixed percentage provided in section 1.664-3(a)(1)(ii) either as to each recipient or as to the total percentage payable each year, and also such payout must be "fixed" for the entire duration of the period prescribed in section 1.664-3(a)(5).

Thus, under these provisions of the Code and regulations, if it is possible for the percentage of the net fair market value of the assets of the trust paid annually to change (1) as to the total percentage payable each year during the period commencing with the first year of the charitable remainder trust and terminating with the last of all the annual payments, and also (2) as to the individual recipients for the duration of the period commencing with the first year of the charitable remainder trust and continuing for a term not to exceed 20 years, or until the death of the respective recipients, then the percentage is not fixed, unless it is reduced as prescribed in section 1.664-3(a)(1)(ii) of the regulations.

HOLDINGS

Situation 1. Because A could survive the donor, it is possible for the percentage of the net fair market value of the trust's assets payable in the first year of the trust (seven percent) to be different from that payable at the termination of the payout period (nine percent), with respect to both the total percentage payable and also the amount payable to the individual recipient, A. Therefore, such percentage is not fixed and the trust does not qualify as a charitable remainder unitrust within the meaning of section 664 of the Code.

Situation 2. Because B could survive A, it is possible for the total percentage of the net fair market value of the trust's assets payable, upon termination of all the required annual payouts (nine percent), to be different from the total percentage payable in the first year of the trust (seven percent). Therefore, the percentage is not fixed as to the total percentage payable. Similarly, because it is possible for the percentage payable to each recipient until the time of each recipient's respective deaths (seven percent and nine percent) to be different from the percentage payable to each recipient in the first year of the trust (seven percent and zero percent, depending on whether A survived the first year), the percentage is not fixed as to each recipient; and the trust does not qualify as a charitable remainder unitrust within the meaning of section 664 of the Code.

26 CFR 1.1001-1: Computation of gain or loss.

Whether the provisions of section 311(a) of the Code prevail over the provisions of section 1001(c) in a situation where because of stock cross-ownership the liquidation of one corporation constitutes, in part, a redemption by another corporation. See Rev. Rul. 80-101, page 8.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On August 31, 1979, proposed amendments to the Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 1) under sections 507, 508 and 537 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, and to the Foundation Excise Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 53) under section 4941 of the Code were published in the Federal Register (44 FR 51242). The amendments were proposed to conform the regulations to sections 1301 and 1309 of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (90 State. 1713, 1729). No comments were received and no public hearing was requested or held. This Treasury decision adopts the proposed amendments without change.

EXPLANATION OF REGULATIONS

Section 101(l)(2) of the Tax Reform Act of 1969 [Pub. L. 91-172, 1969-3 C.B. 10, 35] (83 Stat. 533) created special transitional rules that exempted certain transactions between private foundations and disqualified persons from the definition of self-dealing. Under prior law, these rules permitted private foundations to sell, exchange, or otherwise dispose of certain "nonexcess" business holdings to disqualified persons before January 1, 1975. There was no transitional rule that permitted the disposition of property leased by a private foundation to a disqualified person. Section 1309 of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 extends the rule permitting disposition of "nonexcess" business holdings to dispositions made after October 4, 1976, and before January 1, 1977. Section 1301 of the Act generally permits a foundation to sell, exchange, or otherwise dispose of certain property to a disqualified person where the property is being leased to the disqualified person pursuant to a binding contract in effect on October 9, 1969, if the foundation receives no less than fair market value for the property. This provision applies to dispositions made after October 4, 1976, and befor January 1, 1978.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is Margie Glass of the Employee Plans and Exempt Organizations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly the following amendments to 26 CFR Parts 1 and 53 are hereby adopted:

Accordingly, a governing instrument complying with the requirements of subparagraph (1) of this paragraph may incorporate any savings provision contained in section 101(l)(2), (3), (4) or (5) of the Tax Reform Act of 1969, as amended by sections 1301 and 1309 of the Tax Reform Act of 1976, as a specific exception to the general provisions of paragraph (a) of this section. In addition, in the absence of any express provisions to the contrary, the exceptions contained in such savings provisions will generally be regarded as contained in a governing instrument meeting the requirements of subparagraph (1) of this paragraph.

Par. 3. The Income Tax Regulations are further amended by revising paragraph (d)(1)(iii) of § 1.537-1 to read as follows:

FOUNDATION EXCISE TAX REGULATIONS
(26 CFR Part 53)

Par. 4. The Foundation Excise Tax Regulations, 26 CFR Part 53, are amended by revising the last sentence of paragraph (b)(1) of § 53.4941(d)-4 and by adding a new paragraph (f) to that section. These revised and added provisions read as follows:

§ 53.4941(d)-4 Transitional rules.

* * * * *

(b) Disposition of certain business holdings—(1) In general. * * * For purposes of applying this paragraph in the case of a disposition completed before January 1, 1975, or after October 4, 1976, and before January 1, 1977, the amount of excess business holdings is determined under section 4943(c) without taking subsection (c)(4) into account.

* * * * *

(f) Disposition of leased property—(1) In general. Under section 101 (l)(2)(F) of the Tax Reform Act of 1969, as amended by the Tax Reform Act of 1976 (90 Stat. 1713), the sale, exchange or other disposition (other than by lease) to a disqualified person of property being leased to the disqualified person by a private foundation is not an act of self-dealing if—

(i) The private foundation is leasing substantially all of the property to the disqualified person under a lease to which paragraph (c) of this section applies;

(ii) The disposition occurs after October 4, 1976, and before January 1, 1978; and

(iii) The disposition satisfies the requirements of paragraph (f)(2) of this section.

(2) Terms of disposition. Paragraph (f)(1) of this section applies only if—

(i) The private fundation receives an amount that equals or exceeds the fair market value of the property either at the time of the disposition or at the time (after June 30, 1976) the contract for such disposition was executed;

(ii) In computing the fair market value of the property, no diminution of that value results from the fact that the property is subject to any lease to disqualified persons; and

(iii) At the time with respect to which subdivision (f)(2)(i) of this section is applied, the transaction would not have constituted a prohibited transaction within the meaning of section 503(b) or the corresponding provisions of prior law if those provisions had been applied at the time of the transaction.

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in section 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (68A Stat. 917; 26 U.S.C. 7805).

Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Part IV. Items of General Interest

Correction to 1979 Form 4874 Instructions

Announcement 80-43

Certain instructions for the 1979 Form 4874, Credit for Work Incentive (WIN) Program Expenses, do not apply to an employer's WIN credit that is based on salaries or wages that are not deductible for tax purposes.

These instructions are printed at the top of the 1979 Form 4874 and in General Instruction E of the related instructions. They state that the taxpayer's salary and wage expense deduction must be reduced by the allowable WIN credit on line 11 of the form. The requirement to reduce salaries and wages by the allowable WIN credit does not apply to any part of a taxpayer's WIN credit on line 10 (and included in line 11) that relates to the nonbusiness employee's salary or wages that are not deductible for tax purposes.

If a taxpayer has already filed a 1979 income tax return on which a salary and wage deduction was incorrectly reduced as explained above, the taxpayers should file Form 1040X or the appropriate amended return to make a correction. This would most likely have happened where a taxpayer claimed a WIN credit for both business and nonbusiness employees.

Disaster Areas

The President of the United States has determined that the areas listed below were adversely affected by disasters of sufficient sevrity and magnitude to warrant Federal disaster assistance.

Taxpayers who suffered losses in these areas as a result of these disasters may elect the special tax treatment provided under section 165(h) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. Section 1.165-11 of the Income Tax Regulations sets forth the procedure for making this election. Losses not incurred with respect to a trade or business or any transaction entered into for profit will not qualify for treatment under section 165(h) unless such losses qualify as casualty losses.

Type of disaster: Severe storms and flooding

Begun on or about: February 13, 1980

Optional Trust Statement in Form 5500 Package

Announcement 80-45

An optional trust statement (trust statement), which may be completed by a trustee of an employee benefit trust as the annual return of that trust, has been inserted into the instructions of the Form 5500 package for 1979 and subsequent years.

To commence the running of the statute of limitations for any trust described in section 401(a) of the Internal Revenue Code and exempt from tax under section 501(a), or for any custodial account described in section 401(f), the trustee or custodian may file the trust statement for years ending with or within plan years that begin January 1, 1979, or later. This statement will be treated as a return of the trust for the period for which it is filed.

The trust statement may be filed only as an attachment to an "Annual Return/Report of Employee Benefit Plan" (Form 5500, 5500-C, 5500-G, or 5500-K). The Service will not accept separate filings of the trust statement. The trustee may use or copy the trust statement from the instructions of the Form 5500 series return. Any employer or administrator of a plan whose assets comprise all or a portion of a trust's corpus may attach a complete copy of the trust statement to that plan's Annual Return filing for each trust which formed part of the plan during the plan year. If assets from two or more plans are held in a single trust, the trust statement may be attached to the Form 5500 series filing of any one of those plans.

For 1979 and later years the statutory period during which the Service may assess taxes under section 6501(a) of the Code (other than taxes for unrelated business income) against a trust which was believed to be tax exempt but later was determined not to be so exempt, expires three years after the later of : 1) the date an employer or administrator files its Form 5500 series return, with the trust statement attached; or 2) the last day allowed by law or regulation for filing the returns (with the trust statement attached). If the trust statement is not filed, the statute of limitations will not begin to run for the trust.

For trust years ending on or after December 31, 1975, and with or within plan years that begin before January 1, 1979, for ease of administration, the Service will treat the filing of the Annual Return (Form 550 series) by the employer or administrator as sufficient to begin the running of the statute of limitations for the trust.

With respect to unrelated business income, the statute of limitations begins to run when the Form 990-T, Exempt Organization Business Income Tax Return, is filed. See Rev. Rul. 62-10 1962-1 C.B. 305, and Rev. Rul. 69-247, 1969-1 C.B. 303.

Announcement 80-47

The 1980 version of Form 1099-PATR, Statement for Recipients (Patrons) of Taxable Distributions Received From Cooperatives, has been revised to delete boxes 5 and 6. These boxes were added to the 1979 version to allow cooperatives to report any unused investment credit or energy investment credit that they elect to pass through to their patrons. Such a passthrough is permitted by the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1].

Regulations are now being developed that will explain the new reporting method.

The revised form is available at Internal Revenue Service district offices.

The written submissions should be self-explanatory and in sufficient detail to communicate clearly what is being suggested. Careful consideration will be given to all comments and suggestions received. However, individual responses to the submissions will not be made because of the volume of correspondence involved.

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of a prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on Subpart A, Tax Conventions and related Treasury Decisions and Revenue Rulings; Subpart B, Legislation and related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of Revenue Rulings, Revenue Procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical Indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

Rul. 54-193 superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-105

ISSUE

Does the conversion of a federal mutual savings and loan association to a state stock savings and loan association under the circumstances described below, constitute a reorganization within the meaning of section 368(a) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

X is a federal mutual savings and loan association chartered pursuant to the Home Owner's Loan Act of 1933, as amended, 48 Stat. 128, 12 U.S.C. § 1461 et seq. X is a member of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC) and is subject to the rules and regulations of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board (FHLBB).

As a mutual savings and loan association X has no authorized capital stock. Instead, the mutual savings and loan has a unique equity structure. An X savings depositor is entitled to interest on the depositor's account balance that is declared and paid by X. The maximum permissible interest rate that X may pay its depositors is established by the FHLBB. A savings depositor has no right to a distribution of any earnings of X but rather these amounts become retained earnings of X. Although an X savings depositor does have a right to share pro rata, with respect to the amount in the depositor's savings account as a fraction of the sum of all savings accounts, in any liquidation proceeds distributed, liquidation requires approval by the FHLBB which rarely, if ever, approves liquidation of a solvent company. Voting rights in X are held by its savings depositors and borrowers, with each savings depositor being entitled to 1 vote for each 100 dollars or fraction thereof deposited in a savings account (up to a maximum number of 50 votes per depositor) and each borrower being entitled to 1 vote per loan. However, actual voting control of X is held by its board of directors through voting proxies. All of these interests of the X savings depositors cease when a depositor closes the account with X.

In order to stimulate growth and expansion of X through the raising of additional capital, the board of directors of X adopted a plan of conversion whereby X will convert itself into a state stock savings and loan association. The conversion will be accomplished pursuant to the rules and regulations of the FHLBB and the banking authority of state A and a majority of the total outstanding votes of the association members.

Under the plan of conversion, X will issue up to 1,000,000 shares of 5 dollar par value voting permanent reserve fund common stock. The X stock will be sold to qualified purchasers pursuant to nontransferable subscription rights. The price per share of the X stock will be determined by an independent appraiser and will represent the fair market value of X at the time of conversion, exclusive of X's net worth at that time. As required by FHLBB regulations, the nontransferable subscription rights will be offered first without compensation therefor to persons who were depositors of X on a date not less than 90 days before the plan is adopted (eligible account holders). To the extent that there are shares available after these depositors have exercised their rights, then rights to subscribe will be offered to the remaining depositors and if any shares are then available, to the borrowers of X. As permitted by the FHLBB regulations, unsubscribed for stock may then be purchased by the directors, officers and employees of X, but limited in amount to 25 percent of the total offering of shares. Any remaining balance of the unsubscribed for stock will thereafter be made available to the public at the same offering price.

After X converts itself to a stock savings and loan association all voting rights not attributable to X's stock will expire. A liquidation account will be established in an amount equal to the net worth of X as of the time of the conversion. While the establishment of the liquidation account will not operate to restrict X's use of its net worth, each eligible account holder who maintains a savings account in X at the time of conversion will have an interest in a portion of the liquidation account balance. This interest constitutes a right to receive an amount representing the depositor's interest in the net worth of X at the time of the conversion before any liquidation distribution can be made with respect to capital stock. An eligible account holder's interest in the liquidation account will never be increased. It will, however, be decreased to reflect subsequent withdrawals from the depositor's account that reduce the amount in the depositor's account below the amount in such account at the time of conversion.

The conversion will not interrupt the business of X, and its business will continue as usual. Each depositor will retain a withdrawable savings account or accounts equal in amount to the withdrawable account at the time of conversion. Mortgage loans of X will remain unchanged and retain their same characteristics after the conversion. X will continue its membership in the FSLIC and will remain subject to the regulatory authority of the FHLBB.

LAW, ANALYSIS AND HOLDINGS

The financial structure and control of federal regulated savings and loan associations, such as those described above, are unique among business organizations. Accordingly, the law and analysis as applied to these conversions is peculiar to such associations.

Section 368(a)(1)(F) of the Code provides that a mere change in identity, form or place of organization, however effected, is a reorganization.

If X converts itself from a federal mutual savings and loan association to a state stock savings and loan association the changes at the corporate level other than its place of organization and form of organization described above will be insubstantial. X will continue its business in the same manner. It will have the same savings accounts and loans; it will continue its membership in the FSLIC; and it will remain subject to the regulatory authority of the FHLBB. Since the equity interest of a depositor in a mutual savings and loan association is more nominal than real, unlike that of a shareholder in a corporation, the conversion into a state stock savings and loan association is a mere change in identity, form, or place of organization within the meaning of section 368(a)(1)(F).

If X converted itself from a federal mutual savings and loan association to a federal stock savings and loan association, the same result would obtain. Likewise, the same result would obtain if a state chartered mutual savings and loan association which was subject to the FHLBB regulations converted itself to a stock savings and loan association in the same state.

Thrift shop; consignment sales. An organization operates a thrift shop that sells items that are either donated or received on consignment. Substantially all of the work in operating the thrift shop is performed without compensation, all transactions are at arm's length, and all profits are distributed to section 501(c)(3) organizations. The organization is not a feeder organization described in section 502(a) of the Code and qualifies for exemption as an organization operated for charitable purposes.

Rev. Rul. 80-106

ISSUES

(1) Is the organization described below that operates a thrift shop, substantially all the work in the operation of which is performed without compensation, a feeder organization within the meaning of section 502 of the Internal Revenue Code?

(2) Does a nonprofit organization that operates a thrift shop that sells consigned goods as well as donated goods in the manner described below qualify for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code?

FACTS

The organization operates a thrift shop that sells used clothing and household furnishings to the general public. All of the organization's profits are required by its governing documents to be distributed to specified organizations that are described in section 501(c)(3) of the Code. Substantially all of the work in operating the thrift shop is performed by volunteers without compensation.

The items sold by the organization are collected from the general public. Some items are donated, but most are received on consignment. In such cases, the organization and the consignor enter into an arm's-length agreement that includes the following provisions: (1) the retail price of the item will be agreed upon by the consignor and the organization; (2) if any item on consignment is not sold within a specified period of time, it will become a donation to the organization unless the consignor picks it up before the end of the period; and (3) the organization will pay the consignor a reasonable fixed percentage of the retail price received and will retain the remaining amount.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 501(c)(3) of the Code provides for exemption from federal income tax of organizations organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes, no part of the net earnings of which inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.

Section 502(a) of the Code provides that an organization operated for the primary purpose of carrying on a trade or business for profit shall not be exempt from taxation under section 501 on the ground that all of its profits are payable to one or more organizations exempt from taxation under section 501.

Section 502(b)(2) provides that the term "trade or business" shall not include any trade or business in which substantially all the work in carrying on such trade or business is performed for the organization without compensation.

Section 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(1)(ii) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that an organization is not organized or operated exclusively for one or more charitable purposes unless it serves a public rather than a private interest.

Section 1.501(c)(3)-1(e)(1) of the regulations provides that an organization may meet the requirements of section 501(c)(3) although it operates a trade or business as a substantial part of its activities, if the operation of such trade or business is in furtherance of the organization's exempt purpose or purposes and if the organization is not organized or operated for the primary purpose of carrying on an unrelated trade or business, as defined in section 513.

Section 513(a)(1) of the Code provides that the term "unrelated trade or business" does not include any trade or business in which substantially all the work in carrying on such trade or business is performed for the organization without compensation.

The organization was created to serve the group of exempt organizations by obtaining donated and consigned items on behalf of the exempt organizations and converting the items to cash for charitable uses with a minimum of expense by the use of volunteer labor. Pursuant to section 502(b)(2) of the Code, the organization is not a feeder organization described in section 502(a) because substantially all the work is performed without compensation. For the same reason, pursuant to section 1.501(c)(3)-1(e)(1) of the regulations, the organization is not organized and operated for the primary purpose of carrying on an unrelated trade or business as defined in section 513.

Expenditures made by an organization for the acquisition of inventory do not constitute inurement of the organization's income to the seller if the purchase price is reasonable. In this case, the organization's method of inventory acquisition is through a consignment arrangement in which the purchase price paid to the consignor is a reasonable fixed percentage of the retail sales price.

In this case, all transactions between the consignors and the organization are at arm's-length. The amounts received by the consignors are reasonable in relation to the retail sales prices, and any benefit to the consignors is clearly incidental to the charitable purposes served by the organization. Thus, the sale of items on consignment does not result in the inurement of the organization's net income to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, nor do the transactions serve a private rather than a public interest.

HOLDINGS

(1) An organization that operates a thrift shop, substantially all the work in the operation of which is performed without compensation, is not a feeder organization described in section 502(a) of the Code.

(2) The sale of items on consignment by a nonprofit organization that operates a thrift shop does not result in the inurement of net earnings to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, nor do the transactions serve a private rather than a public interest. Therefore, the organization is operated exclusively for charitable purposes and is exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Code.

APPLICATION INSTRUCTIONS

Even though an organization considers itself within the scope of this revenue ruling, it must file an application on Form 1023, Application for Recognition of Exemption, in order to be recognized by the Service as exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. See sections 1.501(a)-1 and 1.508-1(a) of the regulations. In accordance with the instructions to Form 1023, the application should be filed with the District Director of Internal Revenue for the key district indicated herein.

Public utility stockholders' organization. An organization of individuals and institutions, having beneficial interests in shares of any public utility located in the state, that was formed to promote the interests of the public utility industry and its stockholders by preparing and filing statements relating to public utility matters pending before state and federal agencies and legislative bodies and by publishing a newsletter about matters affecting the stockholders does not qualify for exemption under section 501(c)(4) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-107

ISSUE

Under the circumstances described below, does a membership organization open to individuals and institutions having a beneficial interest in shares of any public utility company located in a certain state qualify for exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The organization's purposes are the expansion of industry, the creation of employment, the increase of scientific knowledge, and the support of economic growth through the advancement of the interests of persons who invest in public utility stocks.

The organization prepares and files, on behalf of the public utility companies in which its members own shares, statements relating to rate and regulatory matters pending before the state public utilities commission and other state and federal regulatory agencies and legislative bodies. The organization also distributes among its members a newsletter concerning specific matters affecting public utility shareholders.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 501(c)(4) of the Code provides for the exemption from federal income tax of civic leagues or organizations not organized for profit but operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare.

Section 1.501(c)(4)-1(a)(2) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that an organization is operated exclusively for the promotion of social welfare if it is primarily engaged in promoting in some way the common good and general welfare of the people of the community. An organization embraced within this section is one that is operated primarily for the purpose of bringing about civic betterments and social improvements.

An organization that is operated essentially for the private benefit of its members is not primarily engaged in activities for the common good and general welfare of the people of the community. See Rev. Rul. 73-306, 1973-2 C.B. 179.

In this case, the primary beneficiaries of the organization's activities are its members, together with other individuals who own shares in the public utlity companies of the state. Therefore, the organization is primarily operated to serve private interests rather than the interests of the community as a whole.

HOLDING

An organization, which is open to individuals and institutions having a beneficial interest in shares of any public utility company located in the state, in the manner described above, does not qualify for exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(4) of the Code.

An organization that otherwise qualifies for exemption under both section 501(c)(3) and section 501(c)(4) of the Code filed the notice required by section 508(a) more than 15 months after the end of the month in which it was organized. The organization may apply for and obtain exemption under section 501(c)(4) from the date of its inception to the date the exemption under section 501(c)(3) becomes effective.

Rev. Rul. 80-108

ISSUE AND FACTS

May an organization, which otherwise qualifies for exemption from federal income tax under both section 501(c)(3) and section 501(c)(4) of the Internal Revenue Code, and which did not file for recognition of exemption under section 501(c)(3) within 15 months from the end of the month in which it was organized as required by section 1.508-1(a)(2)(i) of the Income Tax Regulations, establish that it qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(4) from the date of its organization to the date its exemption under section 501(c)(3) becomes effective?

HOLDING

Because the organization qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(4) of the Code from the date of its organization, it may apply for and obtain such status for the period during which section 1.508-1(a)(2)(i) of the regulation precludes it from being exempt under section 501(c)(3).

APPLICATION INSTRUCTIONS

Even though an organization considers itself within the scope of this Revenue Ruling, it must file an application on Form 1024, Application for Recognition of Exemption, in order to be recognized by the Service as exempt under section 501(c)(4) of the Code. See section 1.501(a)-1 of the regulations. In accordance with the instructions to Form 1024, the application should be filed with the District Director of Internal Revenue for the key district indicated therein.

Section 612.—Basis for Cost Depletion

26 CFR 1.612-4: Charges to capital and to expense in case of oil and gas wells.
(Also Sections 263, 614, 7805; 1.263(c)-1, 1.614-1, 301.7805-1.)

Intangible drilling costs; operating interests in separate tracts. A taxpayer agreed to drill and operate oil wells on each of two noncontiguous tracts in exchange for the entire operating interest in each tract until the aggregate gross income from both tracts equaled the cost of developing and operating both tracts and a 75 percent operating interest in each tract thereafter. The taxpayer's deduction for intangible drilling and development costs is limited to the portion of those costs attributable to the 75 percent operating interest in each tract. Rev. Rul. 70-336 modified.

Rev. Rul. 80-109

ISSUE

Whether a taxpayer is entitled to deduct all of the intangible drilling and development costs (IDC) incurred in developing two tracts of land for the production of oil and gas under the carrying arrangement discussed below.

FACTS

L owned the operating interests in two undeveloped noncontiguous tracts that were situated on the same geologic prospect. Under a joint venture agreement betwween O (the carrying party) and L (the carried party), O agreed to drill, complete, equip, and operate an initial well on each of these tracts. O also agreed to drill and complete any additional wells necessary to develop each tract. In return for paying these costs, O received the entire operating interest in each tract and was entitled to the entire income until the aggregate gross income from both tracts equaled the sum of all of O's costs of drilling, completing, equipping, and operating the wells on both tracts. Thereafter, in each tract, O will own a "permanent" operating interest of 75 percent, will pay 75 percent of the operating costs, and will be entitled to 75 percent of all oil and gas production. And L will own a permanent operating interest of 25 percent, will pay 25 percent of the operating costs, and will be entitled to 25 percent of all oil and gas produced.

O and L made the proper election for the joint venture to be excluded from the application of the provisions of subchapter K, Chapter 1, Subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code. O properly elected to treat IDC as expenses.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Although the two tracts are situated on the same prospect and are expected to produce from the same deposit, O's operating interest in each of the two tracts is a separate property because the operating interests in separate noncontiguous tracts cannot be combined and treated as one property. (Section 614(b)(1)(B) of the Code.)

If drilling and development is undertaken for the grant of or assignment of a fraction of the operating rights, the option to expense IDC is only available for the fraction of the IDC that is attributable to the fractional interest acquired. (Section 1.612-4(a) of the regulations.)

Rev. Rul. 70-336, 1970-1 C.B. 145, provides that the carrying party will have undertaken the drilling and development project for the entire working interest only if the carrying party holds the entire working interest throughout the complete pay-out period. Rev. Rul. 70-336 further provides that, if the carrying party holds the entire working interest for a period that is less than the complete pay-out period, it will have undertaken the drilling and development project for the fraction of the operating rights that the carrying party receives as a "permanent" share in the mineral property.

Rev. Rul. 70-336 also provides that the pay-out period ends when gross income attributable to all of the operating mineral interests in the well (or wells in the case of agreements covering more than a single well) equal all expenditures for drilling and development of such well (or wells) plus the costs of operating the well (or wells) to produce such gross income. The term operating mineral interest referred to above is an operating interest in each separate mineral property within the meaning of section 614 of the Code.

If it is possible for the carrying party's operating interest in an oil and gas property to be reduced from an initial fractional interest to the "permanent" fractional interest on the occurrence of some event other than pay-out from gross income from that property, then it is not certain that the carrying party will hold the initial fractional interest through the complete pay-out period. If the carrying party will not in all events hold the initial fractional interest through complete pay-out (or the life of the property if the property does not pay-out), the carrying party will be treated as having undertaken the drilling and development for the fraction of the operating rights that are received as a "permanent" share, and the carrying party's deduction for IDC will be limited to the fraction of the IDC that is attributable to such "permanent" fraction of the operating interest.

In the instant case, the income from one tract may be sufficient to equal the sum of O's costs of drilling, completing, equipping, and operating the wells on both tracts before the income from the other tract is sufficient to pay-out the costs attributable to that other tract. Because this can occur, it is possible for O's operating interest to be reduced to 75 percent in the two tracts although O would not have held the entire operating interest in one tract during the complete pay-out period for that tract.

HOLDING

Because it is possible that O may not hold the entire operating interest in each tract through the complete pay-out period for each property (or the life of the property if the property never pays out), O is entitled to deduct only that fraction of IDC that is attributable to its 75 percent operating interest in each tract.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Rul. 70-336, 1970-1 C.B. 145, is modified to hold that the conclusion in that ruling would be the same even if the carried party had not exercised its option to convert its retained overriding royalty into 50 percent of the operating interest. The terms of the carrying arrangement must provide that the carrying party, in all events, will hold the initial fraction through the complete payout period, if the carrying party is to qualify to deduct this same fraction of IDC.

PROSPECTIVE APPLICATION

Pursuant to the authority contained in section 7805(b) of the Code, the conclusions of this revenue ruling will not be applied adversely to taxpayers who executed carrying arrangements before April 21, 1980, or who had entered into written binding agreements to execute carrying arrangements before such date, if such taxpayers do in fact hold the initial fraction of the operating interest through the complete payout period.

Section 1402.—Definitions [Tax on Self-Employment Income]

26 CFR 1.1402(a)-2: Computation of net earnings from self-employment.
(Also Section 62; 1.62-1.)

Minister employed by church; unreimbursed expenses. Unreimbursed business expenses (other than travel or transportation expenses) incurred by a duly ordained minister who is an employee of a church and who is subject to self-employment tax are not deductible from gross income in arriving at adjusted gross income. The unreimbursed expenses are deductible in computing the minister's self-employment tax.

Rev. Rul. 80-110

ISSUE

Is a minister allowed to deduct unreimbursed business expenses from gross income to arrive at adjusted gross income? Is the unreimbursed business expense deductible in computing the minister's income for self-employment tax purposes?

FACTS

A duly ordained minister, an employee of a church, received a salary of $15,000 in 1979. The minister received no parsonage allowance. During 1979 the minister incurred unreimbursed business expenses (other than travel or transportation expenses) of $500. The minister has not filed for an exemption, under section 1402(e) of the Internal Revenue Code, from the tax imposed by the Self-Employment Contributions Act of 1954.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 62(1) of the Code provides that adjusted gross income means gross income minus deductions attributable to a trade or business carried on by the taxpayer, if such trade or business does not consist of the performance of services by the taxpayer as an employee.

Trade and business deductions of employees under section 62(2) of the Code are reimbursed expenses, expenses for travel away from home, transportation expenses, and outside salesmen's expenses.

Section 1402(c)(2)(D) of the Code provides that the term "trade or business", when used with reference to self-employment income, does not include the services of an employee other than the performance of service by a duly ordained minister of a church in the exercise of the ministry. Section 1402(a) provides that the term "net earnings from self-employment" means the gross income derived by an individual from any trade or business carried on by the individual, less the deductions attributable to the trade or business.

The services of a duly ordained minister of a church are excepted from "employment" under section 3121(b)(8)(A) of the Code for purposes of the Federal Insurance Contributions Act.

The trade and business deductions of a minister are allowable as deductions for purposes of computing the tax on self-employment income. However, if the minister is performing services as an employee in the exercise of the ministry the deductions are allowable as deductions from gross income to arrive at adjusted gross income only if they are of the type described in section 62(2) of the Code.

HOLDING

The $500 unreimbursed expenses are not allowable as a deduction in arriving at the minister's adjusted gross income. The $500 is deductible only as an itemized deduction on Schedule A (Form 1040), Itemized Deductions. However, the $500 is deductible on the Schedule SE (Form 1040) Computation of Social Security Self-Employment Tax, in computing the minister's self-employment tax.

Section 2512.—Valuation of Gifts

26 CFR 25.2512-1: Valuation of property; in general.

Valuation; state tax paid by donee; Wisconsin. Wisconsin law establishes a joint liability for the Wisconsin gift tax between the donor and the donee, both before and after the tax becomes overdue. For federal gift tax purposes, the gross value of transferred property is reduced by one-half of the amount of the Wisconsin gift tax if the donor transfers the property subject to the condition that the donee pay all the resulting Wisconsin gift tax and the donee relinquishes the right to contribution.

Rev. Rul. 80-111

ISSUE

What portion of the Wisconsin gift tax is allowable to offset the gross value of transferred property under section 2512 of the Code, if the donor transferred the property with the understanding that the donee would pay all the resulting Wisconsin gift tax?

FACTS

In December 1976, G gratuitously transferred $100x$ dollars to A upon the condition that A would pay the resulting Wisconsin gift tax. G filed the required donor's return and A filed the required donee's return. A paid the Wisconsin gift tax in the amount of $10x$ dollars.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2512(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 provides that, if a gift is made in property, the value thereof at the date of gift is considered the amount of the gift. Section 2512(b) of the Code states that if property is transferred for less than an adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth, then the amount by which the value of the transferred property exceeds the value of the consideration is deemed a gift.

The donor is liable for the payment of the federal gift tax before the tax is overdue. The donor, therefore, receives consideration for a transfer to the extent of the federal gift tax that the donee has, by prior arrangement, agreed to pay. In computing the value of the gift, the federal gift tax paid by the donee may be deducted from the value of transferred property, if it can be shown that the payment of tax by the donee or from the transferred property was a condition of the transfer. See, Rev. Rul. 75-72, 1975-1 C.B. 310.

Similarly the amount of state gift tax paid by the donee is deductible in computing the value of the transfer for federal gift tax purposes, to the extent that the donor would have been liable for the payment of the tax before it was overdue and the donee, prior to the transfer, agreed to pay the tax. See Rev. Rul. 76-49, 1976-1 C.B. 294; Rev. Rul. 76-57, 1976-1 C.B. 297; Rev. Rul. 76-104, 1976-1 C.B. 301; and Rev. Rul. 76-105, 1976-1 C.B. 304.

Wis. Stat. Ann. section 72.85(2) (West) provides that by April 15 of each year both the donor and donee of any transfers during the preceding year must report the transfers and pay the tax. Wis. Stat. Ann. section 72.85 (3) provides that if the tax is not paid by the due date, the donor and donee are jointly and severally liable for the tax, penalty, and interest, and that if one person pays the tax, there is no right of contribution unless the person paying the tax reserves it in writing on the filed tax return.

Wis. Stat. Ann. sections 72.85(2) and 72.85(3) establish a joint liability for the Wisconsin gift tax between the donor and the donee both before and after the tax becomes overdue. The donor and the donee, therefore, are joint obligors for the gift tax. The term "joint" signifies shared by or between two or more, coupled together in interest or liability. Black's Law Dictionary 971 (4th ed. 1968). Wisconsin recognizes a right of contribution between co-obligors. The right of contribution arises between parties, when one party pays more than that party's share of the joint obligation. See Sattler v. Neiderkorn, 190 Wis. 464, 209 N.W. 607 (1926); Western Casualty and Surety Co. v. Milwaukee General Construction Co., 213 Wis. 302, 251 N.W. 491 (1934). Thus, the donee's share of the Wisconsin gift tax is one-half.

Prior to the transfer, A agreed to pay all the Wisconsin gift tax, A thereby relinquished A's right to contribution and relieved G of any obligation to pay one-half of the gift tax. Thus, A furnished consideration to G for the transfer to the extent of one-half of the amount of Wisconsin gift tax.

HOLDING

The gross value of transferred property for federal gift tax purposes is reduced by one-half of the amount of the Wisconsin gift tax, because the donor transferred the property subject to the condition that the donee would pay all the resulting Wisconsin gift tax. Therefore, the value of the transfer for federal gift tax purposes is $95x$ dollars.

Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Temporary regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides temporary excise tax regulations relating to the windfall profit tax on domestic crude oil imposed by title I of the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980. The temporary regulations provide rules to be followed by operators, producers, and purchasers of domestic crude oil. In addition, the text contained in the temporary regulations set forth in this document also serves as the comment document for the notice of proposed rulemaking published in the Proposed Rules section of this issue of the Federal Register.

DATES: These temporary regulations are generally effective with respect to oil removed after February 29, 1980. However, certain rules are effective at later dates. A complete explanation of the effective dates is contained in the Supplementary Information section of this document. Written comments and requests for a public hearing must be delivered or mailed by June 3, 1980.

ADDRESS: Send comments and requests for a public hearing to: Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Attention: CC:LR:T (LR-48-80), Washington, DC 20224.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION

BACKGROUND

This document contains temporary regulations under sections 4986, 4987, 4988, 4989, 4991, 4992, 4993, 4994, 4995, 4996, 4997, 6050C, 6076, and 6402 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The temporary regulations are required to implement various sections of the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980.

The regulations promulgated in this document are also proposed to be prescribed as final Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 51).

EXPLANATIONS OF PROVISIONS

In general

The windfall profit tax is a temporary excise tax imposed upon the windfall profit from domestically produced taxable crude oil removed from the premises during each taxable period (generally a calendar quarter). The rate of tax varies with each of three tax tiers. Tier 1 oil is all taxable crude oil other than tier 2 or tier 3 oil. Tier 2 oil is oil (other than tier 3 oil) from a stripper well property or from a National Petroleum Reserve. Tier 3 consists of newly discovered oil, heavy oil, and incremental tertiary oil. Generally, the tax rate is 70 percent for tier 1, 60 percent for tier 2, and 30 percent for tier 3. However, "independent producer oil" is subject to a 50 percent rate in tier 1 and a 30 percent rate in tier 2. Oil attributable to qualified governmental interests or qualified charitable interests, Indian oil, certain Alaskan oil, and oil used to finance certain tertiary recovery projects is exempt from tax.

The term "windfall profit" is defined as the excess of the removal price of the barrel of oil over the sum of the adjusted base price and the severance tax adjustment. The removal price is generally the amount for which the barrel is sold, but in certain cases is the constructive sales price used for percentage depletion purposes. The adjusted base price is the base price adjusted for inflation. The base price for tier 1 oil is the ceiling price which would have applied to the oil under the March 1979 energy regulations if it had been sold in May 1979 as upper tier oil, reduced by 21 cents. The base price for tier 2 oil and tier 3 oil is determined under an interim rule provided in section 4989(d)(2) until regulations providing a permanent method are promulgated. These regulations will be issued in a separate document.

Administrative provisions

Introduction

Although the windfall profit tax is imposed upon the producer, the Act provides that the first purchaser of domestic crude oil generally is liable for deducting and withholding tax from the purchase price, for depositing the tax, and for filing quarterly tax returns. The obligations of the first purchaser arise except when the oil is removed from the premises before sale, purchased from an integrated oil company, or refined on the premises. In these cases the producer of the oil rather than the purchaser deposits the tax and files the returns.

Withholding system

When the purchaser is obligated to withhold, the amount to be withheld is generally the amount of windfall profit tax imposed by section 4986 on the oil purchased. Since it is the operator of the well who is in a position to know the type of oil sold, section 6050C requires the operator to provide the purchaser with the information necessary for a correct computation of the tax. Therefore, the regulations establish the general rule that the operator must certify detailed information regarding the type of oil purchased, the volume in each tax tier, and other data necessary for a correct computation of the tax.

However, the type and amount of information needed by a purchaser will vary depending upon various factors. For instance, if the operator sells all the production from a particular property to one purchaser, the purchaser may be able to determine the correct amount of tax based upon minimal information provided by the operator. In other situations, however, the purchaser may not know the tier into which the oil falls and other necessary information unless informed by the operator. In order to facilitate the various arrangements that operators and purchasers may wish to make, the regulations provide that the operator and purchaser may agree to relieve the operator of the duty of providing any or all of this information if the purchaser is able to meet its obligations without it.

Oil attributable to qualified governmental interests or qualified charitable interests and Indian oil is exempt from the tax. Under the regulations, these persons may furnish a certificate to the operator or to the purchaser certifying their exempt status and setting forth the facts that establish entitlement to the exemption. An operator who receives a producer's certificate is required to furnish the information to each purchaser of that oil. A purchaser who receives an exemption certificate and who has no reason to believe it is not correct must not withhold any windfall profit tax from payments for oil to which the certificate applies. A similar procedure is to be followed by persons who produce independent producer oil qualifying for the lower rates of tax. These persons may certify their entitlement to the lower rate, and the purchaser adjusts the amount to be withheld accordingly. If payment for the oil is made by the purchaser to the operator or to a partnership rather than directly to the producer of the oil, the amount to be withheld from the payment generally is based on information received from the operator or partnership that summarizes the status of the producers.

The amount of tax withheld by the purchaser from the purchase price generally is the amount of the windfall profit tax determined on the basis of the information provided in the operator's certification and any producers' certificates. However, situations may arise in which the purchaser does not have the necessary information for a correct computation of the tax. This may result during the initial implementation of the tax or when a purchaser first begins purchasing oil from a property. Therefore, special withholding rules are to be followed by the purchaser if the purchaser has not received from the operator the information necessary to properly compute the tax or if the purchaser has reason to believe that information contained in the operator's certification that affects the tax computation is not correct.

The special withholding rules establish an amount to be withheld from the purchase price based upon the amount paid for the crude oil purchased even though the purchaser does not have specific knowledge of the windfall profit tax category into which the oil falls. The rules provide different amounts to be withheld depending upon whether, pursuant to the price control regulations, the purchaser has paid the lower tier ceiling price, the upper tier ceiling price, or an uncontrolled price.

No windfall profit tax liability arises upon the removal of crude oil which is sold at the lower tier ceiling price. Therefore, withholding is not required when the purchaser pays the lower tier ceiling price for oil. However, if the purchaser pays either the upper tier ceiling price or an uncontrolled price, the purchaser is required to withhold. The amount to be withheld per barrel is 70 percent (the windfall profit tax rate on tier 1 oil) of the excess of the purchase price over the amount equal to (1) $11.01 (the lowest upper tier ceiling price as of May 1979 reduced by the 21 cent "balancer" provided in section 4989(c)(2)), plus (2) the inflation adjustment for the calendar quarter in which the oil was removed, plus (3) the amount of any severance tax adjustment known by the purchaser.

An interim withholding rule is provided for use until the generally applicable rules take effect. This rule requires withholding on the excess, if any, of the purchase price over $11.22 for oil removed during March 1980 and $11.47 for oil removed after March (the amount equal to the lowest upper tier ceiling price as of May 1979 reduced by the section 4989(c)(2) "balancer" and increased by the inflation adjustment for the applicable taxable period). However, purchasers may withhold under the permanent rules during the interim period if they choose to.

In certain situations the purchaser will withhold more or less than the amount of tax imposed by section 4986 with respect to oil purchased. For instance, the special rules to be followed in the absence of a valid operator's certificate may result in the withholding of tax in excess of the amount that would have been withheld if the certificate had been received, or computational errors by one of the parties to a transaction may cause under or overwithholding. Furthermore, due to the retroactive effective date of the windfall profit tax, payments may be made for taxable crude oil from which no tax is withheld. Therefore, rules are provided to be followed by the purchaser in withholding on later payments in order to adjust the under or overpayment.

The regulations also provide that a purchaser is not liable to any other person for the amount of tax withheld and deposited. However, every purchaser required to withhold is liable for the payment of the tax whether or not it is actually collected from the producer by the purchaser.

Purchasers that are not integrated oil companies generally deposit the amounts required to be withheld not later than 45 days after the end of the calendar month in which the oil was removed. Independent refiners purchasing oil under a contract under which no payment is required to be made before the 46th day after the end of the month in which the oil is purchased must deposit before the first day of the third month which begins after the end of the month in which the oil was removed. Independent refiners not purchasing pursuant to a delayed payment contract deposit in accordance with the generally applicable 45 day rule. If a purchaser underwithholds on a producer for a calendar year, the producer must attach payment to the return filed after the end of the year or must deposit payment on or before the last day for filing the return. Integrated oil companies must deposit both amounts required to be withheld and amounts of the tax liability from their own production twice monthly.

All purchasers subject to the withholding rules must provide each producer from whom they have purchased crude oil a monthly statement of the amount of tax withheld. An annual statement of the producer's tax liability and other pertinent information is to be sent both to the producer and to the Internal Revenue Service. If the purchaser withheld tax from payments made to an operator or partnership rather than directly to the producer of the oil, the purchaser is to furnish the statement to the person who received the payment. That person is then required to promptly relay the information and to file information returns with the Internal Revenue Service.

For most taxpayers, the income tax deduction for the windfall profit tax will be the amount actually withheld during the year, rather than the amount of tax imposed upon oil removed during the year. Therefore, the annual statement must set forth the amount withheld in the course of the year.

Generally, it is the purchaser rather than the producer who is to file the quarterly windfall profit tax return. However, the producer must file the return if the oil removed during the taxable period was not subject to withholding. Furthermore, the producer must file an annual return if the producer's liability for the tax exceeds the amount of tax withheld. The quarterly windfall profit tax return is to be filed no later than the last day of the second month following the close of the taxable period. However, a producer who has a liability remaining at the end of the year due to underwithholding is required to file only one return at the end of the calendar year with respect to which the underpayment occurred. This return is due by the last day of February.

In the case of overwithholding, it is anticipated that later adjustments made by the purchaser will generally correct for the overpayment. However, if an amount remains overpaid for a calendar year, the producer may either file a claim for credit or refund in connection with the producer's income tax return for that year or claim a refund on Form 843.

An exception to the annual refund rule is provided for producers whose oil interests are exempt from the windfall profit tax and have been withheld upon during the initial implementation of the tax. These producers may file an early claim for credit or refund on or after July 1, 1980.

Section 4995(a)(7) permits an election substituting the operator for the purchaser in the administration of the windfall profit tax. That section also authorizes the Secretary to limit the election to situations where the substitution is administratively more practicable. The regulations provide that the operator and purchaser may elect to have the operator responsible for all windfall profit tax responsibilities otherwise imposed upon the purchaser when the operator is otherwise required to make deposits as a purchaser of oil produced from a different reservoir. Consideration will be given to providing for this election in other circumstances in response to publc comment.

Procedures when purchaser not required to withhold

As noted earlier, the withholding system is in effect unless the oil is removed from the premises before sale, refined on the premises, or purchased from an integrated oil company. If withholding is not required, the purchaser does not perform such other duties as furnishing information or filing returns.

When the oil sold is not subject to withholding, the operator must supply each producer with the information required to enable the producer to compute the amount of the windfall profit tax liability on the producer's share of production. This is the same information that would be furnished to the purchaser if the oil were subject to withholding.

A producer that is not an integrated oil company must deposit its tax liability (if it is $100 or more) for the calendar quarter within 45 days after the end of the month in which the oil is removed (or deemed removed) from the premises. An integrated oil company must deposit not later than 9 days after each semimonthly period the amounts required to be withheld from payments made to other producers for oil removed in that period plus the company's windfall profit tax liability as a producer of oil removed in that period. A semimonthly period means the first 15 days of a calendar month or the portion of a calendar month following the 15th day of such month. The depositary requirements are considered met for a month or a semimonthly period if one of the safe-haven rules is met.

Deposits are to be made with a Federal Reserve bank or an authorized financial institution.

When the windfall profit tax is not withheld by the purchaser, the return filing requirement is imposed directly upon the producer. Thus, the producer must file the quarterly windfall profit tax return not later than the last day of the second month following the close of the taxable period.

Generally, if a producer overpays his windfall profit tax liability for a taxable period, the producer may either file a claim for refund on or after the date for filing the return for the taxable period of the overpayment or may claim credit for the overpayment by making an adjustment on the windfall profit tax return for later taxable periods within the applicable period of limitation. However, a claim for credit or refund based on an overpayment due to the operation of the net income limitation on windfall profit provided in section 4988(b) may not be claimed until the producer's income tax return is filed for the taxable year that includes the last day of the taxable period for which the overpayment was made.

Other rules

Tertiary recovery projects

These regulations also provide rules for the certification of tertiary recovery projects. In order to self-certify a tertiary recovery project the regulations require the operator to submit a certification from a petroleum engineer to the service center with which the operator files an income tax return. Rules are also provided for the certification of a tertiary recovery project approved by a jurisdictional agency. In determining a project beginning date, a special rule is provided for certifications submitted by May 1, 1980.

A taxpayer may request a ruling with respect to whether a project for which a jurisdictional agency's certification is submitted is a qualified tertiary recovery project. The ruling generally must be issued within 180 days of the request. The regulations set forth the information that must be supplied in the request in addition to the information normally required to be included in a ruling request.

Post-1978 transfers

The regulations also provide special rules for post-1978 transfers of portions of a property. If a portion of a property is transferred after December 31, 1978, the oil produced from the property transferred constitutes oil from a stripper well property, newly discovered oil, or heavy oil only if it would be so classified if there had been no transfer.

Effective dates

Except as otherwise provided, the temporary regulations are effective with respect to oil removed after February 29, 1980. Certain sections of the temporary regulations contain a different effective date. Paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of § 150.4995-1 (relating to the requirement of withholding) are effective with respect to payments made after June 3, 1980 for oil removed on or after March 1, 1980. However, for purposes of applying paragraph (c) (relating to adjustments in the amount required to be withheld) of § 150.4995-1 to payments described in the preceding sentence, payments made before June 4, 1980 for oil removed on or after March 1, 1980, are treated as if paragraphs (a) and (b) applied to them. The rules of paragraph (d) (relating to an interim withholding rule) apply to payments made after April 18, 1980 and before June 4, 1980, with respect to oil removed on or after March 1, 1980. The rules of paragraph (d) may, at the option of the purchaser, be applied with respect to payments made prior to the above period with respect to such oil. Paragraph (a) of § 150.4995-3 (relating to depositary requirements) contains a special effective date rule for integrated oil companies which provides that, for purposes of the depositary rules, oil removed prior to April 4, 1980 is considered to have been removed on April 4, 1980. Section 150.6050C-1 (relating to information furnished by the operator of a property) contains a rule providing that, for purposes of § 150.6050C-1, the statement for oil removed during March 1980 shall be furnished no later than April 25, 1980. The proposed regulations are to be effective for the same period as the temporary regulations.

WAIVER OF PROCEDURAL REQUIREMENTS OF TREASURY DIRECTIVE

The expeditious adoption of the provisions contained in this document is necessary because of the need for immediate guidance to taxpayers liable for the windfall profit tax on domestic crude oil and to other persons required to withhold and deposit tax, file returns, provide information, etc. For this reason, Jerome Kurtz, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, has determined that the provisions of paragraphs 8 through 14 of the Treasury Department directive implementing Executive Order 12044 must be waived.

COMMENTS AND REQUESTS FOR A PUBLIC HEARING

Before adoption of the final regulations proposed in this document, consideration will be given to any written comments that are submitted (preferably six copies) to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. All comments will be available for public inspection and copying. A public hearing will be held upon written request to the Commissioner by any person who has submitted written comments. If a public hearing is held, notice of the time and place will be published in the Federal Register.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is David B. Cubeta of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, a new part 150, Temporary Excise Tax Regulations Under the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980, is added and the following temporary regulations are adopted:

§ 150.0 Introduction.

Each section of the regulations in this part is designated by a number composed of the part number followed by a decimal point [150.], the section of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to which it relates, a hyphen [-] and a number identifying the section. By use of these designations, the reader can associate sections of the regulations with provisions of the Code. For example, § 150.4986-1 pertains to section 4986 of the Code.

§ 150.4986-1 Imposition of tax.

Section 4986 imposes an excise tax on the windfall profit from taxable crude oil removed from the premises on or after March 1, 1980, and before the end of the phaseout period. See §§ 150.4988-1, 150.4991-1, and 150.4996-1 for the definitions of "windfall profit", "taxable crude oil", and "removed from the premises", respectively. See section 4990(c) for the definition of "phase-out period". The tax imposed by section 4986 is to be paid by the producer of the crude oil. However, see § 150.4995-1, relating to the requirement of withholding by the purchaser of the crude oil. See § 150.4996-1 for the definitions of "purchaser" and "producer".

§ 150.4987-1 Amount of tax.

Section 4987 establishes that the amount of tax imposed by section 4986 with respect to any barrel of taxable crude oil is the applicable percentage of the windfall profit on that barrel. The applicable percentage for tier 1 oil and tier 2 oil which is not independent producer oil is 70 in the case of tier 1 and 60 in the case of tier 2. The applicable percentage for independent producer oil is 50 for tier 1 and 30 for tier 2. The applicable percentage for tier 3 oil is 30. In the case of a fraction of a barrel, the tax is the same fraction of the amount of the tax imposed on the whole barrel.

§ 150.4988-1 Windfall profit; removal price.

(a) Windfall profit. For purposes of this part and chapter 45 of the Code, the term "windfall profit" means the excess of the removal price of the barrel of crude oil over the sum of—

(1) The adjusted base price of the barrel, and

(2) The amount of the severance tax adjustment with respect to the barrel provided by section 4996(c) and § 150.4996-2.

Section 4988(b) provides that the windfall profit on any barrel of crude oil shall not exceed 90 percent of the net income attributable to the barrel. The computation of the net income limitation is determined under special rules set forth in section 4988(b).

(b) Removal price—(1) In general. The "removal price" generally is the amount for which the barrel is sold (including any adjustments to the sales price made after sale). However, in the case of a sale between related persons (within the meaning of section 103(b)(6)(C)), the removal price shall not be less than the constructive sales price for purposes of determining gross income from the property under section 613. Also, if crude oil is removed from the premises before it is sold (or is deemed removed under section 4988(c)(4) or § 150.4996-1(d)), the removal price shall be the constructive sales price for purposes of determining gross income from the property under section 613.

(2) Alaskan oil from Sadlerochit reservoir. In the case of Sadlerochit oil, the removal price of such oil removed during any calendar month shall be the average of the producer's removal prices for such month.

(3) District director's authority. In determining the removal price of oil from a property in the case of any transaction, a district director may adjust the removal price to reflect clearly the fair market value of oil removed.

§ 150.4989-1 Adjusted base price.

(a) Adjusted base price defined. For purposes of this part and chapter 45 of the Code, the "adjusted base price" is the base price for the barrel of crude oil plus the amount equal to the base price multiplied by the inflation adjustment for the calendar quarter in which the crude oil is removed from the premises, rounded to the nearest cent. The inflation adjustment, which is determined under a formula set out in section 4989(b), is greater for tier 3 oil than it is for tier 1 oil or tier 2 oil. For March 1980, the inflation adjustment is .0195 in the case of tier 1 or tier 2 oil and .0246 in the case of tier 3 oil. Future inflation adjustments will be published periodically by the Internal Revenue Service. For a special adjustment to the base price for Alaskan oil from the Sadlerochit reservoir, see section 4996(d).

(b) Base price for tier 1 oil. The base price for tier 1 oil is the ceiling price which would have applied to the oil under the March 1979 energy regulations (see § 150.4996-1(f)) if it had been produced and sold in May 1979 as upper tier oil, reduced by 21 cents. For purposes of this determination, the grade and quality of the oil produced from the property in May 1979 shall be used.

(c) Base prices for tier 2 and tier 3 oil—(1) General rule.

[Reserved]

(2) Interim rule. This subparagraph and subparagraph (3) apply to oil removed during a month beginning before October 1980 (or such earlier date as may be provided in regulations taking effect before such earlier date). Except as provided in subparagraph (3), the base prices for tier 2 oil and tier 3 oil, respectively, shall be the product of—

(i) (A) The highest posted price for December 31, 1979, for uncontrolled crude oil of the same grade, quality, and field, or

(B) If there is no posted price described in inferior subdivision (A), the highest posted price for such date for uncontrolled crude oil at the nearest domestic field for which prices for oil of the same grade and quality were posted for such date, multiplied by

(ii) A fraction the denominator of which is $35, and the numerator of which is—

(A) $15.20 for purposes of determining base prices of tier 2 oil, and

(B) $16.55 for purposes of determining base prices of tier 3 oil.

In determining the base price for tier 2 or tier 3 oil, the grade and quality of the oil produced from the property in December 1979 shall be used. For purposes of determining the highest posted price for December 31, 1979, no price which was posted after January 14, 1980, shall be taken into account. For a posted price to qualify for use in determining a producer's base price, the price must be published in writing by a purchaser of a substantial volume of crude oil in the field.

(3) Minimum interim base price. The base price determined under paragraph (c)(2) of this section for tier 2 oil or tier 3 oil shall not be less than the sum of—

(i) The ceiling price which would have applied to such oil under the March 1979 energy regulations if it had been produced and sold in May 1979 as upper tier oil, plus

(ii) (A) $1 in the case of tier 2 oil, or

(B) $2 in the case of tier 3 oil.

For purposes of this determination, the grade and quality of the oil produced from the property in May 1979 shall be used.

(d) Variations in grade or quality of oil. For purposes of paragraphs (b) and (c) of this section, if the production from a property in May or December 1979 varied in grade or quality during the month, the per barrel average grade and quality for the month shall be used. If there was no commercial production in May or December 1979, the grade and quality of the oil produced in the first month of commercial production after such month shall be used. Once the base price is determined, it is not to be adjusted for later changes in grade or quality.

§ 150.4991-1 Taxable crude oil; tiers of oil.

(a) Taxable crude oil. Section 4991 defines the term "taxable crude oil" to mean all domestic crude oil (including crude oil derived by the producer from the production of natural gas) other than exempt oil. The term "exempt oil" is any crude oil from a qualified governmental interest (see section 4994(a)) or a qualified charitable interest (section 4994(b)), any exempt front-end oil (see section 4994(c)), any exempt Indian oil (see section 4994(d)), and any exempt Alaskan oil (see section 4994(e)).

(b) Tiers of oil. Section 4991 defines the tiers of taxable crude oil. Tier 1 oil is any taxable crude oil other than tier 2 oil and tier 3 oil. Tier 2 oil is any oil which is produced from a stripper well property within the meaning of the June 1979 energy regulations (see § 150.4996-1(f)) and any oil from an economic interest in a National Petroleum Reserve held by the United States. However, the term "tier 2 oil" does not include tier 3 oil. Tier 3 oil is newly discovered oil, heavy oil, and incremental tertiary oil. The term "newly discovered oil" has the meaning given to that term by the June 1979 energy regulations. The term "heavy oil" means all crude oil which is produced from a property if crude oil produced and sold from that property during either—

(1) The last month before July 1979 in which crude oil was produced and sold from that property, or

(2) The taxable period, had a weighted average gravity of 16 degrees API or less (corrected to 60 degrees Fahrenheit). For the definition of incremental tertiary oil, see § 150.4993-1.

§ 150.4992-1 Independent producer oil.

(a) General rule. "Independent producer oil" is that portion of an independent producer's qualified production for the quarter which does not exceed such person's independent producer amount for the quarter.

(b) Independent producer defined. An "independant producer", with respect to any quarter, is any person other than a person to whom subsection (c) of section 613A does not apply by reason of paragraph (2) (relating to certain retailers) or paragraph (4) (relating to certain refiners) of section 613A(d) (or to whom subsection (c) would not apply if subsection (d)(2) or (4) were applied on a quarterly rather than an annual basis).

(c) Independent producer amount. A person's independent producer amount for any quarter is the product of 1,000 barrels multiplied by the number of days in the quarter. For March 1980, the independent producer amount is 31,000 barrels. If a person's qualified production for any quarter exceeds that person's independent producer amount for the quarter, the independent producer amount is to be allocated between tiers 1 and 2 in proportion to the person's production for the quarter of domestic crude oil in each such tier, and is to be allocated within any tier on the basis of the removal prices for such person's domestic crude oil in that tier removed during that quarter, beginning with the highest of those prices.

(d) Qualified production of oil defined—(1) In general. An independent producer's qualified production of oil for any quarter is the number of barrels of taxable crude oil of which such person is the producer which is removed during that quarter, which is tier 1 oil or tier 2 oil, and which is attributable to the independent producer's working interest in a property.

(2) Working interest defined. The term "working interest" means an operating mineral interest (within the meaning of section 614(d)) which was in existence as an operating mineral interest on January 1, 1980, or which is an operating mineral interest derived from a qualified overriding royalty interest after that date. A "qualified overriding royalty interest" is an overriding royalty interest in existence as such an interest on January 1, 1980, but only if on or before February 20, 1980, there was in existence a binding contract under which such interest was to be converted into an operating mineral interest.

(3) Production from transferred property—(i) In general. Except as otherwise provided in this subparagraph, in the case of a transfer (as defined in § 150.4996-3(b)) on or after January 1, 1980, of an interest in any property, the qualified production of the transferee shall not include any production attributable to such interest.

(ii) Small producer transfer exemption—(A) In general. Subdivision (i) shall not apply to any transfer of an interest in property if the transferee establishes, to the satisfaction of the district director for the district in which the property is situated, that at no time after December 31, 1979, has the property been held by a person who was a disqualified transferor for any quarter ending after September 30, 1979, and ending before the date such person transferred the interest.

(B) Disqualified transferor. The term "disqualified transferor" means, with respect to any quarter, any person who either had qualified production for such quarter which exceeded such person's independent producer amount for such quarter or was not an independent producer for such quarter.

(C) Special rules. For purposes of this paragraph, property held by a partnership at any time shall be treated as owned proportionately by the partners of such partnership at such time. Property held by any trust or estate shall be treated as owned both by such trust or estate and proportionately by its benefitciaries. Chapter 45 and this part shall be treated as having been in effect for periods after September 30, 1979, for purposes of making any determination under subdivision (ii)(B).

(iii) Other exceptions. Subdivision (i) shall not apply in the case of—

(A) A transfer of property at death,

(B) A change of beneficiaries of a trust which qualifies under clause (iii) of section 613A(c)(9)(B) (determined without regard to the exception at the end of such clause), and

(C) Any transfer so long as the transferor and transferee are required by section 4992(e) to share the 1,000 barrel amount referred to in paragraph (c) of this section.

The preceding sentence shall apply in the case of any property only if the production from the property was qualified production for the transferor.

(e) Allocation within related group—(1) In general. Section 4992(e) contains rules for the allocation of the 1,000 barrel per day amount among all persons who are members of the same related group.

(2) Special rules.

§ 150.4993-1 Incremental tertiary oil.

(a) In general—(1) Incremental tertiary oil. "Incremental tertiary oil" is the excess of the amount of crude oil which is removed from a property during any calendar month and which is produced on or after the project beginning date and during the period for which a qualified tertiary recovery project is in effect on the property over the base level for the property for that month.

(2) Base level. (i) The base level for any property for any month is determined by ascertaining (under the principles reflected in the rules used in determining the base production control level in the June 1979 energy regulations) the average monthly amount of crude oil removed from the property during the 6-month period ending March 31, 1979. To arrive at the base level, that average monthly amount is then reduced (but not below zero) by the sum of 1 percent of such amount for each month which begins after 1978 and before the first calendar month beginning after the project beginning date, and 2½ percent of such amount for each month which begins after the project beginning date (or after 1978 if the project beginning date is before 1979) and before the month for which the base level is being determined.

(ii) [Reserved]

(3) Minimum amount. If a qualified tertiary recovery project has been certified under the June 1979 energy regulations, and the certification is in effect, the amount of the incremental tertiary oil shall not be less than the incremental production determined under the June 1979 energy regulations.

(4) Allocation rules. The determination of which barrels of crude oil removed during any calendar month are incremental tertiary oil shall be made—

(i) First by allocating the amount of incremental tertiary oil between oil which (but for this paragraph) would be tier 1 oil, and oil which (but for this paragraph) would be tier 2 oil, in proportion to the respective amounts of each such oil removed from the property during such month, and

(ii) Then by taking into account barrels of crude oil so removed in the order of their respective removal prices, beginning with the highest of such prices.

(b) Qualified tertiary recovery project—(1) In general. A "qualified tertiary recovery project" is either a qualified tertiary enhanced recovery project with respect to which a certification as such has been approved and is in effect under the June 1979 energy regulations or any project for enhancing recovery of crude oil which meets the requirements of subparagraph (2) of this paragraph. Because of the energy regulations, as in effect on June 1, 1979, did not permit self-certification of projects, such a project must meet the requirements of subparagraph (2) of this subparagraph to be a "qualified tertiary recovery project".

(2) Requirements. A project meets the requirements referred to in subparagraph (1) of this paragraph if it satisfies subdivisions (i) through (iv) of this subparagraph.

(i) The project involves the application (in accordance with sound engineering principles) of one or more tertiary recovery methods which can reasonably be expected to result in more than an insignificant increase (determined in light of all the facts and circumstances) in the amount of crude oil which will ultimately be recovered;

(ii) The project beginning date is after May 1979;

(iii) The portion of the property to be affected by the project is adequately delineated; and

(iv) The operator submits either—

(A) A certification from a petroleum engineer that the project meets the requirements of subdivisions (i), (ii), and (iii), or

(B) A certification that a jurisdictional agency (as defined in section 4993(d)(5)) has approved the project as meeting those requirements, and that such approval is still in effect.

For rules relating to the submission of a certification from a petroleum engineer, see § 150.4993-2. For rules relating to the submission of a certification from a jurisdictional agency, see § 150.4993-3.

(c) Definitions and special rules. Under section 4993(d), the term "tertiary recovery method" means any method which is described in subparagraphs (1) through (9) of section 212.78(c) of the June 1979 energy regulations, or any other method to provide tertiary enhanced recovery which is approved in writing by the Office of the Assistant Commissioner (Technical). The "project beginning date" is the later of—

(1) The date on which the injection of liquids, gases, or other matter begins, or

(2) The date on which—

(i) The project is certified as a qualified tertiary enhanced recovery project under the June 1979 energy regulations, or

(ii) All of the requirements of § 150.4993-2 are met with respect to the submission of a petroleum engineer's certification, or all of the requirements of § 150.4993-3 are met with respect to the submission of a certification of jurisdictional agency approval. However, for purposes of the preceding sentence only, in the case of a submission received by an Internal Revenue Service Center on or before May 1, 1980, such submission shall be considered to have been received on the later of March 1, 1980, or the date on which the petroleum engineer executed the certification or the jurisdictional agency issued its approval.

If a qualified tertiary recovery project can reasonably be expected to increase the ultimate recovery of crude oil from only a portion of a property, the portion shall be treated as a separate property for purposes of this section. A significant expansion of any project shall be treated as a separate project. A taxpayer may request a ruling with respect to whether a project is a qualified tertiary recovery project. For rules relating to the request for such a ruling see § 150.4993-4.

§ 150.4993-2 Self-certification of tertiary recovery projects.

(a) Certification of petroleum engineer. In order to qualify under section 4993(c)(2)(D)(i), relating to the self-certification of a qualified tertiary recovery project, the operator shall submit a certification, signed under penalties of perjury by a petroleum engineer (who has been duly registered or certified in accordance with applicable state law, if any), to the Internal Revenue Service Center for the region with which the income tax return of the operator is filed. The certification shall contain the following:

(1) A statement that the project involves a tertiary recovery method (as defined in section 4993(d)(1) and § 150.4993-1(c)) that is expected to result in more than an insignificant increase in the ultimate recovery of crude oil, together with a description of the process used and the increase in the amount of oil to be recovered by reason of the application of the method,

(2) A description of the implementation and operation of the project sufficient to establish that its implementation and operation are in accordance with sound engineering principles,

(3) An identification of the area from which the ultimate recovery of crude oil is expected to be increased as a result of the implementation and operation of the project, and, if that area is less than the entire property, a precise delineation of the portion of the property that is expected to yield the increase in the ultimate recovery of oil,

(4) The date on which the tertiary injectant was, or is expected to be, initially introduced into the reservoir,

(5) An explanation of the number and frequency of injections to be made and the expected duration of the project,

(6) If the project involves a single injection, an estimate of the period of time during which the injectant will continue to increase the recovery of crude oil,

(7) Data on oil reserve estimates covering the project area with and without the tertiary recovery process,

(8) The past production history and estimates of future production,

(9) The number of wells in the project area and the number of both producing and injection wells expected to be drilled,

(10) Projected future income and expenses, and

(11) The operator's employer identification number.

The petroleum engineer's certification may be submitted at any time. However, for purposes of section 4993(d)(2)(B) and paragraph (c) of § 150.4993-1 relating to the "project beginning date", a petroleum engineer shall not be considered as having certified a project until the certification is received by the Internal Revenue Service Center. If the certification is sent to the Service Center by mail, it shall be considered received when posted by United States mail, properly addressed, and with sufficient postage.

(b) Termination of injection. If any project certified under paragraph (a) of this section involves the continuous or repetitious injection of liquids, gases, or other matter and if the injection is terminated, the operator shall promptly send a written statement to that effect to the Internal Revenue Service Center setting forth the date that the injection was terminated.

(c) Significant expansion. If a project is significantly expanded, the expansion shall be treated as a separate project requiring separate certification.

§ 150.4993-3 Jurisdictional agency certification of tertiary recovery projects.

(a) Initial certification. In order to qualify under section 4993(c)(2)(D)(ii), relating to the approval of tertiary recovery projects by a jurisdictional agency, the operator shall submit the certification to the Internal Revenue Service Center for the region with which the income tax return of the operator is filed. The certification shall state that the appropriate jurisdictional agency has approved the project as having met the requirements set forth in section 4993(c)(2)(A), (B), and (C), and the operator shall attach the approving document or a certified copy therof. The certification of the jurisdictional agency's approval may be submitted at any time. However, for purposes of section 4993(d)(2)(B)(ii) and paragraph (c) of § 150.4993-1, relating to the "project beginning date", a jurisdictional agency shall not be considered as having approved a project until the certification is received by the Service Center. If the certification is sent to the Service Center by mail, it shall be considered received when posted by United States mail, properly addressed, and with sufficient postage.

(b) Revocation of certification. If the agency revokes the approval, it shall immediately notify the operator and the Service Center of the revocation setting forth the date of the revocation and stating whether the revocation has retroactive effect (and, if so, to what date the revocation is retroactive), and the operator shall send a copy of the revocation to the Service Center within 10 days after receiving it.

§ 150.4993-4 Internal Revenue Service rulings relating to qualified tertiary recovery projects.

(a) In general. Either the operator of a property or any producer of oil from that property may request a ruling from the Internal Revenue Service as to whether any tertiary recovery project involving that property is a "qualified tertiary recovery project" within the meaning of section 4993(c). If a producer submits the request, the producer shall notify the operator in writing that the request was submitted.

(b) Manner of requesting ruling. The request for a ruling described in paragraph (a) of this section shall be made by submitting the request to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Attention: Assistant Commissioner (Technical), Washington, D.C. 20224. In addition to meeting the requirements of § 601.201(e) of this chapter (Statement of Procedural Rules), the request shall contain the following:

(1) A statement as to whether a jurisdictional agency has approved the project, and if so, a copy of the approving document and a copy of the material upon which the approval was based together with any certification submitted to a Service Center and identification of such Service Center,

(2) A statement from the operator of the property as to whether the operator has previously submitted a request for a ruling on that project and as to whether any producer has notified the operator that a request has been submitted, as well as the date and name of the person who made a request,

(3) A description of the location of the project,

(4) The type of tertiary recovery process instituted,

(5) Data on oil reserve estimates covering the project area with and without the tertiary recovery process,

(6) The past production history and estimates of future production,

(7) The characteristics of the formation such as the name, depth, lithology, thickness, porosity, permeability, and reservoir pressure and temperature history,

(8) A description of any secondary or tertiary process previously used, or in use, in the project area,

(9) A full and complete description of the tertiary process stating how it will be developed from the pilot flood through full development, and

(10) A complete description of the geological and engineering factors taken into consideration, together with sufficient data to support the conclusion that the project meets the requirements of section 4993(c) for a "qualified tertiary recovery project".

(c) Special rule for projects for which a certification of approval by a jurisdictional agency has been submitted. If, pursuant to section 4993(c)(2)(D)(ii) and § 150.4993-3, the operator of the property has submitted a certification of approval by a jurisdictional agency, the ruling described in paragraph (a) of this section will be issued within 180 days of the date that a request for the ruling, meeting the requirements of paragraph (b) of this section and § 601.201(e) of this chapter (Statement of Procedural Rules) is received by the Office of the Assistant Commissioner (Technical). However, if the request for a ruling is not complete as to the information required in paragraph (b)(1) through (10) of this section, the Office of the Assistant Commissioner (Technical) may send written notice to the person making the request specifying the further information that must be submitted. The 180-day period shall not include any days after the date of the mailing of the written notice and before the date on which the additional information is received.

Section 4994 defines the terms "qualified governmental interest", "qualified charitable interest," "exempt front-end oil", "exempt Indian oil", and "exempt Alaskan oil", the categories of oil that are exempt from the tax imposed by section 4986.

§ 150.4995-1 Requirement of withholding.

(a) General rule; when required. Except as otherwise provided in this section, the purchaser (as defined in § 150.4996-1(a)) of domestic crude oil shall deduct and withhold tax from amounts payable by that purchaser for the oil. However, the preceding sentence shall not apply if—

(1) The crude oil is removed from the premises (as defined in § 150.4996-1(d)) before it is sold, or

(2) The manufacture or conversion of crude oil into refined products begins before the oil is removed from the premises, or

(3) The producer of the oil is an integrated oil company (as defined in § 150.4996-1(g)).

The amount of tax to be deducted and withheld shall be determined in accordance with the rules of paragraphs (b) and (c) of this section. See, however, paragraph (d) of this section for rules applicable to certain payments made prior to June 4, 1980. The producer shall be treated as having paid on the last day of the first February after the calendar year in which the oil is removed from the premises the amount deducted and withheld with respect to such oil by the purchaser under this section.

(b) Amount to be deducted and withheld—(1) Operator's certification. If the purchaser has received the certification required to be furnished by the operator pursuant to section 6050C and § 150.6050C-1, and if the purchaser has no reason to believe that any information contained in that certification that affects the computation of the windfall profit tax is not correct, the amount of tax to be deducted and withheld under paragraph (a) of this section is the amount of tax imposed by section 4986 based on the information provided in the operator's certification. However, in determining the amount to be deducted and withheld, section 4988(b) (relating to the net income limitation on windfall profit) shall not apply.

(2) Absence of effective operator's certification. If the purchaser has not received the certification required to be furnished by the operator pursuant to section 6050C and § 150.6050C-1, or if the purchaser has reason to believe that any information contained in that certification that affects the tax computation is not correct, the purchaser shall deduct and withhold in accordance with the following rules:

(i) If the purchaser pays the lower tier ceiling price for oil, the purchaser shall not deduct and withhold any windfall profit tax from the purchase price of that oil.

(ii) If the purchaser pays either the upper tier ceiling price or an uncontrolled price for oil, the purchaser shall deduct and withhold from the purchase price of each barrel of such oil an amount equal to 70 percent of the excess, if any, of the removal price over the amount equal to the sum of—

(A) $11.01, plus

(B) The amount equal to $11.01 multiplied by the inflation adjustment provided under section 4989(b)(1) for the calendar quarter in which the oil was removed, plus

(C) The amount of the severance tax adjustment provided by section 4996(c), if the amount of that adjustment is known by the purchaser.

(3) Purchaser's certification. If, pursuant to § 150.4995-2 or § 150.6050C-1, the purchaser has received a certification that a producer's share of production from a property qualifies as "exempt oil" or "independent producer oil", and if the purchaser has no reason to believe that any statement in the certification bearing on such qualification is not correct, the purchaser—

(i) Shall not withhold tax from amounts payable for the share of production that has been certified as exempt oil (the provisions of paragraph (b)(1) and (2) of this section notwithstanding), and

(ii) In determining the amount to be withheld under paragraph (b)(1) of this section from amounts payable for the share of production that has been certified as independent producer oil, shall apply the rates provided in section 4987(b)(2) and, in determining the amount to be withheld under paragraph (b)(2) of this section, shall substitute 50 percent for 70 percent.

If a payment by a purchaser is made to an operator or to a partnership, rather than directly to the producer of the oil, the amount of exempt oil and independent producer oil shall be determined on the basis of information provided to the purchaser by the operator pursuant to § 150.6050C-1 or by the partnership pursuant to paragraph (e) of § 150.4995-2.

(4) Lower tier and upper tier ceiling prices. For purposes of this section, the terms "lower tier ceiling price" and "upper tier ceiling price" have the same meaning as those terms are given in the energy regulations (see § 150.4996-1(f)).

(c) Withholding adjustments—(1) General rule. (i) A purchaser who ascertains that the amount of tax withheld from any payment for crude oil was more or less than the amount of tax imposed by section 4986 (computed without regard to the net income limitation) with respect to that crude oil shall make adjustments in the amount to be withheld from subsequent payments to the same person as provided in this paragraph. For purposes of this paragraph, a purchaser has ascertained that the amount withheld was more or less than the tax imposed when the purchaser has sufficient information to be able to determine the amount of tax imposed by section 4986 (computed without regard to the net income limitation) with respect to that crude oil. Thus, adjustments are generally required when the purchaser made an incorrect calculation with respect to a prior payment, when the purchaser has withheld in accordance with the rules of paragraph (b)(2) because of the absence of an effective operator's certification and the purchaser later receives an effective certification, when an earlier certificatioin is corrected, or when the purchaser has withheld tax from a producer at the generally applicable rates and the purchaser subsequently receives a retroactively effective independent producer's certificate. Every adjustment under this paragraph shall be reflected on Form 720 (the return form which is prescribed for use in reporting windfall profit tax withholding). If the entire adjustment would be reported in the return for the same taxable period as the withholding giving rise to the adjustment, the return for that period shall reflect only the amount withheld as adjusted. Otherwise, every return on which an overpayment or underpayment is adjusted pursuant to this paragraph must include a statement explaining the adjustment, designating the return period to which the adjustment relates, and setting forth such other information as may be required by the instructions to the return.

(ii) Except as otherwise provided in subparagraph (3) of this paragraph, the purchaser must make a full adjustment by underwithholding or overwithholding in subsequent payments to the same person (whether or not from the same property) so that the total amount withheld is equal to the tax imposed by section 4986 (computed without regard to the net income limitation) as soon as possible. The full adjustment must be made, if possible, in the next payment. If it is not possible to complete the adjustment in the next payment, the purchaser shall adjust by underwithholding or overwithholding to the fullest extent possible in each subsequent payment until the adjustment is completed. However, no adjustment is to be made in the amount withheld from payments made for oil removed in a later calendar year or from payments made after the statement required by § 150.4997-2(c) (relating to annual statement of windfall profit tax liability) is furnished. If the error is one of underwithholding that cannot be fully adjusted under this paragraph (e.g., where the relationship between the producer and the purchaser has terminated, or where the next payment is for oil removed in the following calendar year), the producer is required to file a return at the end of the year in accordance with § 150.4997-1 unless the producer's liability for tax under section 4986 has been completely satisfied by reason of overwithholding with another purchaser. If the error is one of overwithholding that cannot be fully adjusted under this paragraph, the rules of § 150.6402-1 with respect to claims for credit or refund are applicable to the producer.

(2) Special rules. (i) If the need for an adjustment arises with respect to a payment for oil removed in a calendar year prior to the year within which the purchaser ascertains the need for an adjustment, no adjustment shall be made unless the adjustment can be made in a payment for oil removed in the prior year and unless that payment is made prior to the furnishing of the statement required by § 150.4997-2(c). However, see § 150.4997-2(c)(2) (relating to certain information furnished by purchaser to producer).

(ii) No amount shall be deducted or withheld from any payment in excess of the windfall profit with respect to the oil giving rise to that payment.

(iii) If, pursuant to section 4995 (a)(3)(D), the producer and purchaser agree to additional withholding, any amount withheld pursuant to the agreement shall be treated as an amount required to be withheld.

(3) Examples. The provisions of this paragraph may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). A, a purchaser of crude oil, has been withholding in accordance with the special rules of paragraph (b)(2) because the operator of the property from which A purchases oil has not provided A with the certification required by § 150.6050C-1. Subsequently, the operator does provide A with the certification, and A, withholding under the rules of paragraph (b)(1), ascertains that the amount withheld earlier exceeds the amount of tax imposed by section 4986 based upon the information provided by the operator. Although A withheld properly in accordance with the information available during the earlier period, the amount withheld is subject to the adjustment rules of this paragraph.

Example (2). Purchaser B, in the third calendar quarter of the year, ascertains that too little tax was withheld from payments for oil purchased in the preceding calendar quarter with respect to producer C. B must attempt to fully adjust the underwithholding by increasing the amount withheld from subsequent payments made to C to the full amount of windfall profit. If the adjustment has not been completed when B makes the final payment for oil removed during the calendar year, B should not continue the adjustments in payments for oil removed after the close of the calendar year. However, B is required to inform C of C's liability for the amount remaining unadjusted and to provide that information to the Internal Revenue Service in accordance with the rules of § 150.4997-2.

(d) Interim withholding rule—(1) Effective date. The rules of this paragraph apply to payments made after April 18, 1980, and before June 4, 1980, with respect to oil removed on or after March 1, 1980. These rules may, at the option of the purchaser, be applied with respect to payments made prior to the above period with respect to such oil.

(2) General rule. The purchaser of domestic crude oil shall deduct and withhold from amounts payable by that purchaser for the oil the amount specified in subparagraph (3) of this paragraph unless—

(i) The crude oil is removed from the premises (as defined in § 150.4996-1(d) before it is sold, or

(ii) The manufacture or conversion of crude oil into refined products begins before the oil is removed from the premises, or

(iii) The producer of the oil is an integrated oil company (as defined in § 150.4996-1(g)).

For purposes of section 4995(a)(1)(B), the amount specified in subparagraph (3) of this paragraph shall be considered the tax required to be withheld under section 4995(a)(1)(A).

(3) Amount to be deducted and withheld; options of purchaser. The amount to be deducted and withheld under paragraph (2) of this paragraph is, at the option of the purchaser, either—

(i) 70 percent of the excess, if any, of the purchase price per barrel of crude oil over $11.22 ($11.47 for oil removed after March 31, 1980), or

(ii) the amount that would be required to be withheld under paragraph (a) and (b) (or, at the purchaser's option, paragraphs (a), (b), and (c)) of this section if those paragraphs were in effect.

The purchaser may choose from among the above options with respect to each payment to which this paragraph applies.

(e) Extent of purchaser's liability. Every purchaser required to deduct and withhold tax under this section is liable for the tax required to be withheld, whether or not it is actually withheld by the purchaser. However, in no event shall the purchaser's liability for the tax required to be withheld exceed the producer's liability for the tax imposed by section 4986 (including the application of the net income limitation provided in section 4988(b) if all the data necessary for computing that limitation are available) with respect to oil sold to that purchaser, and the purchaser's liability shall abate to the extent that the producer's liability for the tax is paid (including payments by the producer or by the purchaser through adjustments in amounts later withheld). See paragraph (c) relating to adjustments in withholding. The producer from whom the correct amount was not withheld shall be liable to any purchaser for the amount of the producer's tax liability paid by the purchaser pursuant to this paragraph. The purchaser is relieved of liability to any other person for the amount of any tax withheld pursuant to this section and paid to the Internal Revenue Service or deposited with a duly designated depositary of the United States. See § 150.4995-3 relating to depositary requirements.

(f) Effective date. The rules of paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of this section are effective with respect to payments made after June 3, 1980, for oil removed on or after March 1, 1980. However, for purposes of applying paragraph (c) to payments described in the preceding sentence, payments made before June 4, 1980, for oil removed on or after March 1, 1980, shall be treated as if paragraphs (a) and (b) applied to them.

§ 150.4995-2 Producer's certificate.

(a) In general. The producer of "exempt Indian oil", as defined in section 4994(d), or the holder of any interest in crude oil that is a "qualified governmental interest" as defined in section 4994(a) or is a "qualified charitable interest" as defined in section 4994(b), may furnish an exemption certificate with respect to such oil to the purchaser of the oil or to the operator of the property from which the oil is produced (or, if the producer is a partner, to the partnership (see paragraph (e) of this section)), in accordance with the rules of paragraph (b) of this section. Any producer of "independent producer oil", as defined in section 4992, may furnish a certificate with respect to such oil to the purchaser of the oil or to the operator of the property from which the oil is produced (or, if the producer is a partner, to the partnership (see paragraph (e) of this section)), in accordance with the rules of paragraph (c) of this section. Any certificate provided under this section must set forth the facts that establish entitlement to the exemption or lower rates claimed. The certificate (or any revocation of a certificate) shall identify the producer by name, address, and employer identification (or social security) number and shall be signed by the producer (under the penalties of perjury except in the case of a revocation). For the requirement that the operator of a property who has received such a certificate furnish a copy of the certificate, or certify as to its contents, to each purchaser of oil from that property, see § 150.6050C-1 (f). For the effect of the furnishing of such a certificate see § 150.4995-1(b) (3) (relating to the withholding requirement). For the criminal penalty applicable to the furnishing of a false statement, see section 7206.

(b) Exemption certificate. For purposes of this section, an exemption certificate is a written statement certifying that the producer's oil is exempt from the tax imposed by section 4986 because the oil constitutes exempt Indian oil or the oil is from a qualified governmental interest or a qualified charitable interest. Any producer who furnishes an exemption certificate to an operator, purchaser, or partnership shall also file an exemption certificate with the Internal Revenue Service Center for the region with which the producer's income tax return is filed. Only one such certificate need be filed even though the producer may furnish certificates to more than one operator or purchaser.

(c) Independent producer's certificate. An independent producer's certificate is a written statement certifying that the entire amount of the producer's oil expected to be sold to the purchaser is subject to the rates of tax provided in section 4987(b)(2) because the oil constitutes "independent producer oil" as defined in section 4992. No certificates may be furnished with respect to oil if it is reasonable to believe that the number of barrels to be affected by the certificate, taken together with all other oil with respect to which a certificate has been furnished by the producer to any operator, purchaser, or partnership, will exceed the producer's independent producer amount (see section 4992(c) and (e)).

(d) Revocation of certificate. If the producer has furnished a certificate with respect to oil, and the producer subsequently discovers that the oil is not, or has ceased to be, eligible for certification under the rules of paragraphs (a) through (c) of this section, the producer shall furnish notice within 10 days to the person to whom the certificate was furnished that the certificate is revoked.

(e) Partnerships. If payment for oil sold by a partnership is to be made to the partnership rather than to each partner individually, any certifications permitted by this section shall be furnished by the partnership. Each certification shall state the percentage of the oil that is certified as exempt from tax or subject to a lower rate of tax. The partnership certification may certify oil as exempt from tax or subject to a lower rate of tax only to the extent that the partnership has received certifications from its partners. Any partnership furnishing a certification shall retain in its records, for so long as material in the administration of any internal revenue law, each certification from a partner that was used as the basis for the certification furnished by the partnership under this section.

(f) Substitution of operator for purchaser. If a purchaser of crude oil and the operator of the property from which the crude oil is produced make the election described in § 150.4995-4, the purchaser shall forward to the operator, at the time of the election, any exemption certificate or any notice or revocation previously received by the purchaser. The purchaser shall immediately forward to the operator any exemption certificate or any notice of revocation received after the election. The operator shall treat any exemption certificate or any notice of revocation forwarded by a purchaser as an exemption certificate or notice of revocation from the producer.

§ 150.4995-3 Depositary requirements.

(a) Deposits by integrated oil companies other than independent refiners—(1) In general. Every integrated oil company (as defined in § 150.4996-1(g)) other than an independent refiner (as defined in § 150.4996-1(h)) that is either liable as a producer for the tax imposed by section 4986 or is required as a purchaser to deduct and withhold tax pursuant to § 150.4995-1 shall make deposits with respect to semimonthly periods (as defined in subparagraph (3)(i) of this paragraph). The amount to be deposited for each semimonthly period is the amount of tax imposed by section 4986 on oil removed from the premises during that semimonthly period for which the company is liable as a producer, plus the amount required to be withheld by the company as a purchaser pursuant to §150.4995-1 from payments that have been or will be made for oil removed from the premises during that semimonthly period. The deposits shall be made on or before the depositary date (as defined in subparagraph (3)(ii) of this paragraph) for the semimonthly period in which the oil was removed. These depositary requirements will be considered to have been met for a semimonthly period with respect to estimated deposits only if—

(i) (A) The company's deposit for such semimonthly period is not less than 90 percent of the total amount otherwise required by this section to be deposited by it for such period, and (B) if such period occurs in a month other than the last month in a taxable period, it deposits any underpayment for such month by the 9th day of the second month following such month; or

(ii) (A) Its deposit for each semimonthly period in the month is not less than 45 percent of the total amount otherwise required by this section to be deposited by it for the month, and (B) if such month is other than the last month in a taxable period, it deposits any underpayment for such month by the 9th day of the second month following such month; or

(iii) (A) Its deposit for each semimonthly period in the month is not less than 50 percent of the total amount required by this section to be deposited by it for the second preceding calendar month (determined without regard to subdivisions (i) through (iv) of this subparagraph), and (B) if such month is other than the last month in a calendar quarter, it deposits any underpayment for such month by the 9th day of the second month following such month; or

(iv) (A) The requirements of (i) (A), (ii) (A), or (iii) (A) are satisfied for the first semimonthly period of a calendar month, and (B) the company's deposit for the second semimonthly period of that calendar month is, when added to the deposit for the first semimonthly period, not less than 90 percent of the total amount otherwise required by this section to be deposited by it for that month, and (C) if such period occurs in a month other than the last month in a calendar quarter, the company deposits any underpayment for such month by the 9th day of the second month following such month.

However, subdivisions (ii) and (iii) of this subparagraph shall not apply to any company that normally incurs in the first semimonthly period in each month more than 75 percent of its total liability for deposit for the month (determined without regard to subdivisions (i) through (iv)).

(2) Special requirement. If the aggregate amount of deposit liability for a taxable period (determined without regard to subdivisions (i) through (iv) of subparagraph (1) of this paragraph) exceeds the total amount deposited by the company pursuant to subparagraph (1) of this paragraph for such taxable period, then the company shall, on or before the last day of the first month following the close of the taxable period, deposit an amount by which the deposit liability exceeds the total deposits made pursuant to subparagraph (1) of this paragraph for the taxable period.

(3) Definitions. For purposes of this part—

(i) Semimonthly period. A "semimonthly period" means the first 15 days of a calendar month or the portion of a calendar month following the 15th day of such month.

(ii) Depositary date. The depositary date for deposits for semimonthly periods is the 9th day of the semimonthly period following the semimonthly period in which the oil was removed.

(4) Special rule for oil removed prior to April 4, 1980. For purposes of this paragraph, oil removed after February 29, 1980, and before April 4, 1980 shall be considered to have been removed on April 4, 1980.

(b) Independent refiners purchasing oil pursuant to a delayed payment contract. Purchasers that are independent refiners (as defined in § 150.4996-1(h)) shall make deposits for each calendar month in accordance with the rules of paragraph (c) of this section except in the case of oil purchased under a contract therefor under which no payment is required to be made by the purchaser before the 46th day after the close of the month in which the oil is purchased. In the case of oil purchased under such a contract, the deposits shall be made for each calendar month not later than the last day of the second month which begins after the month in which the oil was removed. The amount to be deposited for each month is the amount required to be withheld pursuant to §150.4995-1 from payments that have been or will be made for oil removed during that month.

(c) Deposits by other purchasers. Except as provided in paragraph (a) or (b) of this section, purchasers shall make deposits for each calendar month not later than 45 days after the close of that month. The amount to be deposited for each month is the amount required to be withheld pursuant to § 150.4995-1 from payments that have been or will be made for oil removed from the premises during that month.

(d) Special rule for determining operator's status. See section 4995(a) (7)(A)(ii) for a special rule for determining the status of the operator when the election provided by § 150.4995-4 is made.

(e) Payments by producers to correct underwithholding. If the amount of tax withheld from a producer for a calendar year is less than the total liability of the producer for the tax imposed by section 4986 with respect to oil removed during the calendar year and subject to withholding under § 150.4995-1, the producer shall remit the difference with a timely return filed under § 150.4997-1 or shall, on or before the last day for filing a return under § 150.4997-1, deposit such difference.

(f) Deposits by producers of tax due on oil not subject to withholding. (1)

In general. Except as provided in paragraph (a) (relating to certain integrated oil companies), every producer shall deposit for each calendar month the tax imposed by section 4986 on the removal in that month of oil that is not subject to withholding under §150.4995-1. The deposits shall be made not later than 45 days after the close of the month in which the oil was removed (or deemed removed under section 4988(c)(4)) from the premises. These deposit requirements will be considered to have been met for a month with respect to estimated deposits only if—

(i)(A) The producer's aggregate deposit liability under this subparagraph (1) for the three months of a taxable period is less than $100 and (B) the producer deposits the amount of tax owed on or before the last day for filing the return required by § 150.4997-1 for that taxable period or remits the tax owed with that return; or

(ii)(A) The producer's deposit for the month is not less than 90 percent of the total amount otherwise required by this section to be deposited by it for the month, and (B) the producer complies with the requirements of subparagraph (2) of this paragraph; or

(iii)(A) The producer's deposit for each month of the taxable period is not less than 30 percent of the total amount otherwise required by this section to be deposited by it for the three months of the taxable period, and (B) the producer complies with the requirements of subparagraph (2) of this paragraph; or

(iv)(A) The producer's deposit for the month is not less than 100 percent of the amount required by this section to be deposited by it for the third preceding month (determined without regard to subdivisions (i) through (iv)), and (B) the producer complies with the requirements of subparagraph (2) of this paragraph.

However, subdivisions (iii) and (iv) of this subparagraph shall not apply to any producer that normally incurs in the first month in each taxable period more than 45 percent of its total liability for deposit for the taxable period (determined without regard to subdivisions (ii) through (iv)).

(2) Special requirement. If the total liability for the tax imposed by section 4986 for a taxable period exceeds the total amount deposited by the producer pursuant to subparagraph (1) of this paragraph for such taxable period, then the producer shall deposit the difference not later than 45 days after the close of the last month in the taxable period.

(g) Government depositaries. Deposits required by this section shall be made with a Federal Reserve bank or, at the depositor's election, with an authorized financial institution. See paragraph (h)(2) of this section.

(h) Depositary forms—(1) In general. A person may make one, or more than one, remittance of the amount required to be deposited. However, a deposit for one taxable period shall be made separately from any deposit for another taxable period.

(2) Tax deposit forms. Each remittance of amounts required to be deposited by this section shall be accompanied by an FTD (Federal Tax Deposit, Excise Taxes) Form (Form 504). Such form shall be prepared in accordance with the instructions applicable thereto. The remittance, together with FTD Form 504, shall be forwarded to a Federal Reserve bank or, at the election of the person remitting the tax, to a financial institution authorized in accordance with Treasury Department Circular No. 1079, 31 CFR Part 214, to accept remittances of the taxes for transmission to a Federal Reserve bank. The timeliness of the deposit will be determined by the date the deposit is received (or is deemed received under section 7502 (e)) by a Federal Reserve bank or by the authorized financial institution, whichever is earlier. Each person making deposits pursuant to this section shall report on the return for the period with respect to which such deposits are made information regarding such deposits in accordance with the instructions applicable to such return.

(3) Procurement of prescribed forms. Copies of the applicable deposit forms will so far as possible be furnished to purchasers and producers. Such a person will not be excused from making a deposit, however, by the fact that no form has been furnished to it. A person not supplied with the proper form should make application therefor in ample time to make the required deposits within the time prescribed. A person may secure the forms or additional forms by applying therefor and supplying its name, identification number, address, and the taxable period to which the deposits will relate. The address of the person as entered on such form should be the address to which the receipt should be returned following validation by the Federal Reserve bank. Copies of FTD Form 504 may be secured by application to a director of an Internal Revenue Service Center.

§ 150.4995-4 Election of purchaser and operator to have operator withhold, deposit tax, etc.

(a) General rule. Pursuant to section 4995(a)(7)(B), it has been determined that the substitution of the operator for the purchaser will make the administration of the windfall profit tax more practicable only when the operator is otherwise required by § 150.4995-3 to make deposits as a purchaser of oil produced from a different oil reservoir. Consequently, a purported election pursuant to section 4995(a)(7) is invalid except in that circumstance. In the allowed case, the operator of the property and a purchaser of crude oil produced from that property may make a joint election under this section with respect to oil produced from the entire property or any portion thereof. While the election is in effect, all the requirements otherwise imposed upon the purchaser by chapter 45 or subtitle F of the Code or by this part are imposed upon the operator. The purchaser shall not be held responsible for failing to meet those requirements. The operator shall promptly notify all producers of oil from that property (or portion) that a joint election has been made and that all information otherwise required to be sent to the purchaser should be sent to the operator. If the operator makes payment for oil produced from the property to a partnership rather than directly to the producers, the notice shall be sent to the partnership. The operator and the purchaser must agree to transfer to the operator responsibility for meeting all the requirements otherwise imposed upon the purchaser in order for the agreement to constitute an effective election.

(b) Method of making election; termination of election. The joint election shall be made by the execution of a document, signed and dated by both the purchaser and operator, that states that both parties have agreed that the operator of the property shall be responsible for all the requirements otherwise imposed upon the purchaser by chapter 45 (or related provisions of subtitle F) of the Code or by this part. The purchaser and operator shall, within 10 days of the execution of the document, each forward a copy of the document to the Internal Revenue Service Center for the region with which it files its income tax return. The election shall remain in effect from the date of its execution (or later effective date specified in the election document) until either of the parties executes a document, signed, dated, and delivered to the other party, that declares that the joint election is to be terminated. The termination shall not take effect for at least 60 days after the execution of the termination document unless both the operator and the purchaser agree on an earlier effective date. The party executing the termination document shall promptly notify all producers of oil from that property of the termination and the resulting changes in responsibilities and shall, within 10 days of executing the termination document, forward a copy to the Internal Revenue Service Center for the region with which its income tax return is filed. The party receiving the termination document shall, within 10 days of receipt, forward a copy to the Internal Revenue Service Center for the region with which its income tax return is filed. Both the purchaser and operator shall retain in their records, for so long as they may be material in the administration of any internal revenue law, a copy of the joint election and any subsequent termination.

§ 150.4996-1 Definitions.

For purposes of this part and chapter 45 of the Code—

(a) Purchaser. The term "purchaser" includes only the first person (as defined in section 7701(a)(1)) purchasing domestic crude oil.

(b) Producer. The term "producer" means the holder of the economic interest with respect to the crude oil in place in the ground. However, in the case of a partnership, the partnership's economic interest in the oil shall be allocated among the partners on the basis of each partner's proportionate share of the partnership's income from the crude oil, and the partner to whom the oil is allocated shall be treated as the producer of the oil. In the case of a trust or estate, the entity is the producer rather than the beneficiaries.

(c) Operator. The term "operator" means the person that holds an operating mineral interest in the property and bears more of the responsibility for the management and operation of crude oil production from the property than any other holder of such an interest. In the case of a business entity, the operator is the entity and not its employee or owner. However, under section 4996(a)(2)(B), another person may be designated as the operator, provided that the district director for the district in which the property is located issues a written statement that the district director is satisfied that the designation does not jeopardize the collection of the tax and related interests of the Federal Government. Such a designation must be made in writing and signed by all persons holding operating mineral interests in the property.

(d) Removed from the premises; deemed removed. Oil is removed from the premises when the oil is physically transported off the premises. The term "premises" means "a tract or parcel of land" as that term is defined in paragraph (a)(3) of § 1.614-1. Except as otherwise provided in this paragraph, if oil is used on the premises or if the manufacture or conversion of crude oil into refined products begins on the premises, the oil shall be treated as removed on the day the use, manufacture or conversion begins. However, oil that is produced and then reinjected into the reservoir or used on the same tract or parcel of land to power a production process or production equipment is not removed from the premises so long as the oil is at no time transported off the tract or parcel of land from which it was produced. Furthermore, oil used to power a production process or production equipment will not be considered removed from the premises if it is transported from one tract or parcel of land to a contiguous tract or parcel of land, provided that 100 percent of the economic interest in the oil produced from both tracts or parcels of land is held by the same persons.

(e) Taxable period. The term "taxable period" means March 1980 and each calendar quarter beginning after March 1980.

(f) Energy regulations. The term "energy regulations" means regulations prescribed under section 4(a) of the Emergency Petroleum Allocation Act of 1973 (15 U.S.C. 753(a)) as amended (crude oil price control regulations). See section 4996(b)(8).

(g) Integrated oil company. The term "integrated oil company" means a taxpayer that both produces oil and is either a "retailer" or a "refiner".

(1) Retailer. The term "retailer" means any taxpayer described in section 613A(d)(2), i.e., one who directly, or through a related person. sells oil or natural gas (excluding bulk sales to commercial or industrial users) or any product derived from oil or natural gas—

(i) Through any retail outlet operated by the taxpayer or a related person, or

(ii) To any entity—

(A) Obligated under an agreement or contract with the taxpayer or related person to use a trademark, trade name, or service mark or name owned by such taxpayer or related person, in marketing or distributing oil or natural gas or any product derived from oil or natural gas, or

(B) Given authority, pursuant to an agreement or contract with the person or related person, to occupy any retail outlet owned, leased, or in any way controlled by the taxpayer or related person.

However, notwithstanding the preceding sentence, this subparagraph shall not apply in any case where the combined gross receipts from the sale of such oil, natural gas, or any product derived therefrom, for the taxable period of all retail outlets taken into account for purposes of this subparagraph do not exceed $1,250,000. For purposes of this subparagraph, sales of oil, natural gas, or any product derived from oil or natural gas shall not include sales made of such items outside the United States, if no domestic production of the person or a related person is exported during the calendar year or immediately preceding calendar year.

(2) Refiner. The term "refiner" means any taxpayer described in section 613A(d)(4), i.e., one who is engaged in the refining of crude oil or is related to a person so engaged, provided that on any day during the taxable period the refinery runs of the person and any related person exceed 50,000 barrels.

For purposes of this paragraph, the term "related person" has the same meaning as in section 613A(d)(2) and (4).

(h) Independent refiner. The term "independent refiner" means a refiner who

(1) Obtained, directly or indirectly, in the second preceding calendar quarter, more than 70 percent of his refinery input of domestic crude oil (or 70 percent of his refinery input of domestic and imported crude oil) from producers who do not control, are not controlled by, and are not under common control with such refiner, and

(2) Marketed or distributed in such quarter and continues to market or distribute a substantial volume of gasoline refined by him through branded independent marketers or nonbranded independent marketers. The term "branded independent marketer" means a person who is engaged in the marketing or distributing of refined petroleum products pursuant to—

(i) An agreement or contract with a refiner (or a person who controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with such refiner) to use a trademark, trade name, service mark, or other identifying symbol or name owned by such refiner (or any such person), or

(ii) An agreement or contract under which any such person engaged in the marketing or distributing of refined petroleum products is granted authority to occupy premises owned, leased, or in any way controlled by a refiner (or person who controls, is controlled by, or is under common control with such refiner), but who is not affiliated with, controlled by, or under common control with, any refiner (other than by means of a supply contract, or an agreement or contract described in subparagraph (1)(i) or (ii)) and who does not control such refiner. The term "nonbranded independent marketer" means a person who is engaged in the marketing or distributing of refined petroleum products, but who is not a refiner, is not a person who controls, is controlled by, is under common control with, or is affiliated with a refiner (other than by means of a supply contract), and is not a branded independent marketer.

(i) Property. Except as otherwise provided in section 4988(b) (relating to the net income limitation on windfall profit), the term "property" has the same meaning as that term is given by the energy regulations. See 10 C.F.R. § 212.72(a); FEA Rul. 1977-1, 42 F.R. 3628 (1977).

(j) Other. See section 4996(b) and (d) for definitions of "crude oil", "barrel", "domestic", "United States", "possession of the United States", "Indian tribe", and "Alaskan oil from Sadlerochit reservoir".

§ 150.4996-2 Severance tax adjustment.

(a) In general. The severance tax adjustment with respect to any barrel of crude oil is the amount by which any severance tax imposed with respect to that barrel exceeds the severance tax which would have been imposed if the barrel had been valued at its adjusted base price.

(b) Severance tax defined. For purposes of this section, the term "severance tax" means any tax imposed by a State (not including a political subdivision of a State) with respect to the extraction of oil that is determined on the basis of the gross value of the extracted oil. The term "severance tax" does not include a tax levied on the value of reserves in the ground or a tax levied on the basis of net proceeds from production. Furthermore, a tax on the removal of crude oil from the ground levied as a fixed fee per barrel is not a severance tax because the amount of that tax is not determined by reference to the gross value of the extracted oil.

(c) Limitations—(1) 15 percent limitation. A severance tax shall not be taken into account to the extent that the total rate thereof exceeds 15 percent.

(2) Increases after March 31, 1979. The amount of a State's severance tax taken into account under paragraph (a) of this section shall not exceed the amount which would have been imposed under that State's severance tax, as in effect on March 31, 1979, unless that excess is attributable to an increase in the rate of the severance tax (or to the imposition of a severance tax) which applies equally to all portions of the gross value of each barrel of oil subject to that tax. For purposes of this subparagraph, the conversion of a tax levied at a fixed fee per barrel into a tax based on the gross value of oil removed constitutes an initial imposition of a severance tax.

§ 150.4996-3 Special rules for post-1978 transfers of property.

(a) In general. The rules of this section apply for all purposes of this part and chapter 45 of the Code, including the application of the June 1979 energy regulations for purposes of this part and chapter 45 of the Code.

(b) Classification of oil from property transferred after 1978. If a portion of a property (as defined in paragraph (i) of § 150.4996-1) is transferred after December 31, 1978, any crude oil produced from any portion of the property constitutes oil from a stripper well property, newly discovered oil, or heavy oil only if such oil would be so classified if there had not been a transfer. The term "transfer" means any sale, exchange, lease, sublease, gift, bequest, devise, or other disposition (including a distribution by an estate, or a contribution to or distribution by a corporation, partnership, or trust, whether or not a taxable event) of rights (including rights less than fee simple) with respect to the property. Thus, for example, a change in the identity of the holder of a lease, mineral rights, royalty rights, or fee simple ownership rights with respect to a portion of the property is a transfer, even if such change is the result of corporate reorganization, gift, devise, or inheritance.

§ 150.4997-1 Returns and recordkeeping.

(a) Returns. Returns with respect to windfall profit taxes imposed by section 4986 shall be made as provided in this section.

(1) Quarterly return. A return for each taxable period (on Form 720, with Form 6047 attached thereto, in accordance with the instructions on those forms) shall be made by the following:

(i) Each purchaser of crude oil required to deduct and withhold tax pursuant to § 150.4995-1;

(ii) Each operator of a property who, having made an election pursuant to § 150.4995-4, is required to deduct and withhold tax; and

(iii) Each producer of crude oil the tax with respect to which is excepted from the withholding requirement by a subparagraph of § 150.4995-1(a).

(2) Annual return. A return for each calendar year shall be made by each producer of crude oil whose liability for tax with respect to oil that was removed during the four taxable periods of the calendar year exceeds the amount of tax withheld with respect to that oil.

See § 150.6076-1 for the rules relating to the time for filing the returns required by this section.

(b) Recordkeeping requirements. Each taxpayer liable for tax under section 4986, each producer or purchaser of domestic crude oil, each operator of a property from which domestic crude oil was produced, and each partnership or other person receiving information on behalf of or providing information to producers under this part shall keep records of all documents, material, and information necessary to the determination of the windfall profit tax or that affect his or her administrative obligations under the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980 or the regulations in this part, including material furnished to other persons, as well as information received from other persons. The records shall be kept at all times available for inspection by authorized internal revenue officers or employees, and shall be retained so long as the contents thereof may become material in the administration of any internal revenue law.

§ 150.4997-2 Certain information to be furnished by purchaser and others.

(a) In general. If a purchaser is subject to the rules for collection and deposit of tax under §§ 150.4995-1 and 150.4995-3 with respect to any crude oil purchased (or would be subject to such rules in the absence of an exemption certificate given pursuant to § 150.4995-1(b)(3)), such purchaser shall furnish the monthly statement required by paragraph (b) of this section and the yearly statement required by paragraph (c) of this section to each producer of the crude oil purchased, except that, if payment for the oil purchased is made to the operator rather than to the producer or to a partnership rather than the partners, the statements shall be furnished to the operator or the partnership, as the case may be. Such purchaser shall also file the information return required by paragraph (c) of this section with the Internal Revenue Service (in the case of yearly statements). Any person who receives a statement with respect to oil of which such person is not the producer shall, within 15 days of receipt of the statement, furnish to each producer or partnership of producers (and the Internal Revenue Service in the case of a yearly statement) the information relating to that producer's or partnership's share of the oil purchased.

(b) Monthly statement—(1) In general. The purchaser shall furnish statements for each calendar month showing the total amount of windfall profit tax withheld by the purchaser from payments made to the producer, operator, or partnership with respect to oil removed during that month. If the purchaser did not withhold tax from payments to that person because of the receipt of an exemption certificate, the monthly statement need only state the reason for the absence of withholding.

(2) Time for furnishing monthly statement. Any statement required to be furnished by a purchaser under this paragraph for any calendar month shall be furnished before the first day of the second month which begins after the close of the month to which the statement applies.

(c) Yearly statement of windfall profit tax liability and windfall profit tax deduction—(1) In general. For each calendar year, the purchaser shall furnish statements and shall file information returns with the Internal Revenue Service. A separate statement shall be furnished to and a separate information return shall be filed for each producer, operator, or partnership to whom the purchaser made payments for oil purchased during the calendar year. Each statement and information return shall contain the following information with respect to oil for which that person received payment:

(i) The quantity, removal price, severance tax adjustment, TAPS adjustment (if any), adjusted base price, and windfall profit tax liability (computed without regard to the net income limitation) for oil in each tier that was removed during that calendar year;

(ii) The total quantity of the taxable crude oil that was removed during that year;

(iii) The total amount of the windfall profit tax liability with respect to the oil incurred during that year; and

(iv) The amount of windfall profit tax withheld by the purchaser with respect to the oil removed during each month of that year and the total tax withheld with respect to oil removed during the year. For purposes of the preceding sentence, each category of tier 3 oil, independent producer oil withheld upon at a 50 percent rate, and independent producer oil withheld upon at a 30 percent rate shall be treated as a separate tier. If the purchaser did not withhold tax from payments to that person because of the receipt of an exemption certificate, the yearly statement and information return shall state that fact and shall set forth the above information clearly identified as relevant to tax consequences that would have occurred had the exemption certificate not been received.

(2) Additional information in the case of withholding adjustments. In the case of withholding adjustments that were not completed during the course of the year under paragraph (c) of § 150.4995-1, the purchaser shall provide additional information in the yearly statement and information return with respect to the person subject to the adjustment. The statement and information return shall set forth the amount ascertained to have been underwithheld or overwithheld, the amount actually adjusted, and the amount remaining unadjusted. If the adjustment was due to underwithholding, the statement shall also inform the recipient that the producer is liable for the amount of the tax under section 4986 in excess of the amount of such tax withheld by the purchaser and that this information is being supplied to the Internal Revenue Service. If the withholding adjustment was due to overwithholding, the statement shall inform the recipient that the purchaser was unable to fully adjust the overpayment under paragraph (c) of § 150.4995-1 and that the producer is eligible for a credit or refund which he may claim in accordance with the rules provided in § 150.6402-1.

(3) Statement of windfall profit tax deduction. The statement and information return required by this paragraph shall also set forth as the amount deductible for income tax purposes the total amount of windfall profit tax withheld from payments made to the producer, operator, or partnership during the calendar year without regard to when the oil was removed.

(4) Prescribed form. The statement and information return required by this paragraph shall be furnished and filed on Form 6248. The statement and return shall also contain such other information as is required by the form or its instructions. If the statement includes the information required by subparagraph (2) of this paragraph, the statement shall be furnished in duplicate. The information return shall be filed in the place and in the manner provided in the instructions to Form 6248.

(5) Time for furnishing yearly statement of windfall profit tax liability and filing yearly information returns. Each yearly statement required to be furnished by a purchaser under this paragraph for any calendar year shall be furnished on or before January 31 of the year immediately following the calendar year to which the statement applies, and each yearly information return required to be filed by a purchaser shall be filed on or before the due date for the return of tax imposed by section 4986 for the last taxable period of the calendar year.

(d) Cross reference. For the requirement that the operator furnish the statements and file the returns required by this section in the event that the operator and purchaser elect to have the operator deduct and withhold tax, etc., see § 150.4995-4.

§ 150.6050C-1 Information furnished by operator for purposes of windfall profit tax.

(a) In general. The operator of any property from which domestic crude oil is removed during a calendar month shall furnish a monthly statement, signed under the penalties of perjury, certifying the information specified in paragraph (b) of this section to:

(1) The purchaser of the oil, if the purchaser is required to withhold tax from payments for the oil pursuant to § 150.4995-1, or

(2) The producer, in any other case, except that if the producer of oil is a partner in a partnership, this statement may be furnished to the partnership if the producer and the partnership so agree. In that case, the partnership shall furnish the information to the producer with respect to that producer's share of the oil within 15 days of receipt.

(b) Information to be certified. In the case of exempt Alaskan oil or exempt front-end oil, the statement shall certify that the oil is exempt from tax. If a producer of the oil is an integrated oil company, the statement shall state the portion of which the integrated oil company is the producer. In all statements not certifying exemption, the following information is to be certified in the statement required under paragraph (a) of this section:

(1) The tier, for purposes of the tax imposed by section 4986, of the oil removed during the month and, if the oil is tier 3 oil, whether the oil constitutes newly discovered oil, heavy oil, or incremental tertiary oil;

(2) The amount of the oil removed and, if the oil removed includes oil of different tiers or categories, the amount of oil removed of each tier or category;

(3) The adjusted base price (within the meaning of section 4989) for each tier of oil removed;

(4) The severance tax adjustment, if any, provided under section 4996(c) with respect to each tier of oil removed;

(5) The TAPS adjustment, if any, provided under section 4996(d), and the average removal price for the month, in the case of oil from the Sadlerochit Reservoir;

(6) The property from which the oil was removed.

In the case of a statement furnished to a purchaser, the operator shall provide the information with respect to the aggregate amount of oil sold to that purchaser removed during the month. In the case of a statement furnished to a producer or partnership, the operator shall provide the information with respect to that person's allocable share of all oil removed from the premises during the month (including any oil delivered in kind to that producer).

(c) Time and manner of certifying information. The operator shall furnish the statement required under paragraph (a) of this section to the purchaser or producer, as the case may be, no later than the fifteenth day of the month following the calendar month in which the oil was removed. However, the statement with respect to oil removed during March 1980 shall be furnished no later than April 25, 1980.

(d) Agreement between operator and recipient of statement. If the purchaser or producer agrees in a signed statement that the operator shall be relieved of the duty of furnishing to such purchaser or producer—

(1) The statement otherwise required under paragraph (a) of this section, or

(2) Some or all of the information required under paragraph (b) of this section, the operator shall be relieved of such duty, provided that the purchaser or producer has the information necessary to comply with all of the requirements of this part without such statement or information. Such an agreement shall immediately cease to have effect when the operator, purchaser, or producer, by a written statement signed by an authorized person, notifies the other party that it is terminating the agreement.

(e) Special rule. If an agreement under §150.4995-4 is in effect between the operator and purchaser under which the operator assumes the obligations of the purchaser, the statement otherwise required by this section is not required with respect to oil subject to withholding pursuant to § 150.4995-1.

(f) Producer's certificate. If, pursuant to § 150.4995-2, the operator receives a producer's certificate certifying a share of production to be exempt or subject to a lower rate of tax, the operator shall either (1) furnish a copy of that certificate to each purchaser of oil from that property by the 15th day of the month following the month in which the certificate was received, or (2) if payment is to be received by the operator on behalf of the producers, furnish a certificate that summarizes the contents of the producers' certificates and states that the operator has received and has such certificates available for inspection.

(g) Penalties. See sections 6652(b), 7206, and 7241 (relating to civil and criminal penalties).

§150.6076-1 Time for filing return of windfall profit tax.

Each quarterly return required by paragraph (a)(1) of § 150.4997-1 shall be filed not later than the last day of the second month following the close of the taxable period. Each annual return required by paragraph (a)(2) of § 150.4997-1 shall be filed not later than the last day of the first February following the close of the calendar year in which the oil giving rise to the underpayment was removed.

§ 150.6402-1 Credit or refund of overpayment of windfall profit tax.

(a) In general. Any producer who pays, or is deemed to have paid under section 4995(a)(4), to the district director, director of the regional Internal Revenue Service Center, or the Director of the Office of International Operations more than the correct amount of the crude oil windfall profit tax imposed by chapter 45 for a taxable period may file a claim for refund of the overpayment or may claim credit for such overpayment, in the manner and subject to the conditions stated in this section and § 301.6402-2 of this chapter (Regulations on Procedure and Administration).

(b) Overpayments not attributable to amounts deducted and withheld—(1) In general. Except as provided in paragraph (b)(2) of this section, in the case of any overpayment of tax imposed by chapter 45 attributable solely to tax paid on crude oil not subject to withholding, the producer may file a claim for refund of the overpayment on or after the date for filing the return of such tax for such taxable period under section 6076, or may claim credit for such overpayment by making an adjustment on the return of windfall profit tax for the current or subsequent taxable periods in accordance with Form 720 and the instructions for such adjustments.

(2) Net income limitation. A producer who, due to the application of the net income limitation on windfall profit provided in section 4988(b), has overpaid the tax imposed by chapter 45 for any taxable period shall not file a claim for credit or refund of that overpayment until the income tax return is filed for the taxable year that includes the last day of the taxable period. The producer may file a claim for refund of the overpayment or claim credit for the overpayment against any liability for a tax imposed by chapter 1 in accordance with the form and instructions provided for that purpose.

(c) Overpayment attributable to amounts deducted and withheld. Under section 4995(a)(4), the producer of oil is treated as having paid any amount withheld on the last day of the first February after the calendar year in which the oil was removed from the premises. Therefore, if the sum of the producer's liability for the tax imposed by chapter 45 on oil subject to withholding under § 150.4995-1 for all taxable periods of a calendar year is less than the amount deducted and withheld from the producer under § 150.4995-1 with respect to oil removed during the calendar year, the producer may file a claim for credit or refund of the overpayment after such last day of February, except that, in the case of an overpayment due to the application of the net income limitation provided in section 4988(b), the claim for credit or refund shall not be filed until the income tax return is filed for the taxable year that includes the last day of the last taxable period of such calendar year. The producer may file a claim for refund of the overpayment or may claim credit for the overpayment against any liability in respect to a tax imposed by chapter 1 in accordance with the form and instructions provided for that purpose. The producer shall attach to the claim a copy of all Forms 6248 furnished to the prodcer pursuant to § 150.4997-2.

(d) Special interim rule for exempt producers. If a producer of any crude oil from a qualified governmental interest (as defined in section 4994(a)) or qualified charitable interest (as defined in section 4994(b)), or a producer of exempt Indian oil (as defined in section 4994(d)), has had tax withheld from payments made for oil removed before July 1, 1980, the producer may file a claim for refund on or after July 1, 1980. The claim shall be filed on Form 843 and shall have attached a copy of each monthly statement received pursuant to § 150.4997-2.

There is need for the immediate guidance provided by the provisions contained in this Treasury decision. For this reason, it is found impracticable to issue this Treasury decision with notice and public procedure under subsection (b) of section 553 of title 5 of the United States Code or subject to the effective date limitation of subsection (d) of that section.

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in sections 4992, 4993, 4995, 4996, 4997, 6050C, 6402, and 7805 of title 26 of the United States Code and section 101(i)(2) of the Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980.

Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Rev. Rul. 80-112

ISSUE

Do claims against a decedent's estate for funeral and administrative expenses, doctor's bills from the decedent's last illness, wages due a household employee, and a one-year family allowance provided under state law have priority over claims for federal taxes?

FACTS

An individual died in September 1978, leaving property insufficient to pay taxes owed the United States for which it had no lien and other debts including funeral and administrative expenses, doctor's bills from the decedent's last illness, and wages due a household employee.

The state in which the decedent resided provides that a reasonable one-year family allowance be paid out of a decedent's estate.

Under the laws of the state, claims against the estate of a deceased debtor are to be paid in the following order: administration expenses, funeral expenses, costs of last illness, family allowances, wages of household employees, and all other claims.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 3466 of the Revised Statutes (31 U.S.C. section 191, 1970) provides that whenever any person indebted to the United States is insolvent, or whenever the estate of any deceased debtor, in the hands of the executors or administrators, is insufficient to pay all the debts due from the deceased, the debts due to the United States shall be first satisfied.

Funeral and administrative expenses and the one-year family allowance provided by state law are under state law not debts of the decedent, but are charges against the property of the decedent to be deducted before the payment of debts. Costs of the decedent's last illness and the wages of household servants are debts from the decedent.

HOLDING

The claims against the decedent's estate for funeral and administrative expenses and the family allowance have priority over federal tax claims of the government for which it has no lien. However, such federal tax claims are superior to claims against a decedent's estate for doctor's bills from the decedent's last illness and wages due a household employee.

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this revenue procedure is to further extend the time set forth in Rev. Proc. 77-47, 1977-2 C.B. 580, in which contractors and subcontractors with contracts subject to the Vinson-Trammell Act, 48 Stat. 503 (current version at 10 U.S.C. sections 2382 and 7300 (1970)) in taxable years that end after September 30, 1976 must file certain reports. This extension is being made to permit consideration of comments received on the notice of proposed rulemaking under the Vinson-Trammell Act that was published in the Federal Register on October 26, 1979 as well as the further comments presented at the hearing on such rulemaking that was held on March 12, 1980.

SEC. 2. EXTENSION AND EFFECT ON OTHER DOCUMENTS

Section 4.02 of Rev. Proc. 77-47, as modified by Rev. Proc. 78-38, 1978-2 C.B. 542, Rev. Proc. 79-25, 1979-1 C.B. 566 and Rev. Proc. 79-53, 1979-43 I.R.B. 26, is further modified by extending to October 15, 1980 the time for filing Forms 949 and 949-A for taxpayers with taxable years that end before January 31, 1980.

An extension of the time granted taxpayers for filing Forms 949 and 949-A does not extend the time for filing their federal income tax returns.

Interest on any excess profits will be charged from the due date of the report, without regard to any extensions, to the date of payment. However, taxpayers who repay excess profits by October 15, 1980 will not be subject to the penalty for failure to pay tax with respect to the excess profits under section 6651 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Rev. Proc. 79-53, 1979-43 I.R.B. 26, which provides that Rev. Proc. 77-47 is extended to April 15, 1980 for taxpayers with tax years that ended before July 31, 1979, is superseded.

Rev. Proc. 77-47 is further modified.

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this Revenue Procedure is to set forth guidelines that will be used by the Internal Revenue Service in considering requests for rulings under section 367(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code where tangible property is transferred by a United States person to a foreign corporation in a transaction described in section 351 and the tangible property transferred is leased by the foreign corporation to other persons who will not use it in the United States.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND

Rev. Proc. 68-23, 1968-1 C.B. 821, sets forth the guidelines used by the Internal Revenue Service in considering requests for rulings under section 367 of the Code in respect of certain types of transactions involving foreign corporations.

Section 3.02(1) of Rev. Proc. 68-23 provides that favorable consideration under section 367 of the Code will ordinarily be given to an exchange described in section 351 where property is transferred to a foreign corporation controlled by the transferor, and such property is devoted by the transferee foreign corporation to the active conduct, in any foreign country, of a trade or business. Section 3.02(1) further provides that it is contemplated that the transferee foreign corporation, in addition to the active conduct of a trade or business, will have need for a substantial investment in fixed assets in such business.

Section 3.02(1)(b)(ii) of Rev. Proc. 68-23 limits section 3.02(1) by providing that a favorable ruling under section 367 of the Code generally will not be issued for an exchange described in section 351 where the property to be transferred to the foreign corporation will be licensed or leased by the transferee foreign corporation after the transfer.

However, section 2.02 of Rev. Proc. 68-23 provides that notwithstanding a contrary statement or implication contained in the guidelines a taxpayer may establish that a favorable ruling under section 367 of the Code should be issued based on all the facts and circumstances of the case.

SEC. 3. GUIDELINES

Where tangible property is transferred to a foreign corporation by a United States person, in a transaction described in section 351 of the Code, and the tangible property transferred will be leased by the foreign corporation to other persons, who will not use it in the United States, a favorable ruling under section 367(a)(1) ordinarily will be issued if the taxpayer establishes, based on all the facts and circumstances, that the leasing of the tangible property by the foreign corporation will represent the active conduct of a trade or business in the foreign country, that the foreign corporation will have need for a substantial investment in fixed assets (the tangible property transferred) in such business, and that the lessee will not use the tangible property in the United States. The active conduct of a trade or business requires that the employees of the foreign corporation will perform substantial marketing, customer servicing, repair and maintenance and other substantial operational activities with respect to the leased tangible property.

SEC. 4. INQUIRIES

Inquiries in regard to this Revenue Procedure should refer to its number and should be addressed to the Assistant Commissioner (Technical), Attention: T:C:R, Internal Revenue Service, Washington, D.C. 20224.

SEC. 5. EFFECT ON OTHER DOCUMENTS

Rev. Proc. 68-23 is amplified.

Part IV. Items of General Interest

Submission of Form W-4

Announcement 80-50

Recently published final regulations will help identify persons who reduce the income tax withheld from their pay by incorrectly claiming either exemption from withholding or too many withholding allowances. The final regulations were published in the March 11, 1980, T.D. 7682, Federal Register.

The new regulations require that employers send the Internal Revenue Service copies of all Forms W-4, Employee's Withholding Allowance Certificates, that show 10 or more withholding allowances. They must also send copies of all Forms W-4 showing exempt status, but only for employees usually earning wages of more than $200 per week.

The new rules apply to Forms W-4 received by employers from their employees on or after April 1, 1980, rather than October 9, 1979, as originally proposed. Therefore, employers should disregard the line provided on Forms 941, 941E, and 941-M (Revised January 1980) for the first quarter of 1980.

Employers will be required to transmit the W-4 copies quarterly with Forms 941, 941E, or 941-M. However, at their option, employers may send copies of Forms W-4 more often than quarterly. Each employer choosing to do this must include a statement showing the employer's name, address, employer identification number, and the number of Forms W-4 being sent.

Employers who want to transmit W-4 data to the Service on magnetic media should refer to the specifications in Rev. Proc. 80-8, 1980-10 I.R.B. 18.

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of a prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

Life insurance companies; reserves; combined disability and life coverage; cancellable. Reserves held by a life insurance company for payment of disability benefits under one-year group term life insurance contracts, which provide both disability insurance and term life insurance coverage that may be terminated at any time by the insurance company, do not qualify as life insurance reserves within the meaning of section 801(b) of the Code; Rev. Rul. 70-190 clarified.

In a statutory merger, a life insurance company that computed its reserves on a preliminary term basis acquired another life insurance company that had smaller reserves, which it had elected under section 818(c) of the Code to revalue on the approximate revaluation basis. The revaluation of the acquired reserves on the preliminary term basis is a change in the basis for computing the reserves, and the resulting adjustment is subject to the 10-year spread rule of section 810(d)(1).

Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on Subpart A, Tax Conventions and related Treasury Decisions and Revenue Rulings; Subpart B, Legislation and related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of Revenue Rulings, Revenue Procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical Indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On July 6, 1979, the Federal Register proposed amendments to the Income Taxe Regulations (26 CFR Part 1) under sections 43 and 6012 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and to the Employment Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 31) under section 6051 of the Code (44 FR 39477). The amendments were proposed to conform the regulations to sections 103, 104 and 105(a), (c), and (d) of the Revenue Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 2771). Several comments were received with respect to the proposed amendments and taken into account in this Treasury decision. No public hearing was requested or held. A number of comments received with respect to this notice of proposed rulemaking which in fact relate to a separate notice of proposed rulemaking, published in the Federal Register on May 9, 1979 (44 F.R. 27089), involving the advance payment of the earned income credit under section 3507 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 have not been taken into account by this Treasury decision since they were not relevant to this Treasury decision. Those comments will be taken into account in the context of the regulation project involving advance payment of the earned income credit. This proposed Treasury decision adopts the rules contained in the notice of proposed rulemaking with three minor changes. One change is to clarify the rule that earned income includes compensation excluded from gross income and to state that earned income does not include unemployment compensation.

ALLOWANCE OF CREDIT

The regulations adopted by this Treasury decision provide rules reflecting the changes in the earned income credit as allowed by section 43. In the case of an individual eligible for the earned income credit, the credit is 10 percent of the first $5,000 of the individual's earned income for the taxable year. Prior to January 1, 1979, the credit allowed by section 43 was 10 percent of the first $4,000 of the individual's earned income for the taxable year.

LIMITATION ON AMOUNT OF CREDIT

The regulations adopted by this Treasury decision reflect the new rules for the limitation on the amount of the earned income credit. The amount of credit must not exceed the excess, if any, of $500 over 12.5 percent of that amount of adjusted gross income or, if greater, that amount of earned income of the taxpayer as exceeds $6,000 for the taxable year. Prior to January 1, 1979, the amount of credit allowed a taxpayer for a taxable year was reduced by an amount equal to 10 percent of so much of adjusted gross income or, if greater, earned income of the taxpayer for the taxable year as exceeded $4,000.

ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUAL

The regulations adopted by this Treasury decision provide rules reflecting the change in definition of the term "eligible individual." An eligible individual is either (1) an individual who is married, who is entitled to an exemption deduction for a child (within the meaning of section 151 (e)(3)), and who has the same principal place of abode as the child which place of abode is in the United States; (2) an individual who is a surviving spouse (as determined under section 2(a) of the Code) whose principal place of abode is in the United States; or (3) an individual who is a head of household (as determined under section 2(b) of the Code without regard to paragraphs (b)(1)(A)(ii) and (B)) whose principal place of abode is in the United States. This Treasury decision provides that the term "principal place of abode" is defined by reference to § 1.2-2(c). To qualify as an eligible individual, the individual must not have been entitled to exclude any gross income under section 911 or 931.

EARNED INCOME

The regulations adopted by this Treasury decision provide rules reflecting the change in definition of the term "earned income." Earned income means wages, salaries, tips, other employee compensation, and net earnings from self-employment (within the meaning of section 1402(a)). The determination of earned income is subject to certain special rules. This Treasury decision provides that unemployment compensation is not earned income.

MISCELLANEOUS

The regulations adopted by this Treasury decision provide rules for the coordination of the earned income credit with the advance payment of the earned income credit by employers under section 3507 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. This Treasury decision clarifies that the amount of any advance payment of the earned income credit is treated as an additional amount of tax imposed by chapter 1 of the Code. This Treasury decision also amends § 1.6012-1(a)(2) to conform to section 6012 of the Code, as amended, which requires individuals who receive advance payments of earned income credit to make a return of income. This Treasury decision also amends § 31.6051-1 to conform to section 6051, as amended, which requires employers to furnish on a written statement (Form W-2) to employees the total amount of advance payments of earned income credit paid to the employee under section 3507 of the Code for the calendar year.

The regulations adopted by this Treasury decision impose no new reporting burdens or recordkeeping requirements not already imposed by statute. The principal effect of the final regulations is to conform existing regulations under sections 43, 6012 and 6051 of the Code to changes made by the Revenue Act of 1978. The Treasury Department will review these regulations from time to time based upon comments received from offices within the Treasury, the Internal Revenue Service, and other governmental agencies, and comments received from the public.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is Barbara B. Coughlin of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing these regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, the following amendments to 26 CFR Part 1 and 26 CFR 31 are hereby adopted:

INCOME TAX REGULATIONS (26 CFR Part 1)

Paragraph 1. Section 1.43-1 is amended by revising the heading and paragraphs (a) and (e). These revised provisions read as follows:

§ 1.43-1 Earned income credit for taxable years beginning before January 1, 1979.

(a) Allowance of credit. For taxable years beginning before January 1, 1979 (and after December 31, 1974), subject to the limitations of paragraph (b) of this section, an eligible individual (as defined in paragraphs (c)(1) and (2) of this section) is allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by chapter 1 for the taxable year, an amount equal to 10 percent of the first $4,000 of earned income (as defined in paragraph (c)(3) of this section) for the taxable year. For later taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, see § 1.43-2.

* * * * *

(e) Effective dates. The rules of this section apply only for taxable years beginning both after December 31, 1974, and before January 1, 1979. For later taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, see § 1.43-2.

Par. 2. A new § 1.43-2 is added immediately after § 1.43-1. This new section reads as follows:

§ 1.43-2 Earned income credit for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

(a) Allowance of credit. For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, subject to the limitations of paragraph (b) of this section, an eligible individual (as defined in paragraph (c)(1) of this section) is allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by subtitle A of the Code for the taxable year, an amount equal to 10 percent of the first $5,000 of earned income (as defined in paragraph (c)(2) of this section) for the taxable year. For earlier taxable years beginning before January 1, 1979, see § 1.43-1.

(b) Limitations—(1) Amount of credit. The amount of the credit allowed by section 43 and paragraph (a) of this section for the taxable year must not exceed the excess, if any, of $500 over 12.5 percent of that amount of the adjusted gross income (or, if greater, the earned income) of the taxpayer for the taxable year which exceeds $6,000. For the meaning of the term "earned income," see paragraph (c)(2) of this section. Adjusted gross income is determined under section 62 and the regulations thereunder. If an individual has adjusted gross income or earned income of $10,000 or more, the individual is not entitled to the credit.

(2) Married individuals. No credit is allowed by section 43 and paragraph (a) of this section in the case of an eligible individual who is married (within the meaning of section 143 and the regulations thereunder) unless the individual and spouse file a single return jointly (a joint return) for the taxable year (see section 6013 and the regulations thereunder relating to joint returns of income tax by husband and wife). The requirements of the preceding sentence do not apply to an eligible individual who is not considered as married under section 143(b) and the regulations thereunder (relating to certain married individuals living apart).

(3) Length of taxable year. No credit is allowed by section 43 and paragraph (a) of this section in the case of a taxable year covering a period of less than 12 months. However, the rule of the preceding sentence does not apply to a taxable year closed by reason of the death of the eligible individual.

(c) Definitions—(1) Eligible individual. For purposes of this section, an eligible individual is an individual who meets the following requirements of this paragraph (c)(1).

(i) For the taxable year the individual must meet any one of the following three requirements set forth, respectively, in (A), (B), and (C) of this subdivision (i).

(A) The individual must be married (within the meaning of section 143 and the regulations thereunder) and be entitled to a deduction under section 151 for a child (within the meaning of section 151(e)(3) and the regulations thereunder). The child must have the same principal place of abode (as defined in § 1.2-2(c)) as the individual and that principal place of abode must be in the United States for the entire taxable year.

(B) The individual must qualify as a surviving spouse (as determined under section 2(a) and the regulations thereunder). Thus, the spouse of the individual must have died within the period of the 2 taxable years immediately preceding the individual's taxable year. Also, the individual must have furnished over half the cost of maintaining as the individual's home a household in the United States for the entire taxable year which is the principal place of abode of a child of the individual who qualifies as a dependent for whom the individual is entitled to a deduction under section 151.

(C) The individual must qualify as a head of household (as determined under section 2(b) and the regulations thereunder but without regard to section 2(b)(1)(A)(ii) and (B) and the regulations thereunder). Thus, the individual cannot be married as of the close of the taxable year and cannot qualify as a surviving spouse under section 2(a). Also, the individual must have furnished over half the cost of maintaining as the individual's home a household in the United States for the entire taxable year which is the principal place of abode of a child or descendant of the individual who is unmarried or who qualifies as a dependent for whom the individual is entitled to a deduction under section 151.

(ii) For the entire taxable year, the individual must not be entitled to exclude any amount from gross income under section 911 (relating to earned income by individuals in certain camps outside the United States) or section 931 and the regulations thereunder (relating to income from sources within the possessions of the United States).

(iii) The rules of this paragraph (c)(1) are illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). A, who is married and a member of the United States Armed Forces, maintains his household outside the United States for part of the taxable year. A is not an eligible individual. However, if A maintains his household inside the United States for the entire taxable year and is only temporarily absent therefrom by reason of military service and if the household is his principal place of abode and the principal place of abode of his child who receives over half of his support from the taxpayer for the calendar year in which the taxable year of the taxpayer begins and who either has less than $1,000 of gross income for the calendar year in which the individual's taxable year begins or who has not attained the age of 19 at the close of the calendar year in which the individual's taxable year begins or is a student, then the individual is an eligible individual if he meets the requirements of subdivision (ii) of this paragraph.

Example (2). B's wife died in 1975 and B has not remarried. For his entire taxable year beginning January 1, 1979, B maintains his household inside the United States. The household is, for the entire taxable year, B's principal place of abode and the principal place of abode of B's unmarried grandchild whose natural parents are deceased. Thus B qualifies as a head of household (as determined under section 2(b) without regard to subparagraphs (A)(ii) and (B) of section 2(b)(1)). In these circumstances, regardless of whether B provides sufficient support to claim the grandchild as a dependent, B is an eligible individual if he meets the requirements of subdivision (ii) of this paragraph.

Example (3). C is married and maintains his household inside the United States for the entire taxable year. The household is his principal place of abode and, for the entire year, is also the principal place of abode of a 12 year old child whose natural parents are deceased and who is placed with C by a State agency to provide the child with foster care. C receives compensation from the State agency to cover all of the cost of maintaining the child in his home. The child is in C's care and is cared for as C's own child. In these circumstances, the child is C's foster child, but C is not able to claim the child as a dependent since C did not provide half the child's support for the year. C is not eligible for the earned income credit.

Example (4). Assume the same facts as in example (3) except that C receives no compensation from the State agency, and C provides over half the child's support and is able to claim the child as a dependent. C is an eligible individual if he meets the requirements of subdivision (ii) of this paragraph.

Example (5). D's husband died in 1974 and D has not remarried. For the entire taxable year beginning January 1, 1979, D maintains her household inside the United States. The household is D's principal place of abode and, for the entire taxable year, is also the principal place of abode of D's unmarried son. D cares for her son in all respects except that her parents provide over half of the son's support. D qualifies as a head of household (as determined under section 2(b) without regard to subparagraph (A)(ii) and (B) of section 2(b)(1)). D is an eligible individual if D meets the requirements of subdivision (ii) of this paragraph.

Example (6). Assume the same facts as in example (5) except that D is married. Since D cannot qualify as a head of household, and D's son cannot be claimed as D's dependent, D is not an eligible individual.

(2) Earned income. For purposes of this section, earned income means—

(i) Wages, salaries, tips, other employee compensation, and

(ii) Net earnings from self-employment (within the meaning of section 1402(a) and the regulations thereunder).

Earned income includes compensation excluded from gross income, such as disability income excluded under section 105(d), the rental value of a parsonage excluded under section 107, and the value of meals and lodging furnished for the convenience of the employer excluded under section 119. Earned income is computed without regard to any community property laws which may otherwise be applicable. Earned income is reduced by any net loss in earnings from self-employment. Earned income does not include amounts received as a pension, an annuity, unemployment compensation, or workmen's compensation, or an amount to which section 871(a) and the regulations thereunder apply (relating to income of nonresident alien individuals not connected with United States business).

(d) Examples. The application of this section is illustrated by the following examples. For purposes of these examples, assume that the eligible individual does not receive a pension, an annuity, or an amount to which section 871(a), 911, or 931 applies.

Example (1). A and B (married individuals) maintain a household inside the United States which is their principal place of abode and the principal place of abode of their two children who are 12 and 14 years old. A and B are calendar year taxpayers and, for 1979, they file a joint return. A and B have a total earned income of $7,600 (computed without regard to any community property laws) and have adjusted gross income of less than $7,600. The earned income credit of $300 is determined as follows:

Basic credit (10 percent of $5,000 under paragraph (a) of this Section)			$500
Initial limitation amount		$500
Less: Reduction under paragraph (b)(1) of this section:
Earned income for taxable year	$7,600
Less	$6,000
Excess over $6,000	1,600
12½ percent of excess ($1,600)		$200
Maximum credit (if less than basic credit)			$300

Example (2). Assume the same facts as in example (1) except that A and B have earned income of $4,000 and adjusted gross income of $7,000. The earned income credit of $375 is determined as follows:

Basic credit (10 percent of $4,000 under paragraph (a) of this section)			$400
Initial limitation amount		$500
Less: Reduction under paragraph (b)(1) of this section:
Adjusted gross income for taxable year	$7,000
Less	$6,000
Excess over $6,000	$1,000
12½ percent of excess ($1,000)		$125
Maximum credit (if less than basic credit)			$375

(e) Coordination of credit with advance payments—(1) Recapture of excess advance payments. If any advance payment of earned income credit under section 3507 is made to an individual by an employer during any calendar year, then the total amount of these advance payments to the individual in that calendar year is treated as an additional amount of tax imposed (by chapter 1 of the Code) upon the individual on the tax return for the individual's last taxable year beginning in that calendar year.

(2) Reconciliation of payments advanced and credit allowed. Any additional amount of tax under paragraph (e)(1) of this section is not treated as a tax imposed by chapter 1 of the Code for purposes of determining the amount of any credit (other than the earned income credit) allowable under subpart A, part I, subchapter A, chapter 1 of the Code.

Par. 3. Paragraph (a)(2) of § 1.6012-1 is amended by adding a new subdivision (vii) immediately after subdivision (vi). This new subdivision reads as follows:

§ 1.6012-1 Individuals required to make returns of income.

(a) Individual citizen or resident. * * *

(2) * * *

(vii) For taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, an individual who receives payments during the calendar year in which the taxable year begins under section 3507 (relating to advance payment of earned income credit) must file an income tax return.

EMPLOYMENT TAX REGULATIONS
(26 CFR Part 31)

Par. 4. Section 31.6051-1 is amended as follows:

1. Paragraph (a)(1)(i) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of inferior subdivision (f), by striking out the period at the end of inferior subdivision (g) and inserting in its place ", and" and by adding a new inferior subdivision (h) immediately after inferior subdivision (g). This new inferor subdivision (h) reads as set forth below.

2. Paragraph (b)(1) is amended by striking out "and" at the end of subdivision (iv), by striking out the period at the end of subdivision (v) and inserting in its place ", and" and by adding a new subdivision (vi) immediately after subdivision (v). This new subdivision (vi) reads as set forth below.

§ 31.6051.1 Statement for employees.

(a) Requirement if wages are subject to withholding of income tax—(1) General rule. (i) * * *

(h) The total amount paid to the employee under section 3507 (relating to advance payment of earned income credit).

* * * * *

(b) Requirement if wages are not subject to withholding of income tax—(1) General rule. * * *

(vi) The total amount paid to the employee under section 3507 (relating to advance payment of earned income credit).

Rulings; untimely notification; advance ruling period. An organization having no financial support filed the notice required by section 508(a) of the Code more than 15 months after the end of the month it was organized. The organization may obtain an advance ruling treating it as an organization described in sections 170(b)(1)(A)(vi) and 509(a)(1) for the period beginning on the date the notice was filed, which is the date the organization is recognized as exempt under section 501(c)(3).

Rev. Rul. 80-113

ISSUE

May an organization having no financial support and filing its notice under section 508(a) of the Internal Revenue Code more than 15 months after the end of the month it was organized obtain an advance ruling treating it as described in sections 170(b)(1)(A)(vi) and 509(a)(1) during an advance ruling period beginning on the date it becomes exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3)?

FACTS

The organization received no financial support from December 28, 1973, the date it was organized exclusively for purposes within section 501(c)(3) of the Code, through May 1, 1976, the date it applied to the Internal Revenue Service for recognition of exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3). It requested an advance ruling under section 1.170A-9(e)(5) of the Income Tax Regulations in order to be treated as described in sections 170(b)(1)(A)(vi) and 509(a)(1) during an advance ruling period. Pursuant to section 1.170A-9(e)(5), it established that it could reasonably be expected to meet the requirements of section 1.170A-9(e)(2) or (3). It is not an organization described in section 508(c)(1)(A) or 508(c)(2) to which section 508(a) is not applicable. It is not an organization described in section 509(a)(3) or (4).

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 508(a) of the Code provides that an organization, other than one described in section 508(c), organized after October 9, 1969, shall not be treated as an organization described in section 501(c)(3) unless it has given notice to the Secretary, in such manner as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe, that it is applying for recognition of such status.

Section 1.508-1(a) of the regulations provides, in part, that an organization seeking exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code must, within fifteen months from the end of the month in which it was organized, give the Commissioner notice that it is applying for exemption. If it fails to give notice within this period, it will be treated as exempt, provided it otherwise qualifies, only from the date it files its application constituting such notice.

Section 508(c)(1)(B) of the Code provides that section 508(a) shall not apply to any organization which is not a private foundation under section 509 and whose gross receipts in each taxable year are normally not more than $5,000.

Section 509 of the Code provides that an organization described in section 501(c)(3) is not a private foundation if it is described in section 509(a)(1), (2), (3) or (4).

Rev. Rul. 77-207, 1977-1 C.B. 152, holds that if, pursuant to section 508(a) of the Code, an organization's exemption from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) is effective only from the date it filed an application for recognition of exemption, such organization is neither described in section 501(c)(3) nor classifiable as a private foundation under section 509 prior to the date as of which, pursuant to section 508(a), it is recognized as exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3).

Rev. Rul. 77-208, 1977-1 C.B. 153, holds that if, pursuant to section 508(a) of the Code, an organization is exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) effective only from the date it filed an application for recognition of exemption, it is considered a new organization as of that date and may obtain an advance ruling treating it as described within sections 170(b)(1)(A)(vi) and 509(a)(1), provided, pursuant to section 1.170A-9(e)(5) of the regulations, it can reasonably be expected to meet the requirements of section 1.170A-9(e)(2) or (3).

The organization in the present case received no financial support prior to May 1, 1976, the date it applied for recognition of exemption. For this reason, it was not described in section 170(b)(1)(A)(vi) of the Code on that date and, therefore, was not excepted by section 508(c)(1)(B) from the notice requirement of section 508(a). It follows that, pursuant to the holding in Rev. Rul. 77-207, the organization was neither exempt under section 501(c)(3) nor a private foundation as defined in section 509(a) prior to the date the notice was filed; and, pursuant to the holding in Rev. Rul. 77-208, it is treated as a new organization as of the date the notice was filed.

HOLDING

Since the organization has established that it can reasonably be expected to meet the requirements of section 1.170A-9(e)(2) or (3) of the regulations, it may obtain an advance ruling treating it as described in sections 170(b)(1)(A)(vi) and 509(a)(1) of the Code during an advance ruling period beginning on May 1, 1976, the date on which the section 508(a) notice was filed and the date as of which it is treated as a new organization and recognized as exempt under section 501(c)(3).

Christian Science health care facility. An otherwise qualifying nonprofit organization that operates a health care facility for patients under the care of Christian Science practitioners receives its income principally from contributions, patients' fees, medicare, medicaid, and health insurance. The organization accepts patients who are unable to pay as funds permit. The organization qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. Rev. Rul. 78-427 superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-114

ISSUE

Is an organization that operates a Christian Science health care facility qualified for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The organization, which otherwise qualifies for exemption under section 501(c)(3) of the Code, was formed for the purpose of providing health care, comfort, and maintenance to persons seeking health in a manner consistent with the teachings of the First Church of Christ, Scientist (Christian Science Church). The Church teaches that all forms of mental or physical illness and injury are merely symptoms of spiritual disorder, and that persons who are suffering from such illness or injury can be completely cured only by means of prayer and faith.

The organization's primary activity is the operation of a nonprofit health care facility for patients under the care of individuals who have been officially recognized by the board of directors of the Church as Christian Science practitioners. The organization follows a policy of strict compliance with state and local laws applicable to the licensing and operation of a Christian Science health care facility.

The organization's principal sources of income are contributions, fees paid by its patients, fees paid under medicare and medicaid programs, and fees paid by health insurers. The organization accepts patients who are unable to pay, as funds permit.

LAW

Section 501(c)(3) of the Code provides for the exemption from federal income tax of organizations organized and operated exclusively for charitable purposes.

Section 1.501(c)(3)-1(d)(2) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that the term "charitable" is used in section 501(c)(3) of the Code in its generally accepted legal sense and is not to be construed as limited by the separate enumeration in section 501(c)(3) of other tax exempt purposes which may fall within the broad outlines of charity as developed by judicial decisions.

Rev. Rul. 55-261, 1955-1 C.B. 307, holds that payments to Christian Science practitioners for services rendered are deductible as expenses for medical care within the meaning of section 23(x) of the 1939 Code, which corresponds to section 213 of the 1954 Code.

In the general law of charity, the promotion of health has traditionally been considered a charitable purpose. See Restatement (Second) of Trusts, 368, 372 (1959).

ANALYSIS AND HOLDING

By providing care under the circumstances described above, the organization is operating a health care facility that serves the charitable purpose of promoting health. Accordingly, the organization is operated exclusively for charitable purposes, and is exempt from Federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Code.

APPLICATION INSTRUCTIONS

Even though an organization considers itself within the scope of this revenue ruling, it must file an application on Form 1023, Application for Recognition of Exemption, in order to be recognized by the Service as exempt under section 501(c)(3) of the Code. See sections 1.501(a)-1 and 1.508-1(a) of the regulations. In accordance with the instructions to Form 1023, the application should be filed with the District Director of Internal Revenue for the key district indicated therein.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

This Rev. Rul. more appropriately describes the activities of a Christian Science health care facility. Rev. Rul. 78-427, 1978-2 C.B. 176, is superseded.

Section 801.—Definition of Life Insurance Company

26 CFR 1.801-3: Definitions.

Life insurance companies; reserves; combined disability and life coverage; cancellable. Reserves held by a life insurance company for payment of disability benefits under one-year group term life insurance contracts, which provide both disability insurance and term life insurance coverage that may be terminated at any time by the insurance company, do not qualify as life insurance reserves within the meaning of section 801(b) of the Code; Rev. Rul. 70-190 clarified.

Rev. Rul. 80-115

ISSUE

Do reserves held by the taxpayer for payment of disability benefits under 1-year group term life insurance policies that provide both disability and term life insurance benefits qualify as life insurance reserves within the meaning of section 801(b) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The taxpayer is a life insurance company taxable under section 802 of the Code. The taxpayer issues, among other types of insurance, 1-year group term life insurance contracts that provide, in addition to life insurance benefits, disability benefits. If the policy is renewed at the end of its 1-year term, the renewal premium will be recomputed based upon the accumulated experience of the group. The taxpayer may terminate the policies upon written notice to the named insured, but in no event shall a termination of policy adversely affect any claim incurred prior to the date of such termination.

When the policy is issued the taxpayer establishes two reserves, namely, a reserve for basic life insurance benefits and a reserve entitled Disability Benefits-Active Lives. The portion of the premiums received for the basic life insurance benefits funds the basic life reserve and the portion of the premiums received for the disability benefits funds the Disability Benefits-Active Lives reserve. When an insured employee becomes disabled and entitled to the monthly income payments specified in the contract, a third reserve, entitled Disability Benefits-Disabled Lives, is established. This reserve is funded out of the Disability Benefits-Active Lives reserve, and the disability income payments to the insured employee are paid out of this reserve.

The Disability Benefits-Active Lives reserve and Disability Benefits-Disabled Lives reserve established under the policy are computed on the basis of recognized mortality and morbidity tables, at assumed rates of interest, and are required by law. At the end of the policy term, whatever balance remains in the Disability Benefits-Active Lives reserve is released to the income of the taxpayer and the reserve is zero. The disabled employee's recovery or death terminates the taxpayer's obligation to pay disability benefits to that employee. Amounts in the Disability Benefits-Disabled Lives reserve that are attributable to the terminated obligation are then released to the income of the taxpayer. The question presented is whether both disability benefits reserves are life insurance reserves as that term is defined by section 801(b) of the Code.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 801(b)(1) of the Code provides as follows:

> (b) Life Insurance Reserves Defined.—
> (1) In General.—For purposes of this part, the term "life insurance reserves" means amounts—
> (A) which are computed or estimated on the basis of recognized mortality or morbidity tables and assumed rates of interest, and
> (B) which are set aside to mature or liquidate, either by payment or reinsurance, future unaccrued claims arising from life insurance, annuity and noncancellable health and accident insurance contracts . . . involving, at the time with respect to which the reserve is computed, life, health, or accident contingencies.

Section 801(b)(2) of the Code provides that, with exceptions not here pertinent, life insurance reserves must also be required by law.

As early as 1942, Congress indicated that cancellable and noncancellable health and accident insurance were to be accorded different treatment for income tax purposes. Because cancellable health and accident insurance does not entail long-term risks but noncancellable health and accident insurance does, Congress recognized that the noncancellable long-term risk variety was more like life insurance and that a company issuing such contracts would have to have a reserve in addition to the unearned premiums in order to provide for the increasing actuarial risk under such contracts. It also provided for unearned premiums and unpaid losses on noncancellable health and accident insurance to be in the numerator of the qualification fraction under section 801(a) of the Code to insure that insurance companies engaged primarily in this type of business could qualify as life insurance companies for federal income tax purposes. S. Rep. No. 1631, 77th Cong., 2d Sess. 145-49 (1942), 1942-2 C.B. 504; H.R. Rep. No. 2333, 77th Cong., 2d Sess. 109-12 (1942), 1942-2 C.B. 372.

Section 1.801-2(c) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that:

> The term "noncancellable life, health, or accident insurance policy" means a health and accident contract, or a health and accident contract combined with a life insurance or annuity contract, which the insurance company is under an obligation to renew or continue at a specified premium and with respect to which a reserve in addition to the unearned premium (as defined in paragraph (e) of this section) must be carried to cover that obligation. Such a health and accident contract shall be considered noncancellable even though it states a termination date at a stipulated age, if, with respect to the health and accident contract, such age termination date is 60 or over.

Section 1.801-3(d) of the regulations describes a guaranteed renewable life, health, and accident insurance policy as a policy that is not cancellable by the company but under which the company reserves the right to adjust premium rates by classes in accordance with its experience under the type of policy involved and with respect to which a reserve in addition to the unearned premiums must be carried. In accordance with section 801(e) of the Code, guaranteed renewable policies are treated in the same manner as noncancellable life, health, and accident insurance policies.

In United Benefit Life Insurance Company v. McCrory, 414 F.2d 928 (8th Cir. 1969), the court held that reserves set aside by a taxpayer for the payment of claims for permanent and total disability under policies not arising from noncancellable health and accident insurance contracts cannot qualify as life insurance reserves.

The type of policy described in this revenue ruling may be terminated at any time by the insurance company upon written notice to the named insured. This policy is not, therefore, a noncancellable health and accident policy or guaranteed renewable policy within the meaning of sections 1.801-3(c) and (d) of the regulations because the taxpayer is not under an obligation to renew or continue the policy either at a specified premium or premium rates adjusted by classes and does not have to maintain a reserve in addition to the unearned premiums. See Group Life & Health Ins. Co. v. United States, 434 F.2d 115 (5th Cir. 1970).

HOLDING

The disability reserves set aside under 1-year group life insurance policies, which provide both disability and term life insurance benefits, do not qualify as life insurance reserves under section 801(b) of the Code.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

In Rev. Rul. 70-190, 1970-1 C.B. 150, the Service concluded that a reserve for payment of disability benefits established after the disability claim has been incurred and approved qualifies as a life insurance reserve under section 801(b) of the Code. The facts in that ruling indicated that the disability reserve was established from premiums on contracts providing both ordinary life and disability benefits without specifying that the latter benefits were being provided under contracts that were noncancellable. Rev. Rul. 70-190 is clarified by stating that the health and accident benefits provided in combination with ordinary life insurance under the contracts described therein were, in effect, noncancellable.

Section 818.—Accounting Provisions

26 CFR 1.818-4: Election with respect to life insurance reserves computed on preliminary term basis.
(Also Sections 381, 481; 1.381(c)(4)-1, 1.481-1.)

Life insurance companies; merger; revaluation of reserves. A life insurance company that had elected under section 818(c) of the Code to revalue its reserves on the approximate revaluation basis acquired, in a statutory merger, another life insurance company that had smaller reserves computed on a preliminary term basis. The acquiring company is not entitled to an adjustment under section 481 by reason of the required revaluation of the acquired reserves.

Rev. Rul. 80-116

Advice has been requested whether S, a life insurance company, as the surviving company in a statutory merger of two stock life insurance companies, is entitled to an adjustment under section 481 of the Internal Revenue Code by reason of the revaluation of reserves of the acquired insurance company under the circumstances described below.

In its Federal income tax return for the taxable year 1961, S, a life insurance company taxable under section 802 of the Code, elected, pursuant to section 818(c), to revalue its life insurance reserves, previously computed on a preliminary term basis, using the approximate revaluation basis prescribed by section 818(c)(2). The taxpayer has computed its life insurance reserves on the approximate revaluation basis since 1961.

R, also a life insurance company taxable under section 802 of the Code, was incorporated and commenced business in 1958. R has made no election under section 818(c) to revalue its reserves that were computed on the preliminary term basis.

On July 1, 1976, R was merged into S, pursuant to the requirements of the state insurance code, in a statutory merger as defined in section 368(a)(1)(A) of the Code. The amount of life insurance reserves of S, computed on the approximate revaluation method, was substantially greater than the amount of life insurance reserves of R, computed on a preliminary term basis. At all times subsequent to the merger, S, the successor life insurance company, has continued to be taxable under section 802.

Section 381(c)(22) of the Code provides, in part, that in the case of a tax-free merger when the surviving corporation is a life insurance company, certain items of the distributor or transferor corporation are required to be taken into account by the transferee in accordance with the Commissioner's regulations. Section 1.381(c)(22)-1(a) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that the acquiring corporation shall take into account the reserves described in section 810(c) distributed or transferred to it as of the close of the date of distribution or transfer by the distributor or transferor corporation in accordance with the provisions of section 381(c)(4) and the regulations thereunder.

Section 810(c) of the Code lists certain items that are to be taken into account under section 810(a) or (b). Section 810(a) and (b) provide that the difference in the sum of section 810(c) items at the beginning of the year and the sum of 810(c) items at the close of the taxable year (reduced by the amount of investment yield not included in gain or loss from operations for the taxable year by reason of section 809(a)(1)) shall be taken into account as a net decrease under section 809(c)(2) or a net increase under section 809(d)(2), as the case may be.

Rev. Rul. 72-344, 1972-2 C.B. 218, holds that the acquiring life insurance company should, under section 381(c)(22) of the Code, add at the date of transfer from its subsidiary life insurance company that was liquidated under section 332, the dollar balances of the transferred section 810(c) items, as of the close of the day of transfer, to the opening balances of its own section 810(c) items. Further, the difference between that sum and the acquiring life insurance company's closing balances of all section 810(c) items shall be taken into account by the acquiring company under section 809(c)(2) or (d)(2), as the case may be, in computing its gain or loss for its first taxable year ending after the date of distribution or transfer.

Section 818(c) of the Code permits a life insurance company issuing contracts with respect to which the life insurance reserves are computed on one of the recognized preliminary term bases to elect to revalue such reserves, on a net level premium basis for the purposes of determining the amount that may be taken into account as life insurance reserves for purposes of Part I, Subchapter L, Chapter 1 of the Code, other than section 801. If such an election is made, the basis to be used in making this revaluation of reserves shall be made on either the exact revaluation basis under section 818(c)(1) or the approximate revaluation basis under section 818(c)(2). If an election is made to use either the exact or the approximate basis of revaluing the life insurance reserves, the basis adopted by a life insurance company shall be adhered to in making the computations under Part I, Subchapter L, Chapter 1 of the Code (other than section 801) for the taxable year and all subsequent taxable years unless a change in the basis of computing such reserves is approved by the Commissioner.

Section 1.818-4(d)(2) of the regulations states, in part, that for any taxable year other than the first taxable year for which the election is made under section 818(c) of the Code, a company making such election must revalue all its life insurance reserves held with respect to contracts, for which such reserves are computed on a preliminary term basis at the beginning of the taxable year, on the basis elected under section 818(c). Further, section 1.810-2(c)(3) provides that, for purposes of determining the increase or decrease in reserves under section 810(a) and (b), if a company that computes its life insurance reserves on a preliminary term basis elects to revalue such reserves on a net level premium basis under section 818(c), the sum of such reserves at the beginning and end of all taxable years (including the first taxable year) for which the election applies shall be the sum of such reserves computed on such net level premium basis.

Section 1.381(c)(4)-1 of the regulation provides, in part, that the acquiring corporation shall use the method of accounting used by the distributor or transferor corporation on the date of distribution or transfer unless different methods of accounting were used by the distributor or transferor corporation and the acquiring corporation. If different methods of accounting were used, the acquiring corporation shall use the principal method of accounting. The principal method of accounting can be determined by comparing the dollar balances in each corporation's reserve account. The method of accounting of the party having the largest amount is, under section 1.381(c)(4)-1(c)(2)(iv), deemed to be the principal method. Section 1.381(c)(4)-1(a)(1)(ii) provides, in part, that if adjustments are necessary to reflect a change in accounting method, pursuant to section 381 of the Code, the manner in which they are to be taken into account and the tax attributable thereto shall be determined and computed under section 481 of the Code and regulations thereunder subject to the rules provided in section 1.381(c)(4)-1(c) and (d).

Section 481(a) of the Code provides, in part, that in computing the taxpayer's taxable income for the taxable year, if the computation is under a method of accounting different from the method under which the taxpayer's taxable income for the preceding taxable year was computed, then there shall be taken into account those adjustments that are determined to be necessary solely by reason of the change in order to prevent amounts from being duplicated or omitted.

Since the amount of life insurance reserves of S computed on the approximate revaluation method at the time of the statutory merger was substantially greater than the life insurance reserves of R, S's basis of computing life insurance reserves is considered the principal method of accounting for computing such reserves. Thus, S was correct to continue such basis with respect to its life insurance reserves and also to use such basis in computing the life insurance reserves acquired from R in the merger.

In view of the above, S is required to revalue, as of July 1, 1976, the preliminary term reserves acquired from R in the merger to the net level premium basis under section 818(c) of the Code, using the approximate method of valuation prescribed in section 818(c)(2). For purposes of its section 810(a) or (b) adjustments for the increase or decrease in section 810(c) items, S must add to its own opening reserves the revalued life insurance reserves attributable to those contracts acquired from R as of July 1. The difference between the sum of S's opening life insurance reserve balance, which includes those reserves attributable to R's contracts, and the opening balances of all other section 810(c) items, and S's closing balances of all section 810(c) items shall be taken into account by S under section 809(c)(2) or (d)(2), as the case may be, in computing its gain or loss for the taxable year 1976, the first taxable year ending after the date of distribution or transfer.

Further, S is not allowed to make a section 481 adjustment because the duplication or omission section 481 of the Code is designed to correct is not present under a section 818(c) election. Section 810(d)(3) and section 1.810-3(e)(1) of the regulations specifically provide that an election pursuant to section 818(c) is not to be considered a change in basis within the meaning of section 810(d)(1) that would require a 10-year spread of any adjusting item, similar to the 10-year spread set forth in Rev. Proc. 70-27, 1970-2 C.B. 509. The only adjustment required by reason of an election under section 818(c) is that provided by section 1.810-2(c)(3), which provides that for purposes of determining the increase or decrease in reserves, all reserves at both the beginning and the end of the taxable year in which the election under section 818(c) is made shall be computed on the net level premium basis. The difference between the reserves at the end of the previous taxable year, which were valued on the preliminary term basis, and the reserves at the beginning of the taxable year of the election, which were revalued on the net level premium basis pursuant to the section 818(c) election, is not reflected as a deduction in the year of the election or any subsequent taxable year. See example (1) of section 1.813-3(f) of the regulations. Thus, by revaluing reserves acquired in the merger under section 818(c) election, there is no duplication or omission of income or deductions of the type that would require a section 481 adjustment.

Accordingly, S is not entitled to an adjustment under section 481 of the Code by reason of the revaluation of reserves of the acquired insurance company pursuant to an election under section 818(c).

(Also Sections 381, 806, 810; 1.381(c)(4)-1, 1.806-4, 1.810-3.)

Life insurance companies; merger; revaluation of reserves. In a statutory merger, a life insurance company that computed its reserves on a preliminary term basis acquired another life insurance company that had smaller reserves, which it had elected under section 818(c) of the Code to revalue on the approximate revaluation basis. The revaluation of the acquired reserves on the preliminary term basis is a change in the basis for computing the reserves, and the resulting adjustment is subject to the 10-year spread rule of section 810(d)(1).

Rev. Rul. 80-117

Advice has been requested concerning the proper tax treatment of life insurance reserves that a transferor life insurance company (M) had elected to revalue under section 818(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code prior to the company's merger into another life insurance company (R) that had not made a section 818(c) election for the same type of reserves.

Prior to its merger into R, M elected, for federal income tax purposes, to revalue its life insurance reserves that were computed on a preliminary term basis using the approximate revaluation method under section 818(c)(2) of the Code. The merger, which occurred on October 31, 1976, qualified as a reorganization under section 368(a)(1)(A). Both M and R qualified as a life insurance company taxable under section 802 at the time of the merger. As of October 31, 1976, the life insurance reserves of R, computed on a preliminary term basis, were greater than the life insurance reserves of M. R has never made an election to revalue its preliminary term reserves under section 818(c).

In reliance upon the "principal method of accounting" requirements of section 381(c)(4) of the Code and section 1.381(c)(4)-1 of the Income Tax Regulations, R changed the method used by M in computing its life insurance reserves to conform to R's method of computing life insurance reserves on the preliminary term basis.

The specific issue is what is the proper manner to take into account the difference, as of the date of the merger, between M's life insurance reserves determined on the approximate revaluation basis under section 818(c) of the Code and as computed on a preliminary term basis.

Section 381(c)(22) of the Code provides that if the acquiring corporation is an insurance company taxable under subchapter L, there shall be taken into account (to the extent proper to carry out the purposes of section 381 and of subchapter L, and under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary) the items required to be taken into account for purposes of subchapter L in respect of the distributor or transferor corporation.

Section 1.381(c)(22)-1(a) of the regulations provides that among the items to be taken into account by the acquiring corporation are the reserves described in section 810(c) of the Code distributed or transferred to it as of the close of the date of distribution or transfer by the distributor or transferor corporation in accordance with the provisions of section 381(c)(4) and the regulations thereunder.

Section 810(c) of the Code lists certain items (including life insurance reserves) that are to be taken into account under section 810(a) or (b). Section 810(a) and (b) provide that the difference in the sum of the section 810(c) items at the beginning of the year and the sum of the section 810(c) items at the close of the taxable year (reduced by the amount of investment yield not included in gain or loss from operations for the taxable year by reason of section 809(a)(1)) shall be taken into account as a net decrease under section 809(c)(2) or a net increase under section 809(d)(2), as the case may be.

In Rev. Rul. 72-344, 1972-2 C.B. 218, a life insurance company, wholly owned by another life insurance company, was liquidated under section 332 of the Code. The issue there was how the parent should treat the section 810(c) items acquired from the subsidiary for purposes of section 381. Rev. Rul. 72-344 holds that the acquiring life insurance company should add, at the date of transfer, the dollar balances of the transferred section 810 (c) items, as of the close of the day of transfer, to the opening balance of its section 810(c) items. It further holds that the difference between the above described sum and the acquiring life insurance company's closing balances of all section 810(c) items shall be taken into account by the acquiring company under section 809(c)(2) or section 809(d)(2), as the case may be, in computing its gain or loss for the first taxable year ending after the date of distribution or transfer.

The principles stated in Rev. Rul. 72-344 are applicable in the instant revenue ruling. Thus, R must add the dollar balances of the section 810(c) items acquired from M, as of the close of the day of transfer, to the opening balances of R's own section 810(c) items for purposes of section 810(a) or (b). A problem arises, however, because R valued its life insurance reserves on a preliminary term basis, but prior to the merger M, the acquired corporation, revalued its reserves on the approximate revaluation basis pursuant to a section 818(c)(2) election.

Section 806(b) of the Code provides that, for purposes of subpart B, if the basis for section 810(c) items at the end of the taxable year differs from the basis at the beginning of the taxable year, the old basis shall be used as of the close of the taxable year and the new basis shall be used as of the beginning of the next taxable year.

Thus, for purposes of determining taxable investment income, the old basis will continue to be used for the entire year in which the change in basis occurs. Section 806(b) is applicable in the instant situation because the basis for determining the life insurance reserves of M by R as of December 31, 1976, was preliminary term (as a result of conformance to the principal method of accounting of R), while the basis for determining the life insurance reserves as of January 1, 1976, was the approximate revaluation basis (pursuant to previous election by M under section 818(c)(2)).

In determining a life insurance company's gain from operations, section 809(d)(2) of the Code provides a deduction for the net increase in reserves required by section 810 to be taken into account in the determination of gain from operations. Section 810(b) requires that the excess of section 810(c) items at the close of the taxable year over section 810(c) items at the beginning of the taxable year shall be taken into account as a net increase referred to in section 801 (d)(2). Thus, together, section 809 (d)(2) and section 810(b) provide the general rule that a net increase in the life insurance reserves shall be taken into account in full in the year the increase occurs.

Section 810(d)(1) of the Code and section 1.810-3(a) of the regulations, however, provide an exception to this general rule. Section 810(d)(1) and section 1.810-3(a) provide that if the basis for determining any item referred to in section 810(c) at the end of the taxable year differs from the basis for such determination at the end of the preceding taxable year, then so much of the difference between the amount of the item at the end of the taxable year, computed on the new basis, and the amount of the item at the end of the taxable year, computed on the old basis, as is attributable to contracts issued before the taxable year, shall not be included in income or be deductible, as the case may be, under section 810(a) or (b), but rather shall be deductible or includible in income, as the case may be, at a rate of one-tenth for each of the 10 succeeding taxable years.

Section 810(d)(2) and (3) of the Code provides the only exceptions to the 10-year spread rule for the change in basis under section 810(d)(1). Section 810(d)(2) states that:

> Except as provided in section 381 (c)(22) (relating to carryovers in certain corporate readjustments), if for any taxable year the taxpayer is not a life insurance company, the balance of any readjustments under this paragraph shall be taken into account for the preceding taxable year.

Under section 810(d)(3) of the Code an election to revalue preliminary term reserves under section 818 (c), is not treated as a change in basis in computing reserves for purposes of section 810(d)(1).

In the instant situation, as a result of the merger and the application of the "principal method of accounting" concept in section 1.381(c)(4)-1 of the regulations, the section 818(c) election previously in effect is revoked. Revocation of the section 818(c) election requires a revaluation of life insurance reserves from the approximate revaluation basis to a preliminary term basis. Such a change in basis comes within the meaning of section 810(d) (1), and thus, is subject to the 10-year spread rule. The section 810(d) (2) exception cannot apply because the merger comes within the carryover provisions of section 381(c)(22). Similarly, section 810(d)(3) cannot apply because a section 818(c) election is no longer in effect. Thus, the revocation is a change in basis, and the adjustment created thereby is subject to a 10-year spread under section 810(d)(1).

The adjustment created by the change in basis in computing life insurance reserves is controlled by section 810(d)(1) of the Code because it is the result of a change in basis for determining a section 810(c) reserve. Thus, there is no need for section 481 to apply. The distortion that an allocation under section 481 seeks to avoid is likewise avoided under section 810(d). Compare Rev. Rul. 80-116, page , this Bulletin, holding that the surviving life insurance company in a statutory merger is not entitled to an adjustment under section 481 by reason of the revaluation of preliminary term reserves of the acquired life insurance company pursuant to an election under section 818(c).

Accordingly, the life insurance reserves acquired by R from M in the merger were properly revalued to a preliminary term basis pursuant to the principal method of accounting requirements of section 1.381(c)(4)-1 of the regulations. Such revaluation to a preliminary term method of computing life insurance reserves is a change in basis in computing reserves within the meaning of section 806(b) and section 810(d) of the Code.

Section 901.—Taxes of Foreign Countries and of Possessions of United States

26 CFR 1.901-1: Allowance of credit for taxes.

A procedure for partnerships having a partner who is a United States citizen and resident of France to follow in making an election under Article 23(3)(c) of the United States-France Income Tax Convention, 1968-2 C.B. 691, as amended by the Protocol of November 24, 1978, 1979-51 I.R.B. 17, whereby a certain portion of such partner's United States-source income will be deemed to be French-source income. SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On October 9, 1979, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Employment Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 31) under sections 3401 and 3402 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (44 FR 57940). The amendments were proposed in order to set forth the circumstances under which employers must submit copies of employee withholding exemption certificates to the Internal Revenue Service. After consideration of all comments received in response to the notice of proposed rulemaking and at a public hearing held on January 4, 1980, amendments to the regulations are adopted as set forth in this Treasury decision.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISIONS

The notice of proposed rulemaking provided for submission of a copy of a withholding exemption certificate if the total number of withholding exemptions claimed on the certificate exceeded 9 or if the certificate indicated that the employee was claiming a status exempting him from withholding. Some employers that employ part-time employees, such as students, which tend to have a high rate of turn-over and which often claim a status exempting them from withholding, expressed concern about the administrative burdens of submitting copies of all exempt status certificates as required by the proposed regulation. In response to this concern, the proposed requirement is modified by this Treasury decision to provide that a copy of the withholding exemption certificate that indicates the employee is claiming a status of exemption from withholding is not required to be submitted if, at the time the certificate is received, it is reasonably expected that the employee's wages from that employer will not then usually exceed $200 per week. It is felt that this change will alleviate some of the burdens that the proposed regulation would have imposed on employers.

A number of persons suggested that the proposed amendments be modified to require submission of certificates only when the number of withholding exemptions claimed on the certificate exceeded a specified number for the employee's wage bracket. The requirement that employers submit copies of certain withholding exemption certificates was proposed to improve the ability of the Internal Revenue Service to monitor compliance in the withholding area while keeping the burdens placed on employers as small as possible. It has been concluded that more sophisticated criteria, such as the graduated submission suggestion described in this paragraph, would impose an excessive burden on many employers and have therefore been rejected.

A number of persons submitting comments expressed concern about the recordkeeping burdens that would be imposed on employers under the requirement of the proposed regulation that copies of certificates received after October 9, 1979, be submitted.

In order to alleviate this burden, the proposed requirement is modified by this Treasury decision to provide for submission only of copies received on or after April 1, 1980.

Evaluation of the effectiveness of these regulations will be based on comments received from members of Congress, offices within Treasury and the Internal Revenue Service, other governmental agencies, State and local governments, and the public. These regulations will impose new reporting and recordkeeping requirements which are necessary for more effective administration and collection of income taxes withheld from an employee's wages on the basis of the withholding exemption certificate.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is William E. Mantle of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

The Employment Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 31) are amended as follows:

Paragraph 1. Section 31.3401(e)-1(b) (relating to number of withholding exemptions claimed) is amended by deleting the last two sentences and inserting in lieu thereof the following new sentence:

§ 31.3401(e)-1 Number of withholding exemptions claimed.

* * * * *

(b) * * * For rules relating to invalid withholding exemption certificates, see § 31.3402(f)(2)-1(e), and for rules relating to required submission of copies of certain withholding exemption certificates to the Internal Revenue Service, see § 31.3402(f)(2)-1(g).

* * * * *

Par. 2. Section 31.3402(f)(2)-1 (relating to withholding exemption certificates) is amended by deleting the last two sentences of paragraph (e) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new sentence, and by adding the following new paragraph (g) immediately after paragraph (f):

§ 31.3402(f)(2)-1 Withholding exemption certificates.

* * * * *

(e) Invalid withholding exemption certificates. * * * This paragraph applies only with respect to withholding exemption certificates received by any employer after July 26, 1976.

* * * * *

(g) Submission of certain withholding certificates—(1) General rule. An employer shall submit, in accordance with paragraph (g)(3) of this section, a copy of any withholding exemption certificate which is received from the employee during the reporting period (without regard to the date it is effective) if the employee is employed by that employer on the last day of the reporting period and if—

(i) The total number of withholding exemptions (within the meaning of section 3402(f)(1) and the regulations thereunder) claimed on the certificate exceeds 9, or

(ii) The certificate indicates that the employee claims a status exempting the employee from withholding, and the exception provided by paragraph (g)(2) of this section does not apply.

(2) Exception. A copy of the certificate shall not be submitted under paragraph (g)(1)(ii) of this section if the employer reasonably expects, at the time the certificate is received, that the employee's wages (under chapter 24 of the Code) from that employer shall not then usually exceed $200 per week.

(3) Rules for submission—(i) In general. The reporting period is a calendar quarter. Copies required to be submitted under paragraph (g)(1) of this section shall be submitted at the time and place of filing Form 941 or 941E for the reporting period, or Form 941-M for the last month of the reporting period. Form 941, 941E, or 941-M shall be used, in accordance with the instructions for the form, to transmit the copies.

(ii) Option. At the choice of the employer, copies required to be submitted under paragraph (g)(1) of this section may be submitted earlier and for shorter reporting periods than a calendar quarter. In such case, the employer shall submit the copies to the service center where the employer would file a Form 941 or 941E and shall include with the submission a statement showing the employer's name, address, employer identification number, and the number of copies of withholding exemption certificates submitted. However, in no event shall a copy be submitted later than the time for filing the report required to be submitted for the calendar quarter reporting period under subdivision (i) of this paragraph (g)(3).

(iii) First report. The first submission of copies shall include a copy of any certificate required to be submitted under paragraph (g)(1) of this section which is received by the employer on or after April 1, 1980.

(4) Other withholding exemption certificates. An employer shall also submit a copy of any currently effective withholding exemption certificate (or make the original certificate available for inspection) upon written request of the Internal Revenue Service.

(5) Computation of withholding. Until receipt of written notice from the Internal Revenue Service that a certificate, a copy of which was submited under this section, is defective, that certificate is effective and the employer shall withhold on the basis of the statements made in that certificate. If the Internal Revenue Service finds that a copy of a withholding exemption certificate submitted contains any materially incorrect statement or if, after written request to the employee for verification of the statements on the certificate, the Internal Revenue Service determines that it lacks sufficient information to determine if the certificate is correct, and in either event so notifies the employer in writing, the employer shall then consider the certificate to be defective for purposes of computing amounts of withholding. The employer shall promptly furnish the employee who filed the defective certificate, if still in his employ, with a copy of the written notice of the Internal Revenue Service with respect to the certificate and may request another withholding exemption certificate from the employee. The employer shall withhold amounts from the employee as if the employee were a single person claiming no exemptions (see § 31.3402(f)(2)-1(a)) until a new certificate is filed. If and when the employee does file a new certificate the employer shall withhold on the basis of that new certificate as currently effective, but must submit a copy of that new certificate if required by, and in accordance with, this paragraph (g).

(6) Definition of employer. For purposes of this paragraph (g), the term "employer" includes any individual authorized by the employer to receive withholding exemption certificates, to make withholding computations, or to make payroll distributions.

Par. 3. Section 31.3402(n)-1 (relating to employees incurring no income tax liability) is amended by deleting the last two sentences immediately before example (1) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new sentence:

§ 31.3402(n)-1 Employees incurring no income tax liability.

* * * For rules relating to invalid withholding exemption certificates, see § 31.3402(f)(2)-1(e), and for rules relating to submission to the Internal Revenue Service of withholding exemption certificates claiming a complete exemption from withholding, see § 31.3402(f)(2)-1(g). * * *

26 CFR 48.4221-2: Tax-free sale of articles to be used for, or resold for, further manufacture.

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE,—CHAPTER 1, SUBCHAPTER D, PART 48.—MANUFACTURERS AND RETAILERS EXCISE TAXES

Certain tax-free sales by manufacturers.

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Final regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides final regulations relating to the availability of a refund or credit on certain articles described in section 4221(a)(1) of the Code. These regulations provide necessary guidance to the public for compliance with the law, and affect both original and subsequent manufacturers of these articles.

DATE: The regulations are effective for sales made after December 31, 1958.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

The regulations at § 48.4221-2(c)(1) currently make a cross reference to section 6416(b)(3)(A). This is an erroneous cross reference which has led to confusion among manufacturers as to the availability of a refund or credit on certain articles described in section 4221(a)(1). These regulations delete the incorrect cross reference and clarify that a refund or credit is available to only one manufacturer with respect to taxes paid on an article. Because this regulation is non-substantive and essentially procedural, it is found unnecessary to issue this Treasury decision with notice and public procedure. For the same reasons, this regulation is not a significant regulation under paragraph 8 of the Treasury Directive appearing in the Federal Register for November 8, 1978 (43 F.R. 52120).

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of this regulation was Kyllikki Kusma of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations:

Accordingly, 26 CFR Part 48 is amended as follows:

Paragraph. Section 48.4221-2(c)(1) is revised to read as follows:

§ 48.4221-2 Tax-free sale of articles to be used for, or resold for, further manufacture.

* * * * *

(c) Proof of resale for further manufacture—(1) Cessation of exemption. The exemption provided in section 4221(a)(1) and described in paragraph (a) of this section in respect of an article sold by the manufacturer to a purchaser for resale to a second purchaser for use by the second purchaser in further manufacture shall cease to apply on the first day following the close of the 6-month period which begins on the date of the sale of such article by the manufacturer, or the date of shpiment of the article by the manufacturer, whichever is earlier, unless, within such 6-month period, the manufacturer receives proof, in the form prescribed by paragraph (c)(2) of this section, that the article was actually resold by the purchaser to a second purchaser for such use. If, on the first day following the close of the 6-month period, such proof has not been received, the manufacturer shall become liable for tax at that time at the rate in effect when the sale was made but otherwise in the same manner as if the article had been sold by it on such first day at a taxable price equivalent to that at which the article was actually sold. If the manufacturer later obtains such proof, it may file a claim for refund or credit of this tax. The payment of this tax by the manufacturer is not considered an overpayment by the subsequent manufacturer or producer for which the subsequent manufacturer or producer is entitled to a credit or refund under section 6416(b)(3). See section 4221(d)(6) and paragraph (b) of this section for the circumstances under which an article is considered to have been sold for use in further manufacture.

Section 4940.—Excise Tax Based on Investment Income

26 CFR 53.4940-1: Excise tax on net investment income.

Private foundation; gross investment income; interest on U.S. savings bonds. A private foundation derived interest income upon redemption of Series E U.S. savings bonds that were received from the estate of the purchaser. The interest is includible in the computation of gross investment income under section 4940(c)(2) of the Code if neither the individual nor the estate elected to report as income the periodic increases in bond value.

Rev. Rul. 80-118

ISSUE

Under the circumstances described below, is the interest income derived by a private foundation upon redemption of Series E United States savings bonds received from an estate included in the computation of gross investment income under section 4940(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The Series E bonds were distributed to a private foundation described in section 509(a) of the Code from the estate of the individual who purchased the bonds. Neither the individual nor the estate elected under section 454 to report the periodic increase in value of the bonds as income.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4940(a) of the Code imposes on each private foundation exempt from taxation under section 501(a) a tax equal to 2 percent of the net investment income of such foundation for the taxable year.

Section 4940(c)(1) of the Code and section 53.4940-1(c) of the Foundation Excise Tax Regulations provide that net investment income is the amount by which the sum of the gross investment income and the net capital gain exceeds the deductions allowed by section 4940(c)(3). Unless inconsistent with the provisions of section 4940, net investment income shall be determined under the principles of subtitle A.

Section 4940(c)(2) of the Code and section 53.4940-1(d)(1) of the regulations provide that the term "gross investment income" means the gross amount of income from interest, dividends, rents, and royalties, but not including any such income to the extent included in computing the tax imposed by section 511.

Section 53.4940-1(d)(2) of the regulations provides, in part, that in the case of a distribution from an estate, such distribution shall not retain its character in the hands of the distributee for purposes of computing the tax under section 4940 of the Code.

Section 53.4940-1(d)(2) of the regulations generally allows income derived by an estate to be disregarded by a distibutee private foundation for purposes of section 4940 of the Code. Thus, investment income received by and taxed to an estate is not again taxed, by virtue of section 4940, when it is received by a private foundation. This section of the regulations, however, is applicable only to the income of an estate that is subsequently distributed to a private foundation.

In this case, no part of the periodic increase in the value of the Series E bonds was reported as income by the estate. When the private foundation received the bonds from the estate, it did not receive a distribution of income of the estate. What the estate received from the decedent and ultimately distributed to the foundation was the right to receive income upon redemption of the bonds. For income tax purposes, such income would be treated as income in respect of a decedent and taxed to the one who actually received it. See Rev. Rul. 64-104, 1964-1 (Part 1) C.B. 223. Here, the entire increase in the value of the bonds will be the interest income of the private foundation when it redeems the bonds.

HOLDING

Since the increase in the value of the Series E bonds is not income of an estate that was subsequently distributed to a private foundation, section 53.4940-1(d)(2) of the regulations is inapplicable under the circumstances described above. Accordingly, the interest income derived by the private foundation upon redemption of the Series E bonds received from the estate is included in the computation of gross investment income under section 4940(c)(2) of the Code. Further, all the interest income accrued on the Series E bonds from the date of purchase by the decedent until the date of redemption by the foundation must be included in the computation of gross investment income under section 4940(c)(2).

To determine how the interest accrued on Series E bonds would be treated for purposes of computing adjusted net income under section 4942(f) of the Code, see Rev. Rul. 75-442, 1975-2 C.B. 448.

26 CFR 1.6012-1: Individuals required to make returns of income.

Requirement that individuals who receive advance payments of earned income credit make a return of income. See T.D. 7683, page 6.

Section 6051.—Receipts for Employees [Information Regarding Wages Paid Employees]

Rev. Proc. 80-5 (Republication)[1]

SECTION 1. PURPOSE AND SCOPE

The purpose of this revenue procedure is to provide a procedure for taxpayers to change their method of accounting for "excess" inventory pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Thor Power Tool Co. v. Commissioner, 439 U.S. 522 (1979), 1979-1 C.B. 167.

This procedure is mandatory for the first taxable year (calendar or fiscal) ending on or after December 25, 1979. See Rev. Rul. 80-60, 1980-10 I.R.B. 5.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND

.01 In the Thor Power case, the taxpayer used the "lower of cost or market" method of valuing inventories for both financial accounting and for income tax purposes. See section 1.471-4 of the Income Tax Regulations. The taxpayer wrote down what it regarded as "excess" inventory to its net realizable value which, in most cases, was determined to be scrap value. The taxpayer determined that these articles were excess inventory because they were held in excess of any reasonably foreseeable future demand although such inventory was not scrapped or sold at reduced prices. The taxpayer retained the excess items in inventory and continued to sell them at original prices. The taxpayer contended that by writing down excess inventory to scrap value, it thereby reduced its inventory to "market" (net realizable value) in accord with its "lower of cost or market" method of accounting. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue disallowed this write-down. (The taxpayer also wrote down the cost of inventory that was either promptly scrapped or actually sold at reduced prices below cost. The Commissioner allowed these write-downs.)

The Supreme Court in Thor Power stated that sections 446 and 471 of the Internal Revenue Code vests the Commissioner with wide discretion in determining whether a particular method of inventory accounting should be disallowed as not clearly reflecting income. The Court affirmed the lower court's decision, sustaining the Commissioner, that although the taxpayer's write-down of excess inventory did conform to the best accounting practice in the trade or business and thus satisfied the first test of section 1.471-2(a) of the regulations, it failed to satisfy the second test of section 1.471-2(a), that it clearly reflect the taxpayer's income. The Court stated that where a taxpayer, under the "lower of cost or market" method of accounting, values its inventory for tax purposes at "market" (replacement cost), the taxpayer is permitted to depart from replacement cost only in specified situations described in sections 1.471-2(c) and 1.471-4(b) of the regulations. When such a departure to a lower inventory valuation is made, the regulations require that it be substantiated by objective evidence of actual offerings, sales, or contract cancellations and further require that records of actual dispositions be kept. The Court concluded that because the taxpayer provided no objective evidence of the reduced market value of its excess inventory, its write-down was plainly inconsistent with the regulations and was properly disallowed by the Commissioner. The taxpayer could not have properly taken advantage of any permitted write-downs since it did not scrap its "excess" inventory nor sell or offer it for sale at prices below replacement cost.

.02 The Thor Power case affirmed the method of accounting for inventory valuation established under the income tax regulations where the lower of cost or market method is applicable. In using the lower of cost or market method the regulations require a taxpayer having "excess" inventory to value such "excess" inventory at replacement cost (if lower than actual cost as defined in section 1.471-4 of the regulations) unless the goods have been scrapped, or they have been sold or offered for sale (at a lower price) within the meaning of the regulations under section 471 of the Code. (The "prescribed method.")

.03 Although the Thor Power case involved a method of inventory write-down that the taxpayer had initiated in the year in question, the Supreme Court's decision clearly applies to a taxpayer that has been consistently taking prohibited inventory write-downs described in the Thor Power decision. See Will-Burt Co. v. Commissioner, 38 T.C.M. 861 (1979).

.04 Section 446(e) of the Code and section 1.446-1(e)(2)(i) of the regulations state that, except as otherwise provided, a taxpayer must secure the consent of the Commissioner before changing a method of accounting for federal income tax purposes. Section 1.446-1(e)(3)(i) provides, in relevant part, that except as otherwise provided in subdivision (ii), in order to secure the Commissioner's consent, the taxpayer must file an application on Form 3115 with the National Office within 180 days after the beginning of the taxable year in which the taxpayer desires to make the change. Subdivision (ii) provides that notwithstanding subdivision (i), the Commissioner may prescribe administrative procedures, subject to such limitations, terms, and conditions as he deems necessary to obtain his consent, to permit taxpayers to change their accounting methods to an acceptable method consistent with applicable regulations.

[1] This republication reflects amendments announced in News Release IR-80-48, dated April 8, 1980.

Section 481(a) of the Code provides, in part, that if a taxpayer's taxable income for any taxable year is computed under a method of accounting different from the method used for the preceding taxable year, then there shall be taken into account those adjustments which are determined to be necessary solely by reason of the change in order to prevent amounts from being duplicated or omitted. Section 481(c) provides that in the case of any change described in subsection (a), the taxpayer may, in such manner and subject to such conditions as the Secretary may by regulations prescribe, take the adjustments required by subsection (a)(2) into account in computing the tax for the taxable year or years permitted under such regulations.

SEC. 3. APPLICATION

.01 In accordance with section 1.446-1(e)(3)(ii) of the regulations the 180 day rule is waived and consent is hereby granted taxpayers to change from a method of accounting for inventory valuation of "excess" inventory, that is not in accordance with the "prescribed method," to such "prescribed method." See section 2.02 above. Such consent is granted for the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979, and shall be made in accordance with the provisions of this revenue procedure, including the adjustment under section 481(a) described in section 3.03 below.

.02 Pursuant to the consent granted in section 3.01, a taxpayer that is using a method of accounting for inventory valuation by writing down "excess" inventory in a manner that is not in accordance with the "prescribed method" must change such method of accounting to the "prescribed method" on its federal income tax return for the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979. See Rev. Rul. 80-60.

.03 An adjustment is required to prevent amounts of income from being duplicated or omitted within the meaning of section 481 of the Code and the regulations thereunder when the change in method of accounting is made pursuant to the provisions set forth in this revenue procedure. Such adjustment, whether positive or negative, referred to as the "net section 481(a) adjustment," shall be taken into account as provided in either section 3.04 or section 3.05 below.

.04 (1) The taxpayer may treat the change in method of accounting as a change initiated by the taxpayer. In such case, unless otherwise provided in this revenue procedure, the net section 481(a) adjustment shall be taken into account ratably over a period of taxable years equal to the number of taxable years the taxpayer used a method of accounting where inventory was written down using an impermissible method. This period may not exceed 10 taxable years. In addition, the rules described in sections 3.07, 3.08, and 3.09 apply.

(2) When the entire net amount of an adjustment is attributable to the taxable year immediately preceding the year of change (first preceding year), the total net adjustment will be taken into account in computing taxable income for the year of change. The amount attributable to the taxable year immediately preceding the year of change is the difference in the amount required under section 481(a) of the Code for the year of change and the amount that would have been required under section 481(a) if the same change in accounting method had been made in such preceding year.

(3) When 67 percent or more of the net amount of an adjustment is attributable to the 1 taxable year period, 2 taxable year period, or 3 taxable year period immediately preceding the year of change, the highest percent attributable to such 1, 2, or 3 taxable year period will be taken into account ratably over a 3 taxable year period beginning with the year of change. An amount attributable to such 1, 2, or 3 taxable year period is the difference in the amount required under section 481(a) of the Code for the year of change and the amount that would have been required under section 481(a) if the same change in accounting method had been made at the beginning of such preceding 1, 2, or 3 taxable year period. Any remaining balance will be taken into account ratably over an additional period equal to the remainder of the number of taxable years the taxpayer has used the accounting method that is being changed. However, the total adjustment period will not exceed 10 taxable years. This paragraph 3.04(3) only applies if the taxpayer has used the method being changed for at least 3 taxable years and the entire amount of the adjustment is not attributable to the taxable year immediately preceding the year of change.

(4) In all other situations the total net adjustment will be taken into account ratably over the number of taxable years (not to exceed 10) the taxpayer has used the accounting method that is being changed.

(5) See section 4 of this revenue procedure for an example of the computation of a net section 481(a) adjustment pursuant to this revenue procedure where the taxpayer elected to treat the change in accounting method as a change initiated by the taxpayer.

.05 The taxpayer may treat the change in method of accounting as a change not initiated by the taxpayer within the meaning of section 481(a)(2) of the Code. In such case, the net section 481(a) adjustment, as modified by the "pre-1954 Code years" adjustment described in section 1.481-3 of the regulations, shall be taken into account in the year of change in full; in addition, see section 481(b) for the limitation on tax. See section 4 of this revenue procedure for an example of the computation of a net section 481(a) adjustment where the taxpayer elected to treat the change in accounting method as a change not initiated by the taxpayer.

.06 This revenue procedure does not apply to a taxpayer that has used a method of accounting for inventory valuation of "excess goods" that is not in accordance with the "prescribed method" and the use of such impermissible method has been raised and is pending as an issue as of February 8, 1980, in connection with the examination of the taxpayer's federal income tax return. In such case, Rev. Proc. 70-27, 1970-2 C.B. 509, clarified by Rev. Proc. 75-18, 1975-1 C.B. 687, and as subsequently modified or superseded, is available.

.07 This revenue procedure does not apply to a method of accounting for inventory, where the taxpayer elects to use (or is using) the last-in first-out (LIFO) method of accounting for such inventory for the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979. In the case of a taxpayer electing LIFO for the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979, pursuant to section 472(d) of the Code and the regulations thereunder, the difference between the carrying value of such inventory under the taxpayer's method of accounting (if less than cost) and cost shall be included in income for the preceding taxable year by filing an amended return for such preceding year. For a taxpayer using the LIFO method, see Rev. Proc. 76-6, 1976-1 C.B. 545, Rev. Proc. 76-28, 1976-2 C.B. 645, and Rev. Rul. 76-282, 1976-2 C.B. 137. If a taxpayer elects the LIFO method of inventory valuation during the "spread period" referred to in section 3.04, other than in the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979, the unamortized balance of the section 481(a) adjustment, referred to in section 3.03, must be taken into account in full as an item of ordinary income in the year for which such election is made.

.08 If, at the end of any taxable year during the "spread period" referred to in section 3.04, the value of the taxpayer's inventory to which the section 481(a) adjustment under section 3.03 relates, as of the last day of any taxable year, is reduced by more than 33⅓ percent of the inventory valued at the beginning of the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979 (see section 3.03), the balance of the unamortized net section 481(a) adjustment, at such time, must be taken into account in full as an item of ordinary income in the year of such inventory reduction. This section shall not apply in the event such reduction is attributable to a strike or involuntary conversion.

.09 (a) With respect to a corporation.

If the taxpayer ceases to engage in the trade or business, to which this adjustment (section 3.03) relates, at any time prior to the expiration of the "spread period" referred to in section 3.04, the taxpayer will take into account in such year the balance of the adjustment not previously taken into account in computing taxable income. For purposes of this condition, the taxpayer is not considered to have ceased the trade or business if such cessation is the result of a transaction to which section 381 of the Code applies, but in such case the acquiring corporation shall continue to be subject to this revenue procedure as though it were the acquired corporation.

(b) With respect to a partnership:

In the event the partnership terminates or ceases to engage in the trade or business, to which this adjustment (section 3.03) relates, at any time prior to the expiration of the "spread period" referred to in section 3.04, the balance of the adjustment not previously taken into account in computing ordinary income shall be taken into account in such year. A partnership ceasing to engage in the trade or business includes the incorporation of such trade or business in a transaction to which section 351 of the Code applies; see Rev. Rul. 77-264, 1977-2 C.B. 187.

(c) With respect to a sole proprietor:

If the taxpayer ceases to engage in the trade or business, to which this adjustment (section 3.03) relates, at any time prior to the expiration of the "spread period" referred to in section 3.04, the balance of the adjustment not previously taken into account in computing taxable income shall be taken into account in such year. A sole proprietor ceasing to engage in the trade or business includes the incorporation of such trade or business in a transaction to which section 351 of the Code applies; see Rev. Rul. 77-264, 1977-2 C.B. 187.

.10 For purposes of the addition to tax for underpayment of estimated tax under section 6654(a) of the Code (applicable to individuals) or section 6655(a) (applicable to corporations), in applying the exceptions under sections 6654(d)(2), 6654(d)(3), and 6655(d)(3), the increase in taxable income in the year of change attributable to a change in method of accounting for inventory under this revenue procedure shall be considered to be taxable income for the last month of such taxable year. The increase in taxable income attributable to the change includes the difference in taxable income resulting from using the new method (the "prescribed method") to value beginning and ending inventory as well as the adjustment required by section 481(a) of the Code.

Furthermore, in determining the amount of income for the installment periods under sections 1.6554-2(d) and 1.6655-2(d) of the regulations (which provide for apportioning the cost of goods sold for the year on the basis of gross receipts for the year unless a more exact determination is available) any adjustment to the cost of goods sold for the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979, resulting from the application of this revenue procedure shall be considered to be an adjustment in the last month of the taxable year.

.11 Section 1375(f) of the Code provides that certain distributions by corporations that qualify as electing small business corporations must be made within 2½ months after the close of the corporation's taxable year in order to be considered as distributions of the corporation's undistributed taxable income for such year. The Service will consider requests from electing small business corporations with taxable years ending on or after December 25, 1979, but before March 10, 1980, for a 1-year modification of the taxable year for which consent is granted in section 3.01. Such requests for modification must be made by July 28, 1980, and must be accompanied by a statement of justification, filed under penalty and perjury, and must include (1) a statement establishing (a) that there was insufficient time for reaching a fully informed decision with respect to making a distribution under section 1375(f) as a result of section 3.01, and (b) that the corporation has a history of making timely section 1375(f) distributions, and (2) a description of the change in method of accounting resulting from the application of this revenue procedure. The requests should be addressed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Attention: T:C:C:1, 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224. In order to assist in the processing of these requests, reference to this paragraph should be made a part of the request by either typing or legibly printing at the top of the request the following statement:

"SUBMITTED UNDER SECTION 3.11 OF REV. PROC. 80-5."

.12 In applying sections 3.04(2) or (3), if a taxpayer's books and records do not contain sufficient information to compute the section 481(a) adjustment attributable to the 1, 2, or 3 taxable year period immediately preceding the year of change, the taxpayer may reasonably estimate such amounts and also attach the following statement to the Form 3115:

Under penalty of perjury, I hereby certify that:

(1) the books and records of (name of the taxpayer) do not contain sufficient information to permit a computation of the section 481(a) adjustment attributable to the 1 taxable year period, 2 taxable year period, or 3 taxable year period immediately preceding the year of change as required by section 3.04 of Rev. Proc. 80-5, and

(2) based on the information that is contained in such records, to the best of my information and belief, the entire amount of the section 481(a) adjustment for the year of change (indicate either "is" or "is not", as the case may be) attributable to the taxable year immediately preceding the year of change, and 67 percent or more of the section 481(a) adjustment for the year of change (indicate either "is" or "is not", as the case may be) attributable to the 1 taxable year period, 2 taxable year period, or 3 taxable year period immediately preceding the year of change.

SEC. 4 EXAMPLE (1)

X is a domestic corporation incorporated in 1950 and engaged in the business of manufacturing that reports its income on a calendar year basis. In the normal course of its business, X maintains an inventory of replacement parts for its products for sale to the public. X has consistently written down the value of excess inventory of replacement parts as a result of anticipated losses with respect to such inventory. As of December 31, 1978, X had on hand inventory items which it had written down to its estimate of scrap value by taking an inventory write-down for excess goods in the amount of $100,000. The write-down by X did not conform with the regulations under section 471 of the Code.

X filed a Form 3115 (Application for Change in Method of Accounting) with its tax return for taxable year 1979 in accordance with the provisions set forth in section 5 of this revenue procedure. Accordingly, X restored the write-down of $100,000 to its opening inventory for the taxable year 1979. As a result of such restoration, X will, in effect, receive a double deduction through the cost of goods sold in the amount of $100,000. Thus, under section 481(a) of the Code, an adjustment is necessary solely by reason of the change in method of accounting in order to prevent the $100.000 from being duplicated. Less than 67 percent of the adjustment is attributable to taxable years 1976, 1977, and 1978. If X had changed its method of accounting in 1954, the adjustment would have been $10,000.

If X elects to treat its change in method of accounting as a change initiated by the taxpayer pursuant to section 3.04 above, an adjustment in the amount of $100,000 shall be taken into account as an item of gross income ratably over 10 taxable years (1/10 each year).

If X elects to treat its change in method of accounting as a change not initiated by the taxpayer pursuant to section 3.05 above, an adjustment in the amount of $90,000 ($100,000 — $10,000) shall be taken into account as an item of gross income in taxable year 1979, the year of change. The tax for 1979 on the adjustment shall be limited as provided in section 481(b) of the Code.

EXAMPLE (2)

The facts are the same as presented in Example (1) with the exception that X has used the improper write-down method for 6 taxable years and the net section 481(a) adjustment if the year of change had been one of the 3 preceding taxable years, would have been $60,000 in 1976, $28,000 in 1977, and $50,000 in 1978. In this example, the difference between the net section 481(a) adjustment if the year of change had been 1977, and such adjustment in 1979, the year of change, is more than 67% ($100,000 — $28,000 = $72,000/ $100,000 = 72%) and represents the highest percent of the adjustment attributable to any one of the 1, 2, or 3 taxable year period preceding the year of change. Under the provisions of section 3.04 of this revenue procedure the adjustment for 1979 of $100,000, therefore, shall be taken into account in the amount of $24,000 in 1979, 1980, and 1981 ($72,000 spread ratably over 3 years) and $9,333 in 1982, 1983, and 1984 (the remainder of $28,000 from the $100,000 adjustment spread over 3 years, the remaining number of years that X used the accounting method that is being changed).

EXAMPLE (3)

The facts are the same as presented in example (1) with the additional fact that the value of X's inventory as of December 31, 1978 (the end of the year preceding the year of change) was $800,000, which takes into account the write-downs for excess inventory (the old method). The value of the inventory as of January 1, 1979 (the beginning of the year of change), computed in accordance with a method of accounting permitted by the regulations (the new method), was $900,000. If X treats the change in method of accounting as a change initiated by the taxpayer, the net section 481(a) adjustment is $100,000 ($900,000 — $800,000). The taxable income for the year ended December 31, 1979, based on the foregoing and the amounts indicated below, should be computed as follows:

Sales		$1,600,000
Inventory at beginning of year (computed in accordance with the new method)	$ 900,000
Manufacturing costs	1,170,000
	2,070,000
Inventory at end of year (computed in accordance with new method)	970,000
		1,100,000
Gross Profit		$ 500,000
Deductions		200,000
		300,000
Section 481(a) adjustment (1/10 × $100,000)		10,000
Taxable income		$ 310,000

If X elects to treat the change in method of accounting as a change not initiated by the taxpayer, an adjustment in the amount of $90,000 ($100,000 — $10,000 attributable to pre-1954 years) shall be taken into account as an item of gross income in 1979 and taxable income in the above example for 1979 would be $390,000. In such case, the tax for 1979 on the adjustment shall be limited as provided in section 481(b) of the Code.

Sec. 5. Manner of Effecting the Change

.01 Taxpayers to which this revenue procedure applies must effect the change in their methods of accounting for their first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979, pursuant to the provisions set forth in this revenue procedure by filing a Form 3115 in duplicate. The original shall be attached to the taxpayer's timely filed federal income tax return for such year or to an amended return for such year filed no later than the extended time period prescribed in section 6081 of the Code and the regulations thereunder whether or not the taxpayer has, in fact, been granted an extension of time for filing its income tax return for the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979. For example, a domestic corporation whose taxable year ends December 31, 1979, must effect the change described in this revenue procedure on an original timely filed return, or on an amended return filed no later than September 15, 1980. At the same time a copy of the Form 3115 shall be filed with the National Office addressed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Attention: T:C:C:1, 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224. In addition to the information required on Form 3115, the taxpayer must state whether section 3.04 or section 3.05 has been applied and must provide (1) a computation of the net section 481(a) adjustment, (2) the pre-1954 Code year adjustment, if applicable, and (3) the period over which the net section 481(a) adjustment will be taken into account and the basis for such conclusion. The National Office will sample the Form 3115's to determine whether the requirements of this revenue procedure have been followed. The National Office or the District Director may advise the taxpayer of required adjustments to the change in method of inventory valuation. Any adjustment made by the National Office will be limited to those necessary to properly comply with this revenue procedure.

.02 In order to assist in the processing of these changes in methods of accounting and to insure proper handling, reference to this revenue procedure shall be made a part of the Form 3115 by either typing or legibly printing the following statement: "FILED UNDER REV. PROC. 80-5."

.03 If a taxpayer applies the provisions of this revenue procedure to change a method of accounting with respect to a method of accounting for inventory write-downs not in accordance with the regulations under section 471 of the Code, and if it is subsequently determined that such change in method is not within the scope of this revenue procedure, the taxpayer will be deemed to have properly filed a timely application for a change in such method of accounting at the time that and for the taxable year in which the Form 3115 is filed pursuant to sections 5.01 and 5.02.

Sec. 6. Inquiries

Inquiries regarding this revenue procedure may be addressed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Attention: T:C:C:1, 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224.

Section 1. Purpose

In this revenue procedure, the Assistant Secretary (Tax Policy) of the Treasury prescribes certain changes with respect to the Class Life Asset Depreciation Range System. One purpose of this Revenue Procedure is to establish under section 1.167(a)-11 of the Income Tax Regulations a new class 57.0, Distributive Trades and Services, and a new class 57.1, Distributive Trades and Services—Billboards, Service Station Buildings and Petroleum Marketing Land Improvements. A further purpose is to clarify the description of assets included in class 00.12, Information Systems.

Class 57.0 includes assets formerly included in classes 13.4, Marketing of Petroleum and Petroleum Products (section 1245 property), 50.0, Wholesale and Retail Trade, 70.2, Personal and Professional Services, and 50.1 and 70.21 (Service Assets). Class 57.1 includes assets formerly included in class 13.4, Marketing of Petroleum and Petroleum Products (Section 1250 property, including service station buildings and all depreciable land improvements).

The new and clarified asset guideline classes, and associated asset guideline depreciation periods, asset depreciation ranges, and annual asset guideline repair allowance percentages are set forth in Section 2 of this Revenue Procedure.

Information systems are defined as: 1) Computers: A computer is an electronically activated device capable of accepting information, applying prescribed processes to the information, and supplying the results of these processes with or without human intervention. It usually consists of a central processing unit containing extensive storage, logic, arithmetic, and control capabilities. Excluded from this category are adding machines, electronic desk calculators, etc. 2) Peripheral equipment consists of the auxiliary machines that may be placed under control of the central processing unit. Nonlimiting examples are: Card readers, card punches, magnetic tape feeds, high speed printers, optical character readers, tape cassettes, mass storage units, paper tape equipment, keypunches, data entry devices, teleprinters, terminals, tape drives, disc drives, disc files, disc packs, visual image projector tubes, card sorters, plotters, and collators. SEC. 3. EFFECT ON OTHER DOCUMENTS

Rev. Proc. 77-10, 1977-1 C.B. 548, as modified, is further modified by the deletion of classes 13.4, Marketing of Petroleum and Petroleum Products; 50.0, Wholesale and Retail Trade; 50.1, Wholesale and Retail Trade Service Assets; 70.2, Personal and Professional Services; and 70.21, Personal and Professional Services Service Assets.

Trades and Services, and 57.1, Distributive Trades and Services—Billboards, Service Station Buildings and Petroleum Marketing Land Improvements, and the clarification of class 00.12, Information Systems.

SEC. 4. EFFECTIVE DATE

This revenue procedure is effective for assets placed in service in taxable years ending on or after April 28, 1980. For taxable years ending prior to April 28, 1980, distributive trades and services automated equipment such as POS computer systems described herein are properly classified in asset guideline class 00.12, 50.0, or 70.2, depending upon which class was selected by the taxpayer on its original return.

Rev. Proc. 80-16

SECTION 1. PURPOSE

The purpose of this revenue procedure is to provide a procedure for partnerships to follow in making the election provided in Article 23(3)(c) of the United States-France Income Tax Convention (the "Treaty"), 1968-2 C.B. 691, as amended by the Protocol of November 24, 1978 (the "Protocol"), 1979-51 I.R.B. 17. This revenue procedure also clarifies the application of this election to partnerships reporting income on the basis of taxable years begun before January 1, 1979, and ended after January 1, 1979, with the distributive shares of the partners being reported on the basis of taxable years begun on or after January 1, 1979.

SEC. 2. BACKGROUND

.01 Article 23(3)(c) of the Treaty provides special rules for sourcing income applicable to United States citizens who are residents of France and members of a partnership. It provides that a partnership of which an individual member is both a resident of France and a citizen of the United States may elect for any taxable year to treat the income from United States sources that is taxable by France solely by reason of Article 14 (4), as income from sources within France. This increases the member's foreign tax credit limitation provided in section 904(a) of the Internal Revenue Code.

If the election is made, the partnership share of the foreign-source income of each of the other partners not resident in France is correspondingly reduced by the amount deemed to be from sources within France and thus a corresponding amount of their foreign-source income is treated as having a United States source for United States tax purposes. Such reduction is first applied to the French-source income of those other partners and when that is exhausted, to their other foreign-source income. This reduction may not exceed the foreign-source income that would otherwise be allocated to those other partners for the taxable year. In the event that the amount of the French resident partner's United States-source income that is deemed to be from French sources exceeds the entire amount of the other partner's foreign-source income (including the French-source income), the excess is first applied to reduce the French-source income and then other foreign-source income of the other partners in each of the succeeding taxable years until the deemed-French-source income of the French resident partner is fully offset by the deemed-United States-source income of the other partners, whether or not an election for such succeeding years is in effect. See Treasury Department Technical Explanation of the Protocol, 1979-51 I.R.B. 33.

If the election is made, it is made for all the members of the partnership. The effects of this election, therefore, are binding on all the members having a United States income tax liability. With respect to members who are citizens of the United States and residents of France, Article 23 of the Treaty provides that, if the election is made, such members are denied any benefits of the exclusion or deduction provided by sections 911 and 913 of the Code for income earned abroad. Such denial of section 911 and section 913 benefits does not affect the applicability of these benefits to the income earned abroad by the members' spouses.

.02 Article 6(4) of the Treaty, with respect to the taxation of partnership income generally provides that a partner's distributive share of partnership income, loss, and other items is to have the same character and source in the partner's hands as those items have in the hands of the partnership. This provision is intended to reduce the double taxation of partnership income that would result due to the inconsistency between the source rules applied by the United States and those applied by France. This provision is a restatement of the normal sourcing rules applied to partnership income under section 702(b) of the Internal Revenue Code.

.03 Article 14(4) of the Treaty provides that the special partnership source rules of Article 6(4) shall apply to income from independent personal services by analogy but such application may not result in the exemption from French tax under Article 23(2) of more than 50 percent of the earned income from a partnership of a United States citizen who is a resident of France.

.04 Section 904(a) of the Code limits the amount of foreign tax credit that may be applied against United States tax liability on a taxpayer's worldwide income to the same proportion of such amount that the taxable income from foreign sources bears to the taxpayer's taxable income from all sources (worldwide) for the same taxable year.

.05 Article 2 of the Protocol provides that the Protocol shall have effect retroactively with respect to tax years beginning on or after January 1, 1979.

SEC. 3. SCOPE AND OBJECTIVE

This revenue procedure applies to all partnerships seeking to make the election provided in Article 23(3)(c) of the Treaty, including partnerships reporting their income for United States tax purposes on a fiscal year basis with the year begun before January 1, 1979, and ended after January 1, 1979, and seeking to make such election with respect to the United States-source income of a partner resident in France who is a United States citizen but whose distributive share is reported on a calendar or fiscal year basis, with the year beginning on or after January 1, 1979. In furtherance of the underlying purpose of this election provision, which is to minimize the effect of any double taxation that may exist because of the differences between United States and French tax laws, a procedure is provided whereby such partnerships may avail themselves of this election. This election was provided in the Treaty for the benefit of the French resident partner and the beginning date of such partner's taxable year is controlling vis-a-vis the effective date of the Protocol rather than the beginning date of the partnership's taxable year.

SEC. 4. MANNER OF MAKING THE ELECTION UNDER ARTICLE 23(3)(c).

.01 The election provided in Article 23(3)(c) of the Treaty under which the United States-source income of its parners(s) resident in France that cannot be treated as exempt under Article 23 because of the 50-percent limitation of Article 14(4) will be deemed to be French-source income for United States tax purposes, including the foreign tax credit limitation of section 904(a) of the Code, shall be effected by a partnership's filing of a Form 1065, U.S. Partnership Return of Income, along with a Schedule K-1 (Form 1065), Partner's Share of Income, Credits, Deduction, etc.—1979, in duplicate on or before the appropriate due date for the Form 1065 or within 90 days of the publication of this revenue procedure, whichever is later. Each member of the partnership shall file a Form 1040, U.S. Individual Income Tax Return, along with a Form 1116, Computation of Foreign Tax Credit—Individual, Fiduciary, or Nonresident Alien Individual, making the appropriate adjustments necessitated by the election, also in duplicate, on or before the appropriate due date for the Form 1040 or within 90 days of the publication of this revenue procedure, whichever is later. The originals of all these returns shall be filed with the appropriate Service Center as provided on page 1 of the Instructions for Form 1065. At the same time, copies of these returns shall be filed with the Director, Office of International Operations, Attention: Chief, Tax Treaty and Technical Services Division, CP:OIO:3, Room 820, 1325 K Street, NW, Washington, DC 20224. This election is not valid unless the partnership return is accompanied by all affected individual returns. If this is not possible because of different due dates, the partnership return shall be accompanied by a list of all the affected partners (their names and social security numbers) that will later file appropriate returns pursuant to this procedure.

.02 In order to assist in the processing of these returns and to insure proper handling, reference to this revenue procedure shall be made a part of the returns by indicating at the top of the copies of Form 1065, Schedule K-1, Form 1040 and Form 1116 by either typing or legibly printing the following statement: "FILED UNDER REV. PROC. 80-16."

.03 Such election may also be effected by the filing of the appropriate amended returns by a partnership and its members, provided the amended returns are filed within the applicable statutory period provided by law. The appropriate amended returns of the partnership and those of its members must be filed simultaneously and in the same manner as indicated in sections 4.01 and 4.02 above. This election will not be valid unless the amended partnership return is accompanied by all affected amended individual returns.

.04 The election made under the provisions of this revenue procedure pursuant to Article 23(3)(c) of the Treaty shall apply to the first taxable year for which such election was made and for each taxable year thereafter until such election is revoked by the partnership. The election may be revoked for any taxable year. Such revocation shall be effected by the simultaneous filing of the appropriate amended returns by the partnership and its members within 3 years from the time the original returns of the members were filed or 2 years from the time the federal tax was paid for the taxable year for which the election is sought to be revoked, whichever of such periods expires later. The amended returns are to be filed in the same manner as indicated in sections 4.01 and 4.02 above. This revocation will not be valid unless the amended partnership return is accompanied by all affected amended individual returns.

Part IV. Items of General Interest

Removal of Statutory Sections from Title 26 of the Code of Federal Regulations—Amendment

Announcement 80-52 [1]

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Editorial changes.

SUMMARY: This document announces editorial changes to Title 26 of the Code of Federal Regulations, made necessary by the previous deletion of statutory sections from the regulations. Cross-references to the deleted material have been changed to the corresponding sections of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or to the appropriate regulations sections. However, when either such change would have produced a redundancy, the cross-reference has been deleted.

EFFECTIVE DATE: This announcement is effective March 31, 1980.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: George H. Bradley of the Legislation and Regulations Division, Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service, 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224, Attention: CC:LR:T, 202-566-3486, not a toll-free call.

Announcement

On January 25, 1980, Treasury Decision 7665 was published in the Federal Register (43 FR 6088) [1980-8 I.R.B. 17]. That Treasury decision removed from Title 26 of the Code of Federal Regulations those regulation sections that recite verbatim provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

A number of existing regulation sections in Title 26 of the Code of Federal Regulations contain cross-references to certain of those regulation sections which were removed. The next publication of Title 26 will correct these cross-references to refer to corresponding sections of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or to the appropriate regulation sections, and no longer to statutory sections as formerly recited in Title 26.

Certain of the regulation sections that referred to deleted statutory sections also referred to the corresponding Code section and regulations section. In those instances, cross-references to the deleted statutory sections were deleted.

These changes will be made as a part of the April 1, 1980, edition of Title 26 of the Code of Federal Regulations.

Amendment of Rev. Proc. 80-5

Announcement 80-54 [1]

In response to questions, Rev. Proc. 80-9, 1980-10 I.R.B. 19, dealing with the change in method of accounting for "excess" inventory pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Thor Power Tool Co. v. Commissioner is amended.

Rev. Proc. 80-5 was announced in IRS News Release IR-80-19 on Feb. 8, 1980.

The amendments add provisions to Rev. Proc. 80-5 that concern the following:

1. The election of the last-in, first-out method of accounting (LIFO) in the same taxable year that a change is made under Rev. Proc. 80-5;

2. The treatment of the Internal Revenue Code section 481(a) adjustment in the event that the value of the inventory to which the adjustment relates is reduced by more than 33⅓ percent;

3. The application of certain exceptions to the addition to tax for underpayment of estimated tax;

4. Electing small business corporations with taxable years ending before Mar. 10, 1980, seeking to comply with the rules provided in section 1375(f) of the Code with respect to their distributions;

5. The computation of the section 481(a) adjustment attributable to periods prior to the year of change for purposes of determining the proper spread period;

6. An example of the computation of the section 481(a) adjustment;

7. Compliance with Rev. Proc. 80-5 by an amended return; and

8. A change of accounting method made under the provisions of Rev. Proc. 80-5 that is subsequently determined not to be within its scope.

Sample copies of Form 3115, Application for Change in Accounting Method, filed under the provisions of Rev. Proc. 80-5 and have indicated the following common errors being made by taxpayers:

a. Failure to indicate whether the change in method of accounting will be treated as a change initiated by the taxpayer as described in section 3.04 (1) of the procedure or as a change in method of accounting not initiated by the taxpayer as described in section 3.05; if section 3.04 is applicable, failure to indicate the period over which the section 481(a) adjustment will be taken into account;

b. Failure to indicate the number of years of use of the method of accounting for inventory valuation of "excess" inventory that was not in accordance with the "prescribed method" (section 3.04(1));

c. Failure to compute the section 481(a) adjustment properly, particularly the failure to redetermine the opening inventory for the year of change under a method of accounting that is in accordance with the regulations; and

d. Failure to indicate on the top of the Form 3115 that it is being "Filed Under Rev. Proc. 80-5."

As revised, Rev. Proc. 80-5 is republished on page 23 of this Bulletin. The amendments to Rev. Proc. 80-5 are as follows:

1. To clarify the applicability of the revenue procedure to taxpayers electing the last-in, first-out (LIFO) method of inventory valuation, section 3.07 is modified to read as follows:

---

[1] Filed by the Office of the Federal Register on March 28, 1980, 8:45 a.m., and published in the issue of the Federal Register for March 31, 1980, 45 F.R. 20795.

[1] Based on News Release IR-80-48 dated April 8, 1980.

This revenue procedure does not apply to a method of accounting for inventory, where the taxpayer elects to use (or is using) the last-in first-out (LIFO) method of accounting for such inventory for the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979. In the case of a taxpayer electing LIFO for the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979, pursuant to section 472(d) of the Code and the regulations thereunder, the difference between the carrying value of such inventory under the taxpayer's method of accounting (if less than cost) and cost shall be included in income for the preceding taxable year by filing an amended return for such preceding year. For a taxpayer using the LIFO method, see Rev. Proc. 76-6, 1976-1 C.B. 545, Rev. Proc. 76-28, 1976-2 C.B. 645, and Rev. Rul. 76-282, 1976-2 C.B. 137. If a taxpayer elects the LIFO method of inventory valuation during the "spread period" referred to in section 3.04, other than in the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979, the unamortized balance of the section 481(a) adjustment, referred to in section 3.03, must be taken into account in full as an item of ordinary income in the year for which such election is made.

2. To clarify the applicability of the 33⅓ percent rule, section 3.08 is modified to read as follows:

If, at the end of any taxable year during the "spread period" referred to in section 3.04, the value of the taxpayer's inventory to which the section 481(a) adjustment under section 3.03 relates, as of the last day of any taxable year, is reduced by more than 33⅓ percent of the inventory valued at the beginning of the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979 (see section 3.03), the balance of the unamortized net section 481(a) adjustment, at such time, must be taken into account in full as an item of ordinary income in the year of such inventory reduction. This section shall not apply in the event such reduction is attributable to a strike or involuntary conversion.

3. To provide coordination between the revenue procedure and the determination of the addition to tax for underpayment of estimated tax, the following paragraph is added to section 3:

.10 For purposes of the addition to tax for underpayment of estimated tax under section 6654(a) of the Code (applicable to individuals) or section 6655(a) (applicable to corporations), in applying the exceptions under sections 6654(d)(2), 6654(d)(3), and 6655(d)(3), the increase in taxable income in the year of change attributable to a change in method of accounting for inventory under this revenue procedure shall be considered to be taxable income for the last month of such taxable year. The increase in taxable income attributable to the change includes the difference in taxable income resulting from using the new method (the "prescribed method") to value beginning and ending inventory as well as the adjustment required by section 481(a) of the Code.

Furthermore, in determining the amount of income for the installment periods under sections 1.6654-2(d) and 1.6655-2(d) of the regulations (which provide for apportioning the cost of goods sold for the year on the basis of gross receipts for the year unless a more exact determination is available) any adjustment to the cost of goods sold for the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979, resulting from the application of this revenue procedure shall be considered to be an adjustment in the last month of the taxable year.

4. To provide a special procedure for small business corporations seeking to comply with the provisions of section 1375(f) of the Code, the following paragraph is added to section 3:

.11 Section 1375(f) of the Code provides that certain distributions by corporations that qualify as electing small business corporations must be made within 2½ months after the close of the corporation's taxable year in order to be considered as distributions of the corporation's undistributed taxable income for such year. The Service will consider requests from electing small business corporations with taxable years ending on or after December 25, 1979, but before March 10, 1980, for a 1-year modification of the taxable year for which consent is granted in section 3.01. Such requests for modification must be made by July 28, 1980, and must be accompanied by a statement of justification, filed under penalty and perjury, and must include (1) a statement establishing (a) that there was insufficient time for reaching a fully informed decision with respect to making a distribution under section 1375(f) as a result of section 3.01, and (b) that the corporation has a history of making timely section 1375(f) distributions, and (2) a description of the change in method of accounting resulting from the application of this revenue procedure. The requests should be addressed to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Attention: T:C:C:1, 1111 Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20224. In order to assist in the processing of these requests, reference to this paragraph should be made a part of the request by either typing or legibly printing at the top of the request the following statement:

"SUBMITTED UNDER SECTION 3.11 OF REV. PROC. 80-5."

5. To provide a procedure for submitting certain required information in order to comply with the rules for allowing a spread of the section 481(a) adjustment when all information is not otherwise available, the following paragraph is added to section 3:

.12 In applying section 3.04(2) or (3), if a taxpayer's books and records do not contain sufficient information to compute the section 481(a) adjustment attributable to the 1, 2, or 3 taxable year period immediately preceding the year of change, the taxpayer may reasonably estimate such amounts and also attach the following statement to the Form 3115:

Under penalty of perjury, I hereby certify that:

(1) the books and records of (name of the taxpayer) do not contain sufficient information to permit a computation of the section 481(a) adjustment atrtibutable to the 1 taxable year period, 2 taxable year period, or 3 taxable year period immediately preceding the year of change as required by section 3.04 of Rev. Proc. 80-5, and

(2) based on the information that is contained in such records, to the best of my information and belief, the entire amount of the section 481(a) adjustment for the year of change (indicate either "is" or "is not", as the case may be) attributable to the taxable year immediately preceding the year of change, and 67 percent or more of the section 481(a) adjustment for the year of change (indicate either "is" or "is not", as the case may be) attributable to the 1 taxable year period, 2 taxable year period, or 3 taxable year period immediately preceding the year of change.

6. To provide an example to illustrate the computation of the section 481(a) adjustment, referred to in section 3.03, the following example is added to section 4:

EXAMPLE (3)

The facts are the same as presented in example (1) with the additional fact that the value of X's inventory as of December 31, 1978 (the end of the year preceding the year of change) was $800,000, which takes into account the write-downs for excess inventory (the old method). The value of the inventory as of January 1, 1979 (the beginning of the year of change, computed in accordance with a method of accounting permitted by the regulations (the new method), was $900,000. If X treats the change in method of accounting as a change initiated by the taxpayer, the net section 481(a) adjustment is $100,000 ($900,000 — $800,000). The taxable income for the year ended December 31, 1979, based on the foregoing and the amounts indicated below, should be computed as follows:

Sales		$1,600,000
Inventory at beginning of year (computed in accordance with the new method)	$ 900,000
Manufacturing costs	1,170,000
	2,070,000
Inventory at end of year (computed in accordance with the new method)	970,000
		1,100,000
Gross Profit		$ 500,000
Deductions		200,000
		300,000
Section 481(a) adjustment (1/10 × $100,000)		10,000
Taxable income		$ 310,000

If X elects to treat the change in method of accounting as a change not initiated by the taxpayer, an adjustment in the amount of $90,000 ($100,000 — $10,000 attributable to pre-1954 years) shall be taken into account as an item of gross income in 1979 and taxable income in the above example for 1979 would be $390,000. In such case, the tax for 1979 on the adjustment shall be limited as provided in section 481(b) of the Code.

7. To clarify that the granting of an extension of time to file the tax return is not otherwise required, the second sentence of section 5.01 is modified to read as follows:

The original shall be attached to the taxpayer's timely filed federal income tax return for such year or to an amended return for such year filed no later than the extended time period prescribed in section 6081 of the Code and the regulations thereunder whether or not the taxpayer has, in fact, been granted an extension of time for filing its income tax return for the first taxable year ending on or after December 25, 1979.

8. To clarify the effect when the method being changed is not within the scope of this revenue procedure, the following paragraph is added to section 5:

.03 If a taxpayer applies the provisions of this revenue procedure to change a method of accounting with respect to a method of accounting for inventory write-downs not in accordance with the regulations under section 471 of the Code, and if it is subsequently determined that such change in method is not within the scope of this revenue procedure, the taxpayer will be deemed to have properly filed a timely application for a change in such method of accounting at the time that and for the taxable year in which the Form 3115 is filed pursuant to sections 5.01 and 5.02.

Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on Subpart A, Tax Conventions and related Treasury Decisions and Revenue Rulings; Subpart B, Legislation and related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of Revenue Rulings, Revenue Procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical Indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

For sale by the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402. Prices: Domestic—$2.00 a single copy, $55.00 a year subscription; Foreign—$2.50 a single copy, $68.75 a year subscription.

ISSUE

Is all or any portion of a payment made by a taxpayer in settlement of a suit brought against the taxpayer deductible under section 162(a) of the Internal Revenue Code under the circumstances described below?

FACTS

The taxpayer, A, a shareholder and director of X, a domestic corporation, purchased additional shares of X stock from B, an individual unrelated to A or X. Subsequent to the purchase, Y was organized as a holding company by the management and controlling shareholders of X, and Y acquired X as a controlled subsidiary with the controlling shareholders of X exchanging their stock for stock of Y. Following the corporate acquisition, an offer to the remaining shareholders of X to exchange their shares for shares of Y, and a public offering by Y of its stock, B filed a complaint with a federal district court alleging that A had violated section 10(b) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 (Act) by withholding certain information from B when A purchased the X stock from B. The complaint alleged that, at the time of the purchase, A concealed the pending organization of Y, as well as the planned exchange of stock by the controlling shareholders, the planned offer to the remaining shareholders to exchange their stock, and the planned public offering by Y. The complaint further alleged that, at the time the complaint was filed the fair market value of the Y stock A received in exchange for the X stock purchased from B was several times greater than the amount for which B sold the X stock to A. B asked that judgment be entered against A in the amount of the damages sustained by B, plus interest and costs of the suit.

Subsequent to the filing of the complaint, A's counsel informed A of the threats of B to convert the complaint into a class action that would include other purchases of X stock by A and other controlling shareholders of X and to amend the complaint to allege common law fraud. A's counsel also informed A that, while the existing complaint would permit the award of only actual damages, common law fraud would permit the award of both actual and punitive damages.

A negotiated with B an out-of-court cash settlement of the suit. The amount of the settlement, however, exceeded the amount of damages that B could have been awarded, based on the applicable circuit court's method of computing damages in actions involving section 10(b) of the Act, had the suit been tried. A was a prominent member of the business community. A paid B more than the court could have awarded B under the section 10(b) action because A wanted to avoid a trial on the various present and threatened suits. A also believed that litigation would affect A's standing in the business community, and A desired to preserve A's business reputation. In exchange for the cash payment, B settled the suit and agreed not to take any of the threatened actions.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 162(a) of the Code allows as a deduction all the ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on any trade or business.

Section 1.162-1 of the Income Tax Regulations provides, in part, that business expenses deductible from gross income include the ordinary and necessary expenditures directly connected with or pertaining to the taxpayer's trade or business. This section contains a cross reference to sections 261-276 of the Code for items not deductible. Among these sections is section 263(a), which prohibits deductions for capital expenditures. Under section 1.263(a) the cost of acquisition of a capital asset is considered a capital expenditure.

The origin-of-the-claim test is the proper method of determining whether the entire settlement payment is a capital expenditure or whether only that portion of the payment made for actual damages resulting from the stock purchase transaction is a capital expenditure and the remainder of the payment is a deductible business expense. In United States v. Gilmore, 372 U.S. 39, 49 (1973), the Supreme Court of the United States held that it could be determined whether costs of litigation were nondeductible personal expenses or deductible business expenses by considering the "origin and character of the claim with respect to which an expense was incurred."

In Anchor Coupling Company v. United States, 427 F. 2d 429, 433 (7th Cir. 1970), cert. denied, 401 U.S. 908 (1971), the United States Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit concluded that the examination of the origin and character of the claim with respect to which a settlement is made, rather than the estimation of the potential consequences of the claim upon the business operations of a taxpayer, is the controlling test in determining whether a settlement payment constituted a deductible busines expense or a nondeductible capital outlay.

Under the origin-of-the-claim test it may be proper for a settlement payment to be allocated to claims that were only threatened as well as to those that were actually made. See DeMink v. United States, 448 F. 2d 867 (9th Cir. 1971); Eisler v. Commissioner, 59 T.C. 634 (1973), acq. 1973-2 C.B. 1. In Boagni v. Commissioner, 59 T.C. 708 (1973), the United States Tax Court recognized that legal expenses incurred can be characterized as both deductible and nondeductible when the litigation is rooted in situations giving rise to both types of expenditures. In discussing the application of the origin-of-the-claim test, the court, at page 713, stated:

> [T]he "origin of the claim" rule does not contemplate a mechanical search for the first in the chain of events which led to the litigation but, rather, requires an examination of all the facts. The inquiry is directed to the ascertainment of the "kind of transaction" out of which the litigation arose. Consideration must be given to the issues involved, the nature and objectives of the litigation, the defenses asserted, the purpose for which the claimed deductions were expended, the background of the litigation, and all facts pertaining to the controversy. [citations omitted]

In the present case, in return for the cash payment, B settled the original claim and agreed not to take any of the threatened actions. The origin-of-the-claim test should be applied to each settled claim, actual and threatened, to determine whether the settlement payment is a deductible business expense, a non-deductible capital outlay or a combination of the two types of expenditures. This determination is made by examining each claim to discover if it originated in the course of the conduct of a trade or business as an ordinary and necessary business expense or if it originated in a transaction giving rise to a nondeductible expenditure, such as the acquisition of a capital asset.

Each of the settled claims, actual and threatened, originated in the stock purchase transaction. All these claims are various forms of relief sought for the harm allegedly done by the taxpayer in this transaction.

HOLDING

The entire amount of the out-of-court settlement payment is a capital expenditure because all the claims it settled arose from the acquisition of a capital asset. No portion of the payment is deductible under section 162 (a) of the Code.

Insurance premiums paid to physician-owned mutual insurance company. Payments made as professional liability insurance premiums by a medical service corporation with 25 employees to a physician-owned mutual insurance company that provides non-assessable professional liability insurance to over 5,000 doctors and several professional corporations are deductible under section 162 of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 80-120

ISSUE

Are payments made by a professional corporation to a mutual insurance company as professional liability insurance premiums deductible as ordinary and necessary business expenses under section 162 of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The taxpayer is a professional corporation that has a contract with a hospital to provide professional medical services. The taxpayer employs 10 doctors and 15 registered nurses.

M, a mutual insurance exchange, was formed and qualified pursuant to state law to provide medical professional liability insurance, which includes malpractice insurance. It is a physician-owned carrier offering non-assessable professional liability insurance policies to all physicians and medical professional corporations, including the taxpayer, licensed to practice in the state who maintain at least 50 percent of their practice in the state. M is managed by a board of directors consisting of member-policyholders. Its sole business purpose is to supply insurance coverage to the policyholders at the lowest possible cost. Over 5,000 doctors and several professional corporations are insured by the exchange. M is subject to tax as a mutual insurance company under section 821(a) of the Code.

During the taxable year, premium payments to the exchange in the amount of 1000x dollars for professional liability insurance were made by the taxpayer. These premium payments are established according to customary rating formulas dependent upon the hazard and expense differences among the insured doctors.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 162(a) of the Code provides a deduction for all ordinary and necessary expenses paid or incurred in carrying on any trade or business.

Section 1.162-1(a) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that among the items included in business expenses are insurance premiums against accident, or other similar losses in the case of a business.

Essential to the concept of insurance is a sharing and distribution of the insurance risk by all the parties insured. See Helvering v. LeGierse, 312 U.S. 531 (1941), 1941-1 C.B. 430. When there is no economic shift or distribution of the risk "insured," the contract is not one of insurance. See Rev. Rul. 77-316, 1977-2 C.B. 53, which sets forth examples in which payments denominated insurance premiums are not deductible under section 162 of the Code because there is no economic shifting or distributing of risks of loss where the alleged insureds are all economically interrelated and the risks are carried or retained by a foreign corporation that is wholly-owned by one of the alleged insureds.

Rev. Rul. 78-338, 1978-2 C.B. 107, deals with a group of 31 unrelated corporations all owning shares of a foreign insurance company. No shareholder in Rev. Rul. 78-338 owned a controlling interest in the insurance company. The insurance company provides insurance only to its shareholders and their subsidiaries and affiliates, and no shareholder's individual risk coverage was permitted to exceed 5 percent of the total risks insured by the company. Premium rates are established according to customary industry rating formulas, dependent upon the hazard and expense differences among the insureds. Rev. Rul. 78-338, in distinguishing Rev. Rul. 77-316, holds that the requisite risk-shifting and risk-distribution necessary to constitute insurance are present, therefore the amounts paid as premiums are deductible under section 162 of the Code.

In the instant situation, as in Rev. Rul. 78-338, the requisite risk-shifting and risk-distribution necessary to constitute insurance are present. There is a sufficient number of policyholders; no one policyholder owns a controlling interest in the exchange, and the policies are non-assessable.

HOLDING

Payments made by the professional corporation to a physician-owned mutual insurance company as professional liability insurance premiums are deductible as ordinary and necessary expenses under section 162 of the Code.

Section 164.—Taxes

26 CFR 1.164-1: Deduction for taxes.

Land gains tax; Vermont. The tax imposed by sections 10001 through 10010, title 32, of the Vermont Statutes Annotated (Supp. 1979), on gain from the sale or exchange of certain land in Vermont is a transfer tax and is deductible under section 164(a) of the Code only to the extent that it is paid or accrued within the taxable year in carrying on a trade or business or an activity described in section 212.

Rev. Rul. 80-121

ISSUE

Is the tax imposed by sections 10001 through 10010, title 32, of the Vermont Statutes Annotated (Supp. 1979), on gain from the sale or exchange of certain land in Vermont deductible under section 164 of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

Section 10001 of the Vermont Statutes levies a tax (land gains tax) on gain from the sale or exchange of land in Vermont. However, gain allocable to any improvements on the land, gain attributable to land held for more than six years, or gain attributable to land necessary for the use of a dwelling used by the taxpayer as the taxpayer's principal residence and not exceeding 10 acres is not subject to the land gains tax. The rate of land gains tax (from 5 to 60 percent) varies, directly according to the percentage of the taxpayer's basis in the land that is equal to the gain, and inversely according to the length of time the taxpayer has held the land, abating completely after six years.

Under the Vermont statute, a sale or exchange of land is any transfer of title to land for a consideration, and a taxable gain is the amount realized from a sale or exchange of land, less the transferor's basis in the land as determined under the federal Internal Revenue Code. In computing the amount of gain subject to tax, the taxpayer cannot reduce taxable gain from one sale or exchange of land during the taxable year by losses from other sales or exchanges of land, including those incurred in a trade or business or in any transaction entered into for profit though not connected with a trade or business. The amount realized from a sale or exchange of land is the full actual consideration paid or to be paid therefor, including the amount of any liens or encumbrances on the land existing before the sale or exchange and not removed thereby, minus any expenses of sale, any commissions, and any portion of the amount realized that is allocable to buildings or other structures on the land, if any.

Under the Vermont statute, liability for the land gains tax is imposed on the owner-seller of the land with exceptions not here relevant. The buyer of any land held by the seller for less than six years is required to withhold and remit to the Vermont Commissioner of Taxes ten percent of all consideration paid to the seller. Within 30 days of the sale or exchange of the land, the seller must file a tax return and pay any land gains tax that may be due in excess of the amount withheld.

Any tax required to be paid or withheld is a personal debt of the person liable to pay or withhold. When the notification or assessment of the land gains tax liability is made by the Vermont Commissioner of Taxes, an amount equal to the tax required to be paid or withheld becomes a lien upon all property and rights to property, whether real or personal, belonging to the person liable for the tax or for the withholding. To be valid, the lien must be recorded in the office of the clerk of the county where the property subject to the lien is situated.

Because notification or assessment occurs well after the date of the sale or exchange, the buyer has title to the transferred land when the notification or assessment takes place. Thus, because the seller no longer has title to the land, no lien to secure payment of the land gains tax can arise against the land by virtue of the seller's former ownership therein. A lien can arise against the land by virtue of the buyer's ownership, but only to assure that the buyer withholds and remits the required amount to the Vermont Commissioner of Taxes. Thus, if the buyer fulfills the obligation to withhold and remit, but the seller fails to pay any additional land gains tax owed in excess of the amount withheld, the State has no recourse against either the buyer's land or the buyer personally.

The collections from the land gains tax are used exclusively for public purposes.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 164(a) of the Code describes various types of taxes that are allowed as a deduction for the taxable year within which paid or accrued. Specifically, these taxes are: (1) state and local, and foreign, real property taxes, (2) state and local personal property taxes, (3) state and local, and foreign, income, war profits, and excess profits taxes, and (4) state and local general sales taxes.

Section 164(a) of the Code also allows, as a deduction, state and local, and foreign, taxes not specifically described that are paid or accrued within the taxable year in carrying on a trade or business or an activity described in section 212 (relating to expenses for the production of income).

The only section 164 specific deduction provisions possibly applicable to the Vermont land gains tax are the state real property tax deduction provision and the state income tax deduction provision.

Section 1.164-3(b) of the Income Tax Regulations provides that the term "real property taxes" means taxes imposed on interests in real property and levied for the general public welfare by the proper taxing authorities of a state at a like rate against all property in the territory over which such authorities have jurisdiction.

Some of the characteristics of a tax imposed on real property or on an interest in real property are: (1) the tax is generally imposed or triggered by the ownership of real property and not the exercise of one or more of the incidents of property ownership, such as use or disposition, (2) the tax is measured by the value of real property, and (3) liability for the tax is not solely personal. See Rev. Rul. 75-558, 1975-2 C.B. 67, and Rev. Rul. 73-600, 1973-2 C.B. 47.

The Vermont land gains tax is not imposed or triggered by the ownership of real property, but rather, by the exercise of one of the incidents of property ownership, the transfer of real property at a gain. The land gains tax is not measured by the value of the real property, but rather, by the gain derived from the transfer of that property. Liability for the tax is personal because Vermont has no recourse against the buyer's land to satisfy any land gains tax owed by the seller in excess of the amount withheld and paid over to the state by the buyer. Thus, the land gains tax is not a real property tax within the meaning of section 164(a)(1) of the Code.

With respect to the Vermont land gains tax qualifying under the section 164 state income tax deduction provision, such tax, unlike federal income tax law, is not structured to fall on net gain, because the taxpayer cannot reduce taxable gain from sales or exchanges of land during the taxable year by any losses from other sales or exchanges of land during that year. Under federal income tax law, taxpayers are allowed to reduce gains from sales or exchanges of land (or other property) by losses from sales or exchanges of land (or other property). See sections 165, 1211, 1212, 1222, and 1231 of the Code and section 1.165-1(c)(3) of the regulations. A taxpayer could be required to pay the land gains tax even though under federal income tax law the taxpayer actually had a net loss from sales or exchanges of land for the taxable year. Thus, the land gains tax is not an income tax within the meaning of section 164(a)(3).

HOLDING

The Vermont land gains tax is a transfer tax and, therefore, is deductible under section 164(a) of the Code only to the extent that it is paid or accrued within a taxable year in carrying on a trade or business or in connection with an activity described in section 212 (relating to expenses for the production of income). See Rev. Rul. 65-313, 1965-2 C.B. 47, which also provides guidelines for the federal income tax treatment of transfer taxes imposed by state or local governments.

Qualification; benefits suspended during reemployment after retirement. Benefits provided under a pension plan will not fail to be definitely determinable merely because the plan provides that pension benefits shall be suspended for any period of time during which primary insurance benefits under the Social Security Act are discontinued because of employment after retirement date; Rev. Rul. 82 superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-122

The purpose of this revenue ruling is to restate the position of Rev. Rul. 82, 1953-1 C.B. 288, in view of the amendment of section 401(a) of the Internal Revenue Code by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, Pub. L. 93-406, 1974-3 C.B. 1.

The issue in Rev. Rul. 82 is whether a defined benefit plan which provides that pension benefits will be suspended for any period of time during which primary insurance payments under the Federal Social Security Act are discontinued because of reemployment with the employer after retirement will fail to satisfy the "definitely determinable benefits" requirement of section 1.401-1(b)(1)(i) of the Income Tax Regulations.

Section 1.401-1(b)(1)(i) of the regulations generally defines a pension plan, within the meaning of section 401(a) of the Code, as a plan established and maintained by an employer to provide definitely determinable benefits to its employees after retirement.

Pension benefits will not fail to be definitely determinable because a factor or condition, determinable only after retirement, is used to compute benefits in accordance with an express provision contained in the plan, if the factor or condition is not subject to the discretion of the employer.

In this case, the suspension of Social Security payments and thus, the suspension of pension benefits, is not within the discretion of the employer.

Accordingly, the pension benefits provided under the plan will not fail to be definitely determinable as required by section 1.401-1(b)(1)(i) of the regulations merely because of this suspension.

This revenue ruling considers only whether plan benefits are definitely determinable. It does not consider whether the plan provisions will result in a permissible forfeiture under section 411(a)(3)(B) of the Code or section 203(a)(3)(B) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act.

Rev. Rul. 82 is superseded because the position stated therein is restated under current law in this revenue ruling.

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE.—CHAPTER I, SUBCHAPTER A, PART 5.—TEMPORARY INCOME TAX REGULATIONS UNDER THE REVENUE ACT OF 1978

Corporations filing consolidated returns subject to at risk limitations under section 465

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Temporary regulations.

SUMMARY: This document contains temporary regulations relating to the at risk limitations as they affect an affiliated group that files a consolidated return. Changes to the applicable law were made by the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol 1) 1] and the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1]. The regulations would provide the public with the guidance needed to comply with the Acts and would affect certain closely-held corporations that join with their subsidiaries in filing a consolidated return.

DATES: The amendments are effective for taxable years for which the due date (without extensions) for filing returns is after March 14, 1980.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

This document contains temporary regulations relating to the at risk limitations under section 465, as amended by section 202 of the Revenue Act of 1978 with respect to the effect of those limitations on corporations that join with their subsidiaries in filing a consolidated return. The temporary regulations provided by this document will remain in effect until superseded by final regulations on this subject.

Under section 465, as amended by the Revenue Act of 1978, a corporation which meets the stock ownership test for a personal holding company may deduct losses attributable to any of its activities (other than the holding of real estate and equipment leasing) only to the extent that it has amounts at risk in the activity. In general, the stock ownership test is met if 50 percent in value of a corporation's outstanding stock is owned, directly or indirectly, by not more than five individuals. Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, section 465, as enacted by the Tax Reform Act of 1976, applied the at risk limitations only to corporations that were either personal holding companies or Subchapter S corporations. Under section 542, a corporation is a personal holding company if it satisfies two requirements, an adjusted ordinary gross income requirement and a stock ownership requirement. Section 202 of the Revenue Act of 1978 amended section 465 to apply the at risk limitations to all corporations that satisfy the stock ownership test, regardless of whether the adjusted gross income test is met. The Report of the House Ways and Means Committee states that, in the case of an affiliated group, revised section 465 is to apply to all corporations in the group if it applies to the common parent. H.R. Rep. No. 95-1445, 95th Cong., 2d Sess. 69 (1978) [1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 181].

The Treasury Department understands that taxpayers are actively considering a transaction or plan to avoid the at risk limitations. Under the plan, a corporation forms a subsidiary with a nominal capital investment, the subsidiary goes at risk in some activity, and the corporation uses losses of the subsidiary through the filing of a consolidated return. It is claimed that since the subsidiary is technically "at risk" in the activity, deductions are not barred by section 465.

If an activity is conducted directly by the parent without risk, section 465 disallows the corporation from deducting any loss from the activity. To permit a corporation to receive the tax benefit of such a loss, in a case in which the activity is conducted by a subsidiary (without any true economic risk) and the corporation and subsidiary file a consolidated return, would frustrate the congressional mandate embodied in section 465.

Under section 1502, the Secretary is delegated broad power to prescribe regulations in order that the tax liability of any affiliated group of corporations making a consolidated return may be clearly reflected and in order to prevent avoidance of such tax liability. Under the temporary regulations, if a parent meets the stock ownership test for a personal holding company, a subsidiary's loss from an activity to which section 465 applies will be allowed as a deduction on a consolidated return only to the extent that the parent is at risk in the activity of a subsidiary, under the principles of section 465, as of the close of the subsidiary's taxable year.

Under section 1503(a), consolidated return regulations must be adopted before the due date of the return for a taxable year, to be effective for that year. Therefore, to be effective for taxable years ending on or after December 31, 1979, it is impracticable to issue the regulations under the usual notice procedures. The temporary regulations will be effective for taxable years for which the due date (without extensions) for filing returns is after March 14, 1980.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of this regulation is Lawrence M. Axelrod of the Legislation and Regulations Division, Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations.

Part 5 of Title 26 of the Code of Federal Regulations is amended by adding a new § 5.1502-45 to read as follows:

§ 5.1502-45 Limitation on losses to amount at risk.

(a) In general.—(1) Scope. This section applies to a loss of any subsidiary if the common parent's stock meets the stock ownership requirement described in section 465(a)(1)(C).

(2) Limitation on use of losses. Except as provided in paragraph (a)(4) of this section, a loss from an activity of a subsidiary during a consolidated return year is includible in the computation of consolidated taxable income (or consolidated net operating loss) and consolidated capital gain net income (or consolidated net capital loss) only to the extent the loss does not exceed the amount that the parent is at risk in the activity at the close of that subsidiary's taxable year. In addition, the sum of a subsidiary's losses from all its activities is includible only to the extent that the parent is at risk in the subsidiary at the close of that year. Any excess may not be taken into account for the consolidated return year but will be treated as a deduction allocable to that activity of the subsidiary in the first succeeding taxable year.

(3) Amount parent is at risk in subsidiary's activity. The amount the parent is at risk in an activity of a subsidiary is the lesser of (i) the amount the parent is at risk in the subsidiary or (ii) the amount the subsidiary is at risk in the activity. These amounts are determined under paragraph (b) of this section and the principles of section 465. See section 465 and the regulations thereunder and the examples in paragraph (e) of this section.

(4) Excluded activities. The limitation on the use of losses in paragraph (a)(2) of this section does not apply to a loss attributable to an activity described in section 465(c)(3)(D).

(5) Substance over form. Any transaction or arrangement between members (or between a member and a person that is not a member) which does not cause the parent to be economically at risk in an activity of a subsidiary will be treated in accordance with the substance of the transaction or arrangement notwithstanding any other provision of this section.

(b) Rules for determining amount at risk—(1) Excluded amounts. The amount a parent is at risk in an activity of a subsidiary at the close of the subsidiary's taxable year does not include any amount which would not be taken into account under section 465 were the subsidiary not a separate corporation. Thus, for example, if the amount a parent is at risk in the activity of a subsidiary is attributable to nonrecourse financing, the amount at risk is not more than the fair market value of the property (other than the subsidiary's stock or debt or assets) pledged as security.

(2) Guarantees. If a parent guarantees a loan by a person other than a member to a subsidiary, the loan increases the amount the parent is at risk in the activity of the subsidiary.

(c) Application of section 465. This section applies in a manner consistent with the provisions of section 465. Thus, for example, the recapture of losses provided in section 465(e) applies if the amount the parent is at risk in the activity of a subsidiary is reduced below zero.

(d) Other consolidated return provisions unaffected. This section limits only the extent to which losses of a subsidiary may be used in a consolidated return year. This section does not apply for other purposes, such as § 1.1502-32 and § 1.1502-19, relating to investment in stock of a subsidiary and excess loss accounts, respectively. Thus, a loss which reduces a subsidiary's earnings and profits in a consolidated return year, but is disallowed as a deduction for the year by reason of this section, may nonetheless result in a negative adjustment to the basis of an owning member's stock in the subsidiary or create (or increase) an excess loss account.

(e) Examples. The provisions of this section may be illustrated by the examples in this paragraph (e). In each example, the stock ownership requirement of section 465(a)(1)(C) is met for the stock of the parent (P), and each affiliated group files a consolidated return on a calendar year basis and comprises only the members described.

Example (1). In 1979, P forms S with a contribution of $200 in exchange for all of S's stock. During the year, S borrows $400 from a commercial lender and P guarantees $100 of the loan. S uses $500 of its funds to acquire a motion picture film. S incurs a loss of $120 for the year with respect to the film. At the close of 1979, the amount P is at risk in S's activity is $300. If S has no gain or loss in 1980, and there are no contributions from or distributions to P, at the close of 1980 P's amount at risk in S's activity will be $180.

Example (2). P forms S-1 with a capital contribution of $1 on January 1, 1980. On February 1, 1980, S-1 borrows $100 with full recourse and contributes all $101 to its newly formed subsidiary S-2. S-2 uses the proceeds to explore for natural oil and gas resources. S-2 incurs neither gain nor loss from its explorations during the taxable year. As of December 31, 1980, P is at risk in the exploration activity of S-2 only to the extent of $1.

(f) Effective date. This section applies to consolidated return years ending on or after December 31, 1979.

There is a need for immediate guidance with respect to the provisions contained in this Treasury decision. For this reason, it is found impracticable to issue it with notice and public procedure under subsection (b) of section 553 of Title 5 of the United States Code or subject to the effective date limitation of subsection (d) of that section.

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in sections 1502 and 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (68A Stat. 637, 917; 26 U.S.C. 1502, 7805).

Section 2055.—Transfers for Public, Charitable, and Religious Uses

26 CFR 20.2055-2: Transfers not exclusively for charitable purposes.
(Also Sections 664, 7805; 1.664-1, 301.7805-1.)

Charitable remainder trusts; governing instrument. In order for the charitable interest in a testamentary charitable remainder trust to qualify for an estate tax charitable deduction, the governing instrument of the trust must provide that the obligation to pay the unitrust or annuity amount begins on the date of death, and for corrective payments in the case of an underpayment or overpayment of the amount determined to be payable; Rev. Rul. 72-395 modified.

Rev. Rul. 80-123

ISSUE

Must the governing instrument of a testamentary charitable remainder trust contain mandatory provisions conforming to section 1.664-1(a)(5) of the Income Tax Regulations in order for the charitable interest to qualify for an estate tax charitable deduction?

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 2055(e)(2)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code provides that if a remainder interest in property passes for a charitable purpose and an interest in the same property passes for a private purpose then, with certain limited exceptions, no charitable deduction is allowed for the charitable remainder interest unless the interest is in a trust which is a charitable remainder annuity trust or unitrust (described in section 664 of the Code) for a pooled income fund (described in section 642(c)(5)).

The transfer of a remainder interest in trust will qualify for an estate tax charitable deduction only if the interest is in a trust which is a charitable remainder trust at the date of death of the decedent and the charitable interest is susceptible of valuation on the date of the decedent's death. Section 20.2055-2(a) of the Estate Tax Regulations. Valuation of the charitable interest is based on the assumption that a specified unitrust or annuity amount will be distributed over a specified period of time determinable and beginning as of the date of death.

Section 1.664-1(a)(4) of the regulations provides that in order for a trust to qualify as a charitable remainder trust, it must satisfy the definition of and function exclusively as a charitable remainder trust from the creation of the trust. For purposes of section 664 the trust is deemed created at the earliest time that neither the grantor nor any other person is treated as owner of the trust corpus for income tax purposes, but in no event prior to the time that the trust is funded.

Notwithstanding the rule that for the tax exemption purposes of section 664 charitable remainder trusts are not deemed to be created until they are funded, section 1.664-1(a)(5) provides a special rule regarding the deemed creation date for federal estate tax purposes. This rule provides that for purposes of section 2055, the charitable remainder trusts are deemed to be created as of the date of death of the grantor, even though the trust is not yet funded and even though no payments will be made by the trust until the end of a reasonable period of estate administration at which time the trust will be funded. The rule allows a deferral in commencement of the annuity or unitrust payments provided the obligation to pay begins as of the date of death and local law or the governing instrument authorizes the delay. When the trust is fully funded, the trustee is required to pay out or receive whichever is appropriate, the difference between what, if anything, has been paid out and what should have been paid out during the interim between death and full funding.

The remainder of the section prescribes the method for retroactively determining the proper amounts payable, in the event the unitrust or annuity amount is deferred.

Rev. Rul. 72-395, 1972-2 C.B. 340, explains the requirements for charitable remainder trusts and sets forth sample provisions for drafting trust instruments. The requirements of section 1.664-1(a)(5) of the regulations are treated as an optional provision in sections 5.02 and 7.02 of Rev. Rul. 72-395.

The amount of the deduction allowed for charitable remainder trusts under section 2055(a) is computed as of the date of death. The computation assumes the trust is operative, and making payouts as of this date, and that any accretions to or invasions of trust corpus are being made as necessitated by the difference in the required payout and the actual income earned during this period.

In reality, these events do not occur until a later date when the trust is funded. State law governing the administration of trusts and estates normally would determine who is entitled to the income earned, during the period of administration of the estate, by the assets that will eventually fund the trusts. However, it is unlikely that application of state law will produce the same distributions, accretions and invasions presumed in the deduction computation.

In order to overcome these practical difficulties involved with testamentary trusts, the regulations created a special rule for estate tax purposes.

The provisions for corrective payments contained in section 1.664-1(a)(5) require, in effect, that the proper amount payable during the period of administration will be distributed, or any excess payment will be recovered. Thus, the provision ensures that the trust disbursements will be based on the same premises applied in the computation of the deduction. Applying these corrective payment rules makes the value of the charitable interest ascertainable and assures consistency in computing the amount of the deduction and the actual payments of the annuity or unitrust amounts. Deeming the trust to be created on the date of death satisfies the requirement of section 2055 that the trust be qualified as of the date of death.

Not only must a testamentary trust contain a deferral provision for purposes of section 2055 of the Code, but it also must contain a deferral provision for purposes of qualification as a charitable remainder trust under section 664 of the Code. If the deferral provision of section 1.664-1(a)(5) of the regulations is not included in the governing instrument of the trust, then, as explained above, no charitable deduction will be allowable, and, under section 1.664-1(a)(1)(iii)(a) of the regulations, the trust will not meet the definition of a charitable remainder trust.

HOLDING

A governing instrument of a testamentary charitable remainder trust must contain mandatory provisions conforming to section 1.664-1(a)(5) of the regulations in order for the charitable interest to qualify for an estate tax charitable deduction; that is, the governing instrument must provide that the obligation to pay the unitrust or annuity amount begins on the date of death, and for corrective payments in the case of an underpayment or overpayment of the annuity or unitrust amount determined to be payable.

Rev. Rul. 72-395 is hereby modified to the extent that it implies that the provisions contained in section 1.664-1(a)(5) of the regulations are optional for testamentary charitable remainder trusts.

Pursuant to the authority contained in section 7805(b), the principles of this revenue ruling apply only in the case of transfers to testamentary charitable remainder trusts by decedents dying after May 5, 1980 (the date this revenue ruling appeared in the I.R.B.) except that they do not apply in the case of transfers under the terms of wills executed on or before May 5, 1980: (a) If the decedent dies after May 5, 1980, but before May 5, 1981, without having amended any dispositive provision of this will after May 5, 1980, by codicil or otherwise; (b) If the decedent dies after May 5, 1980, and at no time after that date had the right to change the portions of the will which pertain to the passing of the property to, or for the use of an organization described in section 2055(a); or (c) If no dispositive provision of the will is amended by the decedent, by codicil or otherwise, after May 5, 1980, and before May 5, 1981, and the decedent is on May 5, 1981, and at all times thereafter under a mental disability (as defined in section 1.642(c)-2(b)(3)(ii) of the Income Tax Regulations) to amend the will by codicil or otherwise.

ISSUE

Are payments made by a company to its eligible employees under its preretirement leave benefit plan wages under sections 3121(a), 3306(b), and 3401(a) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The company's preretirement leave benefit plan, which arose from a collective bargaining agreement with its employees' union, was adopted to offset layoffs that ordinarily resulted from the periodic slack seasons incurred by the company. By scheduling its older more experienced employees on leave at times when there is a reduced need for employees, the company is able to retain the services of short service employees who might otherwise be laid off. An additional purpose of the plan is to introduce and accustom eligible employees to permanent retirement status on a gradual basis.

To be entitled to benefits under the plan, an employee must have 30 years of service with the company. Eligible employees are entitled to 1 to 4 weeks of benefits per year, according to their age. The leave must be taken in full, consecutive weeks and any unused portion may not be accrued.

Eligible employees who desire to use the leave must apply by a prescribed date each year. The company schedules the leave after taking into account the employees' preferences, the need for their services at the times requested, and the seniority of other employees making similar applications. The leave is guaranteed whether or not the actual need for a layoff ever occurs, and if any employee dies before or while taking preretirement leave that has been scheduled, the benefits are paid to the estate. Benefits paid to employees under the plan equal about two-thirds of their regular salaries.

The union agreed to an offset of the preretirement leave plan payments against contributions required to be made by the company to its supplemental unemployment benefit plan trust account under its collective bargaining agreement with the union. The company uses that account to pay supplemental unemployment benefits to its employees who are laid off. The preretirement leave benefit plan is not a part of the supplemental unemployment benefit plan. Supplemental unemployment benefits are not wages under sections 3121(a) and 3306(b) of the Code. They are, however, treated as wages for purposes of federal income tax withholding under section 3402(o).

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Sections 3121(a) and 3306(b) of the Code provide that "wages" means all remuneration for employment. Section 3401(a) contains a similar definition.

Rev. Rul. 75-461, 1975-2 C.B. 394, holds that payments to employees under a negotiated preretirement leave benefit plan based on years of employee service and age, and established to introduce and accustom eligible employees to permanent retirement gradually, are wages under sections 3121(a), 3306(b), and 3401(a) of the Code. Benefits were about two-thirds of the employee's regular weekly wages. The payments were not made on account of retirement or sickness or accident disability and employees were permitted to choose whether to return to active status or retire permanently at the end of the leave period. The revenue ruling does not state the effect of the plan's funding on the company's supplemental unemployment benefit plan.

Rev. Rul. 57-37, 1957-1 C.B. 18, holds that contributions conveying fully vested and nonforfeitable interests made by an employer into separate and independently controlled trusts for each employee, where each trust is created pursuant to a collective bargaining agreement for the purpose of furnishing unemployment and certain other benefits to eligible employees and paying over the balance due of such benefits to the employee upon termination of employment or retirement or to the employee's estate upon death, are wages under sections 3121(a), 3306(b), and 3401(a) of the Code.

Rev. Rul. 56-249, 1956-1 C.B. 488, holds that benefits paid to individuals by trustees of a trust created pursuant to the provisions of a supplemental unemployment benefit plan are not wages under sections 3121(a), 3306(b), and 3401(a) of the Code. The benefits are paid only to unemployed former employees of the company who are on layoff and no employee has any right, title, or interest in or to any asset of the fund or any company contributions to the fund until such time as the employee is on layoff by reason of a reduction in force or the discontinuance of a plant or operation.

Rev. Rul. 60-330, 1960-2 C.B. 46, which amplifies Rev. Rul. 56-249, holds that supplemental unemployment benefit payments made by an employer directly to qualifying former employees pursuant to the provisions of a supplemental unemployment benefit plan, but in all other material respects similar to the plan described in Rev. Rul. 56-249, are not wages under sections 3121(a), 3306(b), and 3401(a) of the Code.

In order for a payment to qualify as a supplemental unemployment benefit payment under Rev. Rul. 56-249 and Rev. Rul. 60-330, the employee must have no right, title, or interest in the payment or the company contribution to provide the payment until the employee is laid off, and the payment must be made for a layoff that is involuntary on the part of the employee. See section 3402(o)(2)(A) of the Code, which defines supplemental unemployment compensation benefits for the purpose of treating them as wages subject to income tax withholding, and section 501(c)(17)(D)(i), which defines the benefits for purposes of the exemption from federal income tax of trusts paying them. Both Code sections provide that the payment must be based on the involuntary separation of an employee from the employment of the employer only when such separation is one resulting directly from a reduction in force, the discontinuance of a plant or operation, or other similar condition.

In this case, the preretirement leave benefits do not constitute supplemental unemployment compensation benefits since benefits are provided even where there has been no layoff because of periodic slack seasons, and the benefits are guaranteed at the time the leave is scheduled. The fact that funding of the preretirement leave plan reduced the company's supplemental unemployment benefit plan contribution does not convert the preretirement leave payments to supplemental unemployment benefit payments.

HOLDING

Payments made to eligible employees under the company's preretirement leave benefit plan are wages under sections 3121(a), 3306(b), and 3401(a) of the Code.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE, CHAPTER I, SUBTITLE C, PART 31.—EMPLOYMENT TAXES APPLICABLE ON AND AFTER JANUARY 1, 1955; PART 37.—TEMPORARY EMPLOYMENT TAX REGULATIONS UNDER THE FOREIGN EARNED INCOME ACT OF 1978

Wage withholding on remuneration for which a corresponding deduction is allowable under section 913

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Adoption of final regulations and deletion of temporary regulations.

SUMMARY: This document provides final Employment Tax Regulations and deletes temporary regulations, relating to wage withholding on remuneration for which a corresponding deduction is allowable under section 913 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. Changes to the applicable tax law were made by the Foreign Earned Income Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-615, 1978-2 C.B. 415]. These regulations provide necessary guidance to employers of persons living abroad for compliance with the law.

DATE: This Treasury decision is effective on April 14, 1980. However, if an employer has determined wages of employees and withheld on a basis consistent with the rules contained in this Treasury decision for some period between January 1, 1979 and this effective date, that practice for that period will not be questioned by the Internal Revenue Service.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On January 4, 1979, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Employment Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 31) under section 3401(a)(18) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (44 FR 1110). The amendments were proposed to conform the regulations to section 207(a) of the Foreign Earned Income Act of 1978 (92 Stat. 3097, 3108). A public hearing was held on August 28, 1979. After consideration of all comments regarding the proposed amendments, this Treasury decision adopts amendments, as set forth in full below, to the Employment Tax Regulations.

In addition, on January 4, 1979, the Federal Register published Temporary Employment Tax Regulations under the Foreign Earned Income Act of 1978 (26 CFR Part 37) relating to section 3401(a)(18) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (44 FR 1110). These temporary regulations, which contained the same rules as the proposed amendments to the Employment Tax Regulations, are deleted by this Treasury decision.

EXPLANATION OF PROVISION

Section 3401(a)(18) of the Code provides, for purposes of income tax withholding, that the term "wages" does not include remuneration paid to, or on behalf of, an employee if at the time of the payment it is reasonable to believe that a corresponding deduction is allowable under section 913 of the Code (relating to deduction for certain expenses of living abroad).

Several comments received from employers requested that the manner and timing of payments of certain forms of remuneration be considered in the further development of the regulation. Specifically, it was requested that payments of remuneration not regularly made with respect to payroll periods be exempted from the proration requirement of § 31.3401(a)(18)-1(a)(2). That provision has been accordingly revised to provide that these payments (for which a corresponding deduction must be allowable under section 913) do not constitute wages and are not subject to (or included in) the application of the proration requirement. With respect to other payments, however, the proration formula of § 31.3401(a)(18)-1(a)(2) applies in determining the portion of each payment which does not constitute wages. Section 31.3401(a)(18)-1(b) provides acceptable forms for written statements which employees may furnish to employers and upon which employers may rely in determining whether the employee will meet the bona fide foreign residency or physical presence tests of section 913. Finally, § 31.3401(a)(18)-1(c) provides an acceptable form for a written statement by the employee relating to the anticipated amount of the employee's deduction under section 913 for the year.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is Mary E. Dean of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

Accordingly, 26 CFR Part 31 is amended by adding immediately after § 31.3401(a)(16)-1 a new § 31.3401(a)(18)-1 to read as follows and 26 CFR Part 37 is deleted.

§ 31.3401(a)(18)-1 Remuneration for which a corresponding deduction is allowable under section 913.

(a) General rule—(1) In general. Remuneration paid for services performed outside the United States for an employer (other than the United States or any agency thereof) by a citizen or resident of the United States does not constitute wages and hence is not subject to withholding to the extent that, at the time of the payment, it is reasonable to believe that a corresponding deduction is allowable under section 913, relating to the deduction for certain expenses of living abroad. The part of a payment of remuneration which does not constitute wages subject to withholding under this section is determined under paragraph (a)(2) of this section. The reasonable belief may be based upon information derived from the employee or from other sources which is reasonably sufficient to induce this belief, even though the information may ultimately be insufficient to establish that a corresponding deduction is allowable under section 913. For rules relating to reasonable belief of an employer as to the availability to an employee of a section 913 deduction, see paragraph (b) of this section. For rules relating to reasonable belief of an employer as to the anticipated amount of section 913 deduction allowable to an employee, see paragraph (c) of this section.

(2) Amount of reduction in wages subject to withholding—(i) Irregular payments. Any portion of a payment of remuneration to or on the behalf of an employee which is not regularly made with respect to payroll periods does not constitute wages to the extent that, at the time of the payment, it is reasonable to believe that a corresponding deduction is allowable to the employee under section 913. Examples of payments of remuneration which may be subject to this paragraph (a)(2)(i) include lump sum payments to a school for qualified schooling expenses and reimbursement in a lump sum to the employee of amounts paid by the employee for qualified home leave travel expenses.

(ii) Other payments. In addition to any reduction in wages determined under paragraph (a)(2)(i) of this section, a payment of remuneration made in a period during which the employee is expected to qualify for the section 913 deduction is further reduced by the following amount:

$$\frac{\text{Amount of sec. 913 deduction} \quad \text{(anticipated for the taxable year and not subject to paragraph (a)(2)(i))}}{\text{Total payment of remuneration} \quad \text{(anticipated for the portion of the year during which the taxpayer is expected to qualify for the section 913 deduction and not excluded from wages under paragraph (a)(2)(i))}} \times \text{The subject payment of remuneration (after reduction in wages provided in paragraph (a)(2)(i))}$$

The remaining part of the payment of remuneration is wages and hence is subject to withholding, unless excluded under another provision of section 3401(a). For the purpose of applying this proration under this paragraph (a)(2)(ii), an employer is not required to ascertain or take account of information with respect to amounts of remuneration received by the employee from any other source. The proration provided by this paragraph (a)(2)(ii) may be illustrated by the following examples:

Example (1). Employee A, a calendar year taxpayer, reasonably expects to receive remuneration of $48,000 from employer B during 1980. A expects to qualify for the section 913 deduction for the entire year. No reduction in wages is allowed pursuant to paragraph (a)(2)(i). A anticipates that A's section 913 deduction for 1980 will be $12,000. A's remuneration for January 1980 is $4,000. The amount of this payment of remuneration which does not constitute wages is $1,000, i.e., ($12,000/$48,000 × $4,000). The remaining part of the remuneration, $3,000, is wages and is subject to withholding, unless excluded under another provision of section 3401(a).

Example (2). Employee A, a calendar year taxpayer, reasonably expected on January 1, 1980, to receive remuneration of $48,000 from employer B during 1980. A anticipated that A's section 913 deduction for 1980 would amount to $12,000. No reduction in wages is allowed pursuant to paragraph (a)(2)(i). For each of the first 6 months of 1980, A's remuneration was $4,000, and $1,000 of this remuneration did not constitute wages. On July 1, 1980, A first realizes that the anticipation of a $12,000 deduction under section 913 for 1980 was incorrect, and that instead A may reasonably expect that the section 913 deduction for 1980 will be $6,000. A's remuneration for July, 1980, is $4,000. The amount of this payment of remuneration which does not constitute wages is $500, i.e., ($6,000/$48,000 × $4,000). The remaining part of the remuneration, $3,500, is wages and is subject to withholding, unless excluded under another provision of section 3401(a).

Example (3). Assume the same facts as in Example (1) except that on July 1, 1980, A's employer first decides to reimburse employee A for one-half of A's deduction anticipated under section 913 for 1980. The employer immediately makes an irregular payment of $6,000 to A which represents one-half of A's $12,000 of deduction anticipated under section 913 for 1980. Pursuant to paragraph (a)(2)(i) the full amount ($6,000) of the irregular payment by the employer does not constitute wages. A's other remuneration for July, 1980, of $4,000 consists of $500 which do not constitute wages and $3,500 which do constitute wages. This determination is made in the manner set forth in example (2).

(b) Availability of section 913 deduction—(1) In general. A deduction is allowable under section 913 only if an employee satisfies the requirements of section 913(a)(1) or (2), relating, respectively, to bona fide residence of a United States citizen in a foreign country and to physical presence of a United States citizen or resident in a foreign country. All or a portion of a payment of remuneration may be excluded from wages under this section only if the employer reasonably believes that the employee-recipient of the payment will meet the residence requirement of section 913(a)(1) or the presence requirement of section 913(a)(2).

(2) Statement of residence in a foreign country. (i) In the absence of cause for a reasonable belief to the contrary, the employer may presume that an employee will satisfy the residence requirement of section 913(a)(1) during the taxable year, or applicable portion thereof, for which the employee properly furnishes the employer the following statement or a statement with substantially the same information:

Statement for claiming benefits of section 913(a)(1) for calendar year ________ or fiscal year beginning ____________________ and ending ____________________.

I am a citizen of the United States. I have been a bona fide resident of the following foreign country or countries namely, ____________________, for an uninterrupted period which began on ____________________, 19____. I expect to remain a bona fide resident of a foreign country until the end of the taxable year 19____ or, if not until the end of the taxable year, until ____________ ____________, 19____.

On the basis of the facts in my case, I have good reason to believe that, with respect to the above period of foreign residence falling within the taxable year, I will satisfy the bona fide foreign residence requirement prescribed by section 913(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and qualify for the deduction allowed by section 913.

In the event I become disqualified for the deduction provided by section 913(a) for all or part of the above period of foreign residence falling within the taxable year, I will immediately notify my employer, and indicate the portion of the taxable year for which I qualify for the deduction under section 913.

I declare under the penalties of perjury that this statement has been examined by me and to the best of my knowledge and belief is true and correct.

(ii) If the employer was entitled to presume for the taxable year immediately preceding an employee's current taxable year that the employee was a bona fide resident of a foreign country or countries during the entire preceding taxable year and the employee is residing in a foreign country on the first day of the current taxable year, in the absence of cause for a reasonable belief to the contrary and without obtaining from the employee the statement prescribed in paragraph (b)(2)(i), the employer may presume that the employee will be a bona fide resident of a foreign country or countries in the current taxable year.

(3) Statement of presence in a foreign country. In the absence of cause for a reasonable belief to the contrary, the employer may presume that an employee will satisfy the presence requirement of section 913(a)(2) with respect to the taxable year, or applicable portion thereof, for which the employee furnishes the following statement or a statement with substantially the same information:

Statement for claiming benefits of section 913(a)(2) for calendar year ________ or fiscal year beginning ____________________ and ending ____________________.

I am a citizen or resident of the United States.

Except for occasional absences not disqualifying me for the benefit of section 913(a)(2), I expect to be present in the following foreign countries, namely, ________ ____________, for an 18 month period which includes the entire taxable year ________ or, if not the entire year, the portion of the taxable year beginning on ____________________, 19____, and ending on ____________________, 19____.

On the basis of the facts in my case I have good reason to believe that, during the above period of presence in a foreign country falling within the taxable year, I will satisfy the 510 full-day requirement prescribed by section 913(a)(2).

In the event I become disqualified for the deduction provided by section 913(a)(2) for all or part of the above period of presence in a foreign country or countries falling within the taxable year, I will immediately notify my employer, indicating the portion, if any, of the taxable year for which I qualify for the deduction under section 913.

I declare under the penalties of perjury that this statement has been examined by me and to the best of my knowledge and belief is true and correct.

(c) Amount of section 913 deduction—(1) In general. Section 913(a) allows a deduction for certain expenses of living abroad which is the sum of the amounts qualifying under section 913(b). Remuneration will be excluded from wages under this section only if the employer has reasonable evidence that the amount excluded does not exceed the anticipated amount of the employee's deduction allowable under section 913 for the taxable year.

(2) Statement of amount of section 913 deduction. In the absence of cause for a reasonable belief to the contrary, the employer may presume that the anticipated deduction allowable under section 913 for a taxable year is correctly determined when the employee furnishes his employer a statement, prepared by the employee or on behalf of the employee by the employer or another person, in substantially the following form:

Statement of anticipated deduction under section 913 for calendar year ________ or fiscal year beginning ________________ and ending ________________.

I anticipate that I will qualify for a deduction under section 913 of the following amounts:

(1) Qualified cost-of-living differential ________________ _____
(2) Qualified housing expenses ___ _____
(3) Qualified schooling expenses _ _____
(4) Qualified home leave travel expenses ____________ _____
(5) Qualified hardship area deduction ________________ _____

Total section 913 deduction anticipated ________________ _____

I understand that the total entered above plus the total reported on any other statements outstanding with other employers should not exceed my anticipated deduction under section 913 for the year.

I understand that the deduction allowed by section 913 shall not exceed my earned income from sources outside the United States for the portion of the taxable year in which my tax home is in a foreign country, reduced by the sum of—

(a) Any portion of that earned income which is excluded as compensation for meals and lodging under section 119, and

(b) Deductions properly allocable to that earned income other than the deduction allowed by section 913.

I declare under the penalties of perjury that this statement has been examined by me and to the best of my knowledge and belief is true and correct.

(3) New statement. The employee may furnish a new statement at any time during the taxable year when the employee reasonably anticipates that the amount of the deduction which will be allowable under section 913 has changed from the previous statement.

Rev. Rul. 80-125

ISSUE

How should the manufacturers excise tax on coal be computed where coal from a surface mine is blended during cleaning with coal from an underground mine and the resulting product is sold by the producer?

FACTS

Situation 1. A producer mines and during the cleaning operation blends two tons of surface mined coal with two tons of underground mined coal to produce two tons of clean coal which is marketable. The clean coal is composed of 50 percent surface mined coal and 50 percent underground mined coal because the percentage of waste material in each type was 50 percent. The cleaned coal is sold for $30 per ton. If the surface mined coal and underground mined coal had been cleaned and sold separately, the fair market prices per ton would have been $20 and $25 respectively.

Situation 2. A producer mines and blends during the cleaning operation three tons of surface mined coal with one ton of underground mined coal to produce three tons of clean coal that is marketable. The clean coal product sells for $40 per ton. It is not routinely determinable as to what portion of the end product is surface mined coal and what portion is underground mined coal because the quality of each is constantly changing.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4121 of the Internal Revenue Code imposes a tax on coal sold by the producer at the rate of 50 cents per ton for underground mined coal and 25 cents per ton for surface mined coal, but in each case limited to 2 percent of the sale price per ton. Section 139.4121-1 of the Temporary Regulations provides that the sales price and tonnage determination is made at the point of sale, namely f.o.b. mine, or f.o.b. cleaning plant if cleaned before sale. The regulations further provide that if a sale includes a portion of a ton, the tax is applied proportionately.

The tax imposed by section 4121 of the Code is based on the amount of coal sold by the producer. Thus, if two tons of coal are actually sold by the producer in Situation 1 or three tons of coal are actually sold by the producer in Situation 2, then the tax is computed on the amount sold regardless of the amount that could have been sold if there been no blending and cleaning process. If the amounts of underground mined and surface mined coal found in the clean coal cannot be determined by use of waste factors or recovery factors then the amount of each type of coal can be estimated on the ratio of the original tonnage input of each type of coal.

Under the temporary regulations, the amount of blended cleaned coal subject to tax and the sales price for such coal is determined at the point of sale of the blended cleaned coal. The computation of tax on such sale is determined without regard to the fair market values of the coals that were used to produce the blend.

HOLDING

Situation 1. Because the proportion of surface mined coal and underground mined coal in the blended, cleaned product is determinable, the tax is based on the proportion of each type of coal contained in the end product and the selling price of the coal sold is taken into account for purposes of the 2 percent limitation. Thus, the two tons of cleaned coal sold consist of one ton of surface coal and one ton of underground coal. The tax is computed as follows:

Surface coal—1 ton at
25 cents per ton = $0.25
Underground coal—1 ton at 50 cents per ton = $0.50
Tax on 2 tons $0.75

The tax is limited by statute to 2 percent of the selling price. In this situation, however, 2 percent of the sale price of $60.00 for 2 tons (at $30 per ton) is $1.20, which is more than the tax computed above at the tonnage rate. Therefore, the tax payable is $0.75.

Situation 2. Because the proportion of surface mined coal and underground mined coal in the blended product is not determinable, the ratio of the surface mined coal and underground mined coal in the original input is used to compute the tax. Thus, ¾ of the three tons of clean coal sold (2¼ tons) is treated as surface mined coal and ¼ of three tons (¾ ton) is treated as underground mined coal. Based on these figures, the tax is computed as follows:

Surface coal—2¼ tons
at 25 cents per ton = $0.5625
Underground coal—¾ ton
at 50 cents per ton = $0.3750
Tax on 3 tons $0.9375

In this situation, 2 percent of the sales price of $120.00 for 3 tons (at $40 per ton) is $2.40. Therefore, as in Situation 1, the 2 percent statutory limitation does not apply, and the tax payable is $0.9375.

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE.—CHAPTER I, SUBCHAPTER D, PART 48.—MANUFACTURERS AND RETAILERS EXCISE TAXES; PART 154.—TEMPORARY REGULATIONS IN CONNECTION WITH THE AIRPORT AND AIRWAY REVENUE ACT OF 1970

Uniform maximum period for exemption certificates

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Final Regulations.

These regulations provide necessary guidance to the public for compliance with the law, and they affect all persons required to pay retailers or manufacturers excise taxes.

DATE: The regulations are effective for sales made after December 31, 1958.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

This Treasury decision amends §§ 48.4041-9, 48.4073-3, 48.4083-1, 48.4091-3-4, 6, 48.4093-1, and 154.1-1 of the regulations to extend the maximum duration of blanket exemption certificates from 4 calendar quarters to 12 calendar quarters. The certificates are used by purchasers buying otherwise taxable items for exempt purposes and on a regular basis from a single supplier. The certificates are required before a tax-free purchase can be made. Treasury Decision 7536, 1978-1 C.B. 317, extended the maximum period from 4 to 12 calendar quarters for some, but not all, exemption certificates. These regulations will create a uniform period for all such certificates. For similar reasons, § 48.4221-6(c) is amended to permit notification for a period not to exceed 12 calendar quarters. Because this regulation is nonsubstantive and liberalizes a procedural requirement in favor of taxpayers, it is found unnecessary to issue this Treasury decision with notice and public procedure under subsection (b) of section 553 of Title 5 of the United States Code or subject to the effective date limitation of subsection (d) of that section. For the same reasons, this regulation is not a significant regulation under paragraph 8 of the Treasury Directive appearing in the Federal Register for November 8, 1978 (43 FR 52120).

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author of these regulations is Annie R. Alexander of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulation, both on matters of substance and style.

The following amendments to 26 CFR Parts 48 and 154 are adopted:

Section 48.4221-6(c) is amended by deleting the period at the end of the next to the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "except that a single notification containing the information described in this paragraph may cover all sales by the seller to the purchaser made during a designated period not to exceed 12 successive calendar quarters.".

AGENCY: Department of the Treasury.

ACTION: Proclamation.

SUMMARY: This proclamation announces the percentage to be used to compute the income tax liability of foreign corporations carrying on life insurance business in the United States.

EFFECTIVE DATE: March 15, 1980.

FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: Mr. Hudson Milner, Office of Tax Analysis, U.S. Treasury Department, Washington, D.C. 20220, (202-566-2705), not a toll free call.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: This proclamation, issued each year by the Secretary of the Treasury, announces the percentage to be used to compute the income tax liability of foreign corporations carrying on life insurance business in the United States.

Proclamation

For purposes of computing the 1979 income tax of foreign corporations carrying on a life insurance business, a percentage of 13.9 shall be used in determining the "minimum figure" under section 819. The same percentage shall be used for purposes of computing the estimated tax and the installment payments of estimated tax for the taxable year 1980. No additions to tax shall be made because of any underpayment of estimated tax for the taxable year 1980 which results solely from the use of this percentage.

This proclamation is issued without notice and public procedure because the public cannot effectively participate in the determination of the percentage. It is computed from information contained in income tax returns that are not open to the public. The proclamation was not published prior to its effective date because the percentage is computed on the basis of data which was not then available.

DONALD C. LUBICK,
Assistant Secretary
(Tax Policy).

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on Subpart A, Tax Conventions and related Treasury Decisions and Revenue Rulings; Subpart B, Legislation and related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of Revenue Rulings, Revenue Procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical Indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

Private foundation; self-dealing; donation of life insurance policy. A disqualified person donated a life insurance policy to a private foundation. The policy was subject to an outstanding loan made to the donor within the 10-year period ending on the date of the donation that was not insignificant in relation to the value of the policy. The donation was an act of self-dealing.

Rev. Rul. 80-133, page 13.

Private foundation; jeopardizing investment; donation of life insurance policy. A whole-life insurance policy that was subject to a loan to the donor-insured was donated to a private foundation. The face value of the policy, less any outstanding loan principal or interest, was payable to the donee upon the donor's death. The combined interest and premium payments made by the donee over the life expectancy of the donor would exceed the amount it would receive under the policy and were, therefore, jeopardizing investments.

Part I. Rulings and Decisions Under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954

Section 72.—Annuities; Certain Proceeds of Endowment and Life Insurance Contracts

26 CFR 1.72-7: Adjustment in investment where a contract contains a refund feature.

Annuities; civil service; disability; survivors' benefits; refund factor. The "approximate method" set forth in Rev. Rul. 60-325 may be used in determining the refund factor to be applied in computing the adjusted investment, under section 72(c)(2) of the Code, for annuities payable to the spouse and child of a federal employee who died while in a disability retirement status before having elected to report annuity payments under section 72 (b) or (d) and before otherwise having attained such employee's annuity starting date for purposes of section 72; Rev. Rul. 71-89 superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-126

The purpose of this revenue ruling is to restate, under current law, Rev. Rul. 71-89, 1971-1 C.B. 33.

The issue presented in Rev. Rul. 71-89 is whether the "approximate method" set forth in Rev. Rul. 60-325 may be used to compute the adjusted investment under section 72(c)(2) of the Internal Revenue Code for annuities paid to survivors of a Federal employee who died while in a disability retirement status before reaching voluntary retirement age, which was such an employee's annuity starting date under prior law.

Section 72(c)(2) of the Code provides, in part, that if (a) the expected return under the contract depends in whole or in part on the life expectancy of one or more individuals, (b) the contract provides for payments to be made to a beneficiary (or to the estate of an annuitant) on or after the death of the annuitant or annuitants; and (c) such payments are in the nature of a refund of the consideration paid, then the value (computed without discount for interest) of such payments on the annuity starting date shall be subtracted from the investment in the contract. Such value is to be computed in accordance with actuarial tables prescribed by the Secretary.

Rev. Rul. 60-325, 1960-2 C.B. 23, involves the determination of the refund factor in a case in which the widow and child of a Federal employee are receiving benefits from the United States Civil Service Retirement and Disability Fund as a result of the employee's death while still in the service. That revenue ruling states that the determination of the adjustment for the refund feature, using the same method as that used in computing the multiple factors shown in Table III of section 1.72-9 of the Income Tax Regulations, requires a complicated actuarial calculation that cannot be made by using only the tables published in the regulations. However, Rev. Rul. 60-325 provides for the use of an acceptable approximate method that would produce reasonable results in such cases.

Under current law, if a federal employee dies while in a disability retirement status before having elected to report his or her annuity payments under section 72(b) or (d) of the Code and before otherwise having attained such employee's annuity starting date for purposes of section 72, the approximate method set forth in Rev. Rul. 60-325 may be used in determining the refund factor to be applied in computing the adjusted investment, under section 72(c)(2), for the annuities payable to the spouse and child of the federal employee. The employee's annuity starting date is determined under sections 72 and 105 and the regulations thereunder.

Rev. Rul. 71-89 is superseded because the position stated therein is updated and restated, under current law, in this revenue ruling.

Section 167.—Depreciation

26 CFR 1.167(a)-11: Depreciation based on class lives and asset depreciation ranges for property placed in service after December 31, 1970.

Depreciation; CLADR; shipping containers. Shipping containers that are designed and regularly used to transport cargo on the highway on specially designed trailers and to transport cargo by water on specially designed cargo ships are included in CLADR asset guideline class 00.27.

Rev. Rul. 80-127

ISSUE

What is the proper classification under the Class Life Asset Depreciation Range (CLADR) System of the shipping containers described below?

FACTS

The taxpayer is engaged in the business of leasing various types of equipment. The taxpayer entered into a lease agreement with a domestic steamship line for the rental of shipping containers to be used in the lessee's business. The primary business of the lessee is the operation of a fleet of vessels that provide water transportation of freight between the United States and various international ports.

The containers are designed for the transport of cargo by, and interchange between, two modes of transport. These modes are highway, on specially designed trailers, and marine, in the holds of specially designed container ships.

The lessee's customers load the containers at their own facilities, mount the containers on specially designed trailers, and haul them over the road to the lessee's docks. At the docks, the containers are removed from the trailer, loaded on a ship, and carried to a foreign port. From there, the containers may be remounted on a trailer and hauled over the road to their destinations or unloaded on the pier.

The containers are specifically designed to be used with trailers. Although the containers are carried on oceangoing vessels for the majority of their useful lives, they are regularly used in conjunction with special trailers.

The taxpayer elected to adopt the CLADR System under section 1.167(a)-11 of the Income Tax Regulations for the years in which the containers were placed in service.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 1.167(a)-11(a)(1) of the regulations provides an asset depreciation range and class life system for determining the reasonable allowance for depreciation of designated classes of assets placed in service after December 31, 1970.

Section 1.167(a)-11(b)(4)(ii) of the regulations provides that the asset guideline classes and the asset guideline periods, and the asset depreciation ranges determined from such periods, in effect for taxable years ending before the effective date of the first supplemental asset guideline classes, asset guideline periods, the asset depreciation ranges, established pursuant to this section are set forth in Rev. Proc. 72-10, 1972-1 C.B. 721. Rev. Proc. 72-10 has been superseded by Rev. Proc. 77-10, 1977-1 C.B. 548.

Section 1.167(a)-11(e)(3)(iii) of the regulations provides that, in the case of leased property, unless there is an asset guideline class in effect for lessors of that property, the asset guideline class for that property shall be determined as if the property were owned by the lessee. However, in the case of an asset guideline class based upon the type of property (such as trucks or railroad cars) as distinguished from the activity in which used, the property shall be classified without regard to the activity of the lessee.

Rev. Proc. 77-10 provides asset depreciation periods for various guideline classes of assets. Classes with a 00 prefix prescribe asset guideline periods and asset guideline ranges for specific depreciable assets regardless of the business activity in which they are used. Class 00.27 prescribes the period and range for trailers and trailer-mounted containers.

Class 44.0, Water Transportation, prescribes the period and range for assets used in the commercial and contract carrying of freight and passengers by water. However, transportation assets included in classes with a 00.2 prefix are specifically excluded from class 44.0.

Pursuant to section 1.167(a)-11(b)(4)(iii)(b) of the regulations, the containers would be includable in class 44.0 unless they are properly includable in class 00.27. The exception occurs because class 00.27 is for depreciable assets regardless of the business activity in which they are used, and they are specifically excluded from class 44.0. The question is, therefore, whether the containers may be properly classified as trailer-mounted containers included in class 00.27.

The containers are mounted on the trailers as a regular part of their normal use and are specially designed to be used with the trailers. Therefore, the containers fall directly within the "trailer-mounted container" language of class 00.27, notwithstanding that the containers are used, for the majority of their useful lives, in the holds of container ships.

However, class 00.27 does not include carrier-container semi-trailers or trailer mounted containers such as those described in Rev. Rul. 73-231, 1973-1 C.B. 427, which are normally used only within the confines of railroad yards, port areas, or similar facilities. Although containers of this type are capable of being used on the highway, such use is incidental since the single-axle design combined with the heavy weight of these containers results in an axle weight that is illegal on the public highways in most states.

HOLDING

The leased shipping containers, designed for use over the road on specially designed trailers and in the holds of container ships, are properly included in CLADR asset guideline class 00.27. The result would be the same if the containers were owned by the shipping company.

Section 402.—Taxability of Beneficiary of Employees' Trust

26 CFR 1.402(a)-1: Taxability of beneficiary under a trust which meets the requirements of section 401(a).

Distribution; two employers; single trust. An employee of two corporate employers, whose separate qualified pension plans were funded by contributions to a single trust, terminated employment with one of the employers. A distribution representing the balance to the employee's credit under the pension plan of the ex-employer was a lump-sum distribution within the meaning of section 402(e)(4)(A) of the Code. Rev. Rul. 66-16 superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-128

The purpose of this revenue ruling is to restate the position in Rev. Rul. 66-16, 1966-1 C.B. 88, in view of the enactment of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, Pub. L. 93-406, 1974-3 C.B. 1.

The issue presented in Rev. Rul. 66-16 is whether the distribution described below is a lump-sum distribution within the meaning of section 402(e)(4)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code.

An employee, on account of separation from the service of one of two corporate employers whose separate qualified employee benefit plans are funded by contributions to a single trust, received a distribution representing the balance to the employee's credit from the plan of the one employer while continuing employment with the second employer. Each plan provides a separate accrued benefit for the employee.

A lump-sum distribution, within the meaning of section 402(e)(4)(A) of the Code, is accorded special tax treatment. A distribution will be a lump-sum distribution within the meaning of section 402(e)(4)(A) of the Code, provided the balance to the credit of an employee becomes payable within one taxable year of the recipient upon the occurrence of certain events. One of the events is an employee's separation from service.

Accordingly, the distribution received by the employee upon separation from the service of one employer representing the balance to the credit of the participant under the employee benefit plan of such employer while continuing employment with the other employer is a lump-sum distribution and may be accorded special tax treatment.

For purposes of this holding it is immaterial whether the individual continues in employment with the second employer or whether the individual receives any distributions from the plan of the second employer. Moreover, the taxability of the distribution from the second plan will be based upon the character of that distribution, generally without regard to the distribution made from the first plan.

Rev. Rul. 66-16 is superseded because the position set forth therein is restated under current law in this revenue ruling.

26 CFR 1.402(a)-1: Taxability of beneficiary under a trust which meets the requirements of section 401(a).

Distribution; employing entity terminated. When the business of a partnership or corporation is terminated along with its qualified plan and a partnership is formed to continue the business, a distribution from the exempt employees' trust will not be treated as a distribution on account of separation from service if the employee continues on the same job for the successor employer; Rev. Ruls. 73-17 and 73-413 superseded.

Rev. Rul. 80-129

The purpose of this revenue ruling is to restate Rev. Ruls. 73-17, 1973-1 C.B. 197, and 73-413, 1973-2 C.B. 143, in view of the enactment of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, Pub. L. 93-406, 1974-3 C.B. 1.

The issue raised by both revenue rulings is whether a distribution from an exempt employees' trust is made on account of an employee's separation from the service, within the meaning of section 402(e)(4)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code, if the distribution is made when the original employing entity along with its qualified profit-sharing plan is terminated and a successor partnership is formed to continue the business.

The major difference in the two revenue rulings is that in Rev. Rul. 73-413 a corporation was liquidated, whereas in Rev. Rul. 73-17 a partnership was terminated under local law. However, in each case, the business was continued by a successor partnership, and the employees of the original employing entity continued on the same jobs for the successor partnership.

Section 402(a)(1) of the Code provides, in general, that the amount actually distributed or made available to any distributee by an employees' trust described in section 401(a), which is exempt from tax under section 501(a), shall be taxable to the distributee, in the year in which so distributed or made available, under section 72 (relating to annuities).

However, a lump-sum distribution, within the meaning of section 402(e)(4)(A) of the Code, is accorded special tax treatment. Section 402(e)(4)(A) provides, in pertinent part, that a distribution will be a lump-sum distribution, provided the balance to the credit of an employee becomes payable within one taxable year of the recipient on account of an employee's separation from the service of the employer.

Rev. Rul. 79-336, 1979-43 I.R.B. 15, which deals with a reorganization of a corporation, states that an employee is separated from the service of the employer, for purposes of section 402(e)(4)(A) of the Code, only upon death, retirement, resignation, or discharge, and not when the employee continues on the same job for a different employer as a result of liquidation, merger, consolidation, etc., of the former employer.

The rationale of Rev. Rul. 79-336 is equally applicable to situations in which, for whatever purpose, an employer terminates its business and a successor employer is formed to continue the business. That the successor employer operates its business under a form different from that of the predecessor employer does not require a different result.

Consequently, the termination of the employing entity did not result in a separation from the service, since the employees did not die, retire, or resign; nor were any of the employees discharged from employment. Rather, the employees continued on the same job for the successor partnership.

Accordingly, the distributions from the exempt employees' trusts may not be treated as distributions on account of separation from the service within the meaning of section 402(e)(4)(A) of the Code. However, even though the distributions will not qualify for special tax treatment since no lump-sum distribution occurred, the distributions from both plans may be eligible for tax-free rollover treatment, provided the specific requirements of sections 402(a)(5) and 402(a)(6)(A) of the Code, to the extent applicable, are met.

Rev. Ruls. 73-17 and 73-413 are superseded because the positions stated therein are restated under current law in this revenue ruling.

TITLE 26.—INTERNAL REVENUE.—CHAPTER I, SUBCHAPTER A, PART 1.—INCOME TAX; TAXABLE YEARS BEGINNING AFTER DECEMBER 31, 1953

Definition of the term "church plan"

AGENCY: Internal Revenue Service, Treasury.

ACTION: Final regulations.

[1] This publication of the Treasury Decision contains the complete text of the amendments to the regulations. The instructions for modifying the notice of proposed rulemaking have been omitted.

SUMMARY: This document provides final regulations relating to the definition of the term "church plan." Changes to the applicable tax law were made by the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) [Pub. L. 93-406, 1974-3 C.B. 1]. These regulations provide necessary guidance for determining whether a retirement plan is a church plan. If a plan is a church plan, it may obtain qualified status without meeting certain requirements required of plans which are not church plans. A retirement plan which does not meet the provisions required of a church plan may still obtain qualified status by meeting all the requirements applicable to retirement plans generally.

EFFECTIVE DATE: September 2, 1974.

SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION:

BACKGROUND

On April 8, 1977, the Federal Register published proposed amendments to the Income Tax Regulations (26 CFR Part 1) under section 414(e) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (42 FR 18621). The amendments were proposed under ERISA section 1015 (88 Stat. 925). A public hearing was held on October 6, 1977. After consideration of all comments regarding the proposed amendments, those amendments are adopted as revised by this Treasury decision.

INDEPENDENT ADMINISTRATORS

A number of commentators requested guidance with respect to whether a plan which is administered by a separately incorporated organization such as a pension board or a bank, can still qualify as a church plan. The final regulations provide that such plans can qualify as church plans.

SINGLE CHURCH DISQUALIFICATION PROBLEM

A number of persons commented that the provision in the notice of proposed rulemaking which would cause a plan to lose its church plan status if one of the churches maintaining the plan fails to meet all the requirements was too harsh. The Treasury Department agrees. Therefore the final regulations permit such a plan to retain its church plan status if the church which does not meet the requirements disassociates itself from the plan after notice from the Internal Revenue Service of its failure. § 1.414(e)-1(c).

ONCE DISQUALIFIED, FOREVER DISQUALIFIED

A number of commentators requested that the Service reverse the position taken in the proposed regulations which provided that once a plan ceases or fails to be a church plan, it can thereafter never become one. This position was taken in order to be consistent with section 410(d) of the Code, which permits church plans to make an irrevocable election not to be treated as a church plan. The position taken in the regulations prevents plans from avoiding the irrevocable election simply by failing the substantive requirements for church plans for a few years, and then meeting them a few years later. In addition, at the hearing it was brought out that substantial administrative problems could result if plans were permitted to enter and leave church plan status. Accordingly, the position taken in the proposed regulations is unchanged in the final regulations. § 1.414(e)-1(a).

FORMER EMPLOYEES

The Service was also requested to add to the regulations special provisions for church personnel who leave the employment of the church. The final regulations do not cover this issue because it is beyond the scope of section 414(e). The rules relating to coverage of former employees are the same for all qualified plans, regardless of whether or not they are church plans. There are no provisions which treat former employees covered by church plans differently from former employees covered by other qualified plans.

ADDITIONAL CHANGES

The final regulations delete proposed § 1.414(e) (statutory provisions). This action complies with Treasury Department policy to avoid placing in the Code of Federal Regulations material that serves little or no useful purpose. The statutory language is readily available elsewhere. Other minor clerical and clarifying changes were also made.

ADDITIONAL CONSIDERATIONS

These regulations are needed in order to provide guidance to the public as well as government employees responsible for the implementation of section 414(e) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. Considering both the direct and indirect effects of these regulations, it is believed they satisfactorily implement section 414(e) of the Code.

Evaluation of the effectiveness of the regulations after issuance will be based upon comments received from offices within the Internal Revenue Service and the Treasury Department, other governmental agencies, State and local governments, and the public.

DRAFTING INFORMATION

The principal author in these regulations is Phoebe Mix of the Legislation and Regulations Division of the Office of Chief Counsel, Internal Revenue Service. However, personnel from other offices of the Internal Revenue Service and Treasury Department participated in developing the regulations, both on matters of substance and style.

AUTHORITY

This Treasury decision is issued under the authority contained in section 7805 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (68A Stat. 917; 26 U.S.C. 7805).

Adoption of amendments to the regulations

After careful consideration of all comments received, the following amendments to the regulations are hereby adopted:

§ 1.414(e)-1 Definition of church plan.

(a) General rule. For the purposes of part I of subchapter D of chapter 1 of the Code and the regulations thereunder, the term "church plan" means a plan established and at all times maintained for its employees by a church or by a convention or association of churches (hereinafter included within the term "church") which is exempt from tax under section 501(a), provided that such plan meets the requirements of paragraphs (b) and (if applicable) (c) of this section. If at any time during its existence a plan is not a church plan because of a failure to meet the requirements set forth in this section, it cannot thereafter become a church plan.

(b) Unrelated businesses—(1) In general. A plan is not a church plan unless it is established and maintained primarily for the benefit of employees (or their beneficiaries) who are not employed in connection with one or more unrelated trades or businesses (within the meaning of section 513).

(2) Establishment or maintenance of a plan primarily for persons not employed in connection with one or more unrelated trades or businesses. (i)(A) A plan, other than a plan in existence on September 2, 1974, is established primarily for the benefit of employees (or their beneficiaries) who are not employed in connection with one or more unrelated trades or businesses if on the date the plan is established the number of employees employed in connection with the unrelated trades or businesses eligible to participate in the plan is less than 50 percent of the total number of employees of the church eligible to participate in the plan.

(B) A plan in existence on September 2, 1974, is to be considered established as a plan primarily for the benefit of employees (or their beneficiaries) who are not employed in connection with one or more unrelated trades or businesses if it meets the requirements of both paragraphs (b)(2)(ii)(A) and (B) (if applicable) in either of its first 2 plan years ending after September 2, 1974.

(ii) For plan years ending after September 2, 1974, a plan will be considered maintained primarily for the benefit of employees of a church who are not employed in connection with one or more unrelated trades or businesses if in 4 out of 5 of its most recently completed plan years—

(A) Less than 50 percent of the persons participating in the plan (at any time during the plan year) consist of, and in the same year

(B) Less than 50 percent of the total compensation paid by the employer during the plan year (if benefits or contributions are a function of compensation) to employees participating in the plan is paid to, employees employed in connection with an unrelated trade or business. The determination that the plan is not a church plan will apply to the second year (within a 5 year period) for which the plan fails to meet paragraph (b)(2)(ii)(A) or (B) (if applicable) and to all plan years thereafter unless, taking into consideration all of the facts and circumstances as described in paragraph (b)(2)(iii) of this section, the plan is still considered to be a church plan. A plan that has not completed 5 plan years ending after September 2, 1974, shall be considered maintained primarily for the benefit of employees not employed in connection with an unrelated trade or business unless it fails to meet paragraphs (b)(2)(ii)(A) and (B) in at least 2 such plan years.

(iii) Even though a plan does not meet the provisions of paragraph (b)(2)(ii) of this section, it nonetheless will be considered maintained primarily for the benefit of employees who are not employed in connection with one or more unrelated trades or businesses if the church maintaining the plan can demonstrate that based on all of the facts and circumstances such is the case. Among the facts and circumstances to be considered in evaluating each case are:

(A) The margin by which the plan fails to meet the provisions of paragraph (b)(2)(ii) of this section, and

(B) Whether the failure to meet such provisions was due to a reasonable mistake as to what constituted an unrelated trade or business or whether a particular person or group of persons were employed in connection with one or more unrelated trades or businesses.

(iv) For purposes of this section, an employee will be considered eligible to participate in a plan if such employee is a participant in the plan or could be a participant in the plan upon making mandatory employee contributions to the plan.

(3) Employment in connection with one or more unrelated trades or businesses. An employee is employed in connection with one or more unrelated trades or businesses of a church if a majority of such employee's duties and responsibilities in the employ of the church are directly or indirectly related to the carrying on of such trades or businesses. Although an employee's duties and responsibilities may be insignificant with respect to any one unrelated trade or business, such employee will nonetheless be considered as employed in connection with one or more unrelated trades or businesses if such employee's duties and responsibilities with respect to all of the unrelated trades or businesses of the church represent a majority of the total of such person's duties and responsibilities in the employ of the church.

(c) Plans of two or more employers. The term "church plan" does not include a plan which, during the plan year, is maintained by two or more employers unless—

(1) Each of the employers is a church that is exempt from tax under section 501(a), and

(2) With respect to the employees of each employer, the plan meets the provisions of paragraph (b)(2)(ii) of this section or would be determined to be a church plan based on all the facts and circumstances described in paragraph (b)(2)(iii) of this section.

Thus, if with respect to a single employer the plan fails to meet any provision of this paragraph, the entire plan ceases to be a church plan unless that employer ceases maintaining the plan for all plan years beginning after the plan year in which it receives a final notification from the Internal Revenue Service that it does not meet the provisions of this paragraph. If the employer does cease maintaining the plan in accordance with this paragraph, the fact that the employer formerly did maintain the plan will not prevent the plan from being a church plan for prior years.

(d) Special rule. (1) Notwithstanding paragraph (c)(1) of this section, a plan maintained by a church and one or more agencies of such church for the employees of such church and of such agency or agencies, that is in existence on January 1, 1974, shall be treated as a church plan for plan years ending after September 2, 1974, and beginning before January 1, 1983, provided that the plan is described in paragraph (c) of this section without regard to paragraph (c)(1) of this section, and the plan is not maintained by an agency which did not maintain the plan on January 1, 1974.

(2) For the purposes of section 414(e) and this section, an agency of a church means an organization which is exempt from tax under section 501 and which is either controlled by, or associated with, a church. For example, an organization, a majority of whose officers or directors are appointed by a church's governing board or by officials of a church, is controlled by a church within the meaning of this paragraph. An organization is associated with a church if it shares common religious bonds and convictions with that church.

(e) Religious orders and religious organizations. For the purpose of this section the term "church" includes a religious order or a religious organization if such order or organization (1) is an integral part of a church, and (2) is engaged in carrying out the functions of a church, whether as a civil law corporation or otherwise.

(f) Separately incorporated fiduciaries. A plan which otherwise meets the provisions of this section shall not lose its status as a church plan because of the fact that it is administered by a separately incorporated fiduciary such as a pension board or a bank.

(g) Cross reference. (1) For rules relating to treatment of church plans, see sections 410(c), 411(e), 412(h), 4975(g), and the regulations thereunder.

(2) For rules relating to church plan elections, see section 410(d) and the regulations thereunder.

Section 501.—Exemption from Tax on Corporations, Certain Trusts, Etc.

26 CFR 1.501(c)(7)-1: Social clubs.

Rev. Rul. 80-130

ISSUE AND FACTS

A social club exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(7) of the Internal Revenue Code pays a fixed fee to each club member who brings a new member into the club.

HOLDING

Such fixed fee payments to members, if they are reasonable compensation for performance of a necessary administrative service, do not result in inurement of the club's net earnings so as to disqualify the club from exemption under section 501(c)(7) of the Code.

Section 856.—Definition of Real Estate Investment Trust

Federal income tax consequences of extending the exercise date of warrants to acquire shares of a real estate investment trust. See Rev. Rul. 80-134, this page.

Section 1234.—Options to Buy or Sell

26 CFR 1.1234-1: Options to buy or sell. (Also Section 856; 1.856-1.)

Warrants; extension of expiration date. The unilateral extension of the expiration date of warrants issued by a qualified real estate investment trust or any other corporation has the effect of the grant of new warrants, and the issuer recognize gain on the date the original unexercised warrants lapse. This holding shall not apply to warrants issued on or before April 24, 1972, or warrants issued pursuant to a binding contract under which the issuer was obligated on April 24, 1972, to issue the warrants. Rev. Rul. 77-40 amplified.

Rev. Rul. 80-134

ISSUE

What are the federal income tax consequences to an issuer of certain warrants when the time within which such warrants can be exercised is extended?

FACTS

In connection with a public offering of its securities, an unicorporated trust that otherwise qualifies as a real estate investment trust ("REIT") under section 856 of the Internal Revenue Code issued warrants to purchase shares of beneficial interest of the trust. The warrants were issued on January 2, 1973, with an expiration date of December 31, 1979.

The REIT allocated 5*x* dollars to each warrant, the amount received from the purchasers, and credited such amount to the warrant-outstanding account pending exercise or lapse of the warrants.

On December 1, 1979, the REIT unilaterally "extended" the time during which the warrants could be exercised until December 31, 1983. The extension was accomplished prior to the expiration of the original exercise period. At the time of the extension, the shares of the REIT were trading at an amount substantially below the exercise price in the warrants, and the warrants, therefore, had only nominal value.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Rev. Rul. 72-198, 1972-1 C.B. 223, provides, in part, that a warrant is considered an option for purposes of section 1234 of the Code if the holder has the right to purchase the stock to which it relates.

Effective September 1, 1976, section 1234(b)(1) of the Code, as amended by section 2136(a) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976, 1976-3 (Vol. 1) C.B. 405, provides, in part, that in the case of the grantor of an option granted after that date, gain or loss from any closing transaction with respect to, and gain on lapse of, an option in property shall be treated as a short-term capital gain or loss.

With respect to warrants issued on or before September 1, 1976, section 1.1234-1(b) of the Income Tax Regulations provides, in part, that any gain to the grantor of an option arising from the failure of the holder to exercise it is ordinary income.

On April 24, 1972, the Service published Rev. Rul. 72-198, a ruling holding that an issuer of stock-purchase warrants recognizes income to the extent of the net proceeds received on the sale of the warrants if and when the warrants expire unexercised. Rev. Rul. 77-40, 1977-1 C.B. 248, holds that if on or before April 24, 1972, a corporation issued warrants to purchase its stock, no tax consequences will result to the issuing corporation as a result of the expiration of these warrants. Rev. Rul. 78-73, 1978-1 C.B. 265, provides that a corporation that issued warrants after April 24, 1972, pursuant to a legally enforceable contract under which the corporation was obligated on April 24, 1972, and at all times thereafter, to issue the warrants, will have no tax consequences as a result of the expiration of the warrants.

In these circumstances, for purposes of section 1234 of the Code, the original warrants lapsed on December 31, 1979. At the time the REIT extended the date for exercise, the warrants had only a nominal value. Moreover, the REIT received no new or additional consideration from the warrant holders. Therefore, the extension was of the same nature and had the same effect as a gratuitous grant of new warrants to the holders. Accordingly, the original warrants lapsed on December 31, 1979. The result is the same whether or not the extended warrants are subsequently exercised.

HOLDING

Upon the lapse of the original warrants, the REIT must recognize ordinary income of 5*x* dollars, the premium received for each warrant. See section 1.1234-1(b) of the regulations.

The holding of this revenue ruling applies not merely to warrants issued by a real estate investment trust, but also to those issued by any other corporation.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

A warrant issuer that issued warrants on or before April 24, 1972 (the date of publication of Rev. Rul. 72-198), or entered into a written legally enforceable contract under which the issuer was obligated on April 24, 1972, and at all times thereafter, to issue the warrants, and extended the warrants for no new or additional consideration, will not have income with respect to its issuance of warrants when the extended warrants lapse.

Rev. Rul. 77-40, as amplified by Rev. Rul. 78-73, is further amplified.

Section 4061.—Imposition of Tax [Motor Vehicles]

26 CFR 48.4061(a)-1: Imposition of tax; exclusion for light-duty trucks, etc.

Fiberglass bulk containers. Molded fiberglass open-top containers designed to be secured to the flatbed of taxable trailers and semitrailers, towed by a farm tractor through the farm fields, loaded with tomatoes by a mechanical tomato harvester, and used in transporting tomatoes from the farm fields over the highway to a cannery are taxable trailer and semitrailer bodies; Rev. Rul. 79-309 distinguished.

Rev. Rul. 80-131

ISSUE

Are the fiberglass bulk containers described below automotive bodies subject to the manufacturers excise tax imposed by section 4061(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

A company manufactures molded fiberglass open-top containers designed for use on the flatbed of taxable trailers and semitrailers. Each container is 3 feet high, 8 feet wide, and is available in lengths of 18, 24, or 26 feet depending upon the capacity desired and the size of the flatbed trailer. Clamps are molded on each corner of the container enabling it to be secured with cables to the flatbed of the trailer (or semitrailer). When so equipped, the trailer is towed by a farm tractor through the farm fields and loaded with tomatoes by a mechanical tomato harvester.

The trailer is then towed by a highway truck from the farm over the highway to a cannery. The tomatoes are unloaded by pumping water into the container and allowing the water along with the tomatoes to flow out through doors located on the side of the container. The container is not removed from the trailer during the unloading process. At the close of the harvest season the container is removed and the flatbed vehicle is used for general hauling.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4061(a)(1) of the Code imposes a tax on the sale of truck trailer and semitrailer bodies by the manufacturer.

Section 4061(b)(1) of the Code imposes a tax on sales by a manufacturer of parts and accessories for any of the articles enumerated in section 4061(a)(1).

Under section 48.4061(a)-1(e)(1) of the Manufacturers and Retailers Excise Tax Regulations, as amended by T.D. 7461, 1977-1 C.B. 317, the sale of a trailer body is subject to the tax imposed by section 4061(a)(1) of the Code, if such body is, in any sense, reasonably suitable for use as a component part of a taxable highway truck trailer or semitrailer.

Under section 48.4061(a)-1(d)(1) of the regulations, the term "highway vehicle" includes any trailer or semitrailer that is designed to perform a function of transporting a load over public highways. Under section 48.4061(a)-1(d)(2)(ii) of the regulations, however, a trailer or semitrailer is not a highway vehicle if it is specially designed for the primary function of transporting a load other than over the public highway in connection with a farming operation and by reason of such special design the use of the trailer or semitrailer to transport the load over the public highways is substantially limited or impaired.

When the fiberglass bulk container in this case is mounted on the flatbed of a taxable highway trailer or semitrailer, a vehicle results that has as its function that of transporting tomatoes over the highway from the farm to the cannery. Since this vehicle is not specially designed for the primary function of offhighway transportation as provided in section 48.4061(a)-1(d)(2)(ii) of the regulations, this vehicle does not come within the scope of that section, and is therefore a highway vehicle within the meaning of section 48.4061(a)-1(d)(1) of the regulations. Moreover, since the container provides the entire load-carrying capacity of this vehicle, it is a body within the meaning of section 4061(a)(1) of the Code rather than a part or accessory within the meaning of section 4061(b)(1), despite the fact that the trailer or semitrailer constitutes an independent hauling unit in the absence of the container. See, Rev. Rul. 75-326, 1975-2 C.B. 428. The container therefore comes within the scope of section 48.4061(a)-1(e)(1) of the regulations.

In Rev. Rul. 79-309, 1979-2 C.B. 374, which deals with the applicability of the manufacturers excise tax to portable fuel tanks, the Internal Revenue Service indicated it would follow the result reached in Fargo Foundry Steel & Mfg. Co. v. United States, 415 F. Supp. 1362 (D.N.D. 1976), aff'd No. 76-1786 (8th Cir. March 17, 1977) in all cases involving substantially similar portable fuel tanks. Thus, Rev. Rul. 79-309 concludes that such tanks are not taxable parts or accessories under section 4061(b) of the Code.

The tanks described in Rev. Rul. 79-309 are designed to be placed unattached on the bed of a pick-up truck to haul fuel for farm equipment in the field. They range in capacity from 70 gallons to 200 gallons, and are equipped with handles to facilitate portability. The tanks may also be used as "on-the-farm" storage tanks.

The tomato containers are distinguishable from the tanks involved in Rev. Rul. 79-309 in that the containers here are used only to transport tomatoes from the farm to the cannery and are not used for storage purposes. Therefore the fact that the containers involved in Rev. Rul. 79-309 were held to be nontaxable does not affect the holding in this revenue ruling.

HOLDING

The fiberglass bulk containers are trailer and semitrailer bodies taxable under section 4061(a)(1) of the Code.

EFFECT ON OTHER REVENUE RULINGS

Rev. Rul. 79-309 is distinguished.

Section 4941.—Taxes on Self-Dealing

26 CFR 53.4941(d)-2: Specific acts of self-dealing.

Private foundation; self-dealing; donation of life insurance policy. A disqualified person donated a life insurance policy to a private foundation. The policy was subject to an outstanding loan made to the donor within the 10-year period ending on the date of the donation that was not insignificant in relation to the value of the policy. The donation was an act of self-dealing.

Rev. Rul. 80-132

ISSUE

Under the circumstances described below, is the donation to a private foundation by a disqualified person of a life insurance policy subject to a policy loan an act of self-dealing within the meaning of section 4941(d)(1)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The organization is exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Code, and is a private foundation under section 509(a).

A disqualified person, as defined in section 4946(a) of the Code, donated a life insurance policy to the foundation. The policy, which has a face value of $100x, is subject to an outstanding loan of $46x that was previously made to the disqualified person by the insurer within a 10-year period ending on the date of donation, at which time the cash surrender value of the policy was $50x. Under the terms of the policy, failure to repay the principal or interest on the policy loan reduces the proceeds that are payable to the beneficiary upon voluntary surrender of the policy or upon the death of the insured.

LAW

Section 4941 of the Code imposes a tax on each act of self-dealing between a disqualified person and a private foundation.

Section 4941(d)(1)(A) of the Code provides that the term "self-dealing" means any direct or indirect sale or exchange, or leasing, of property between a private foundation and a disqualified person.

For purposes of section 4941(d)(1) of the Code, section 4941(d)(2)(A) provides that a transfer of real or personal property by a disqualified person to a private foundation shall be treated as a sale or exchange if the property is subject to a mortgage or similar lien which the foundation assumes or if it is subject to a mortgage or similar lien which a disqualified person placed upon the property within the 10-year period ending on the date of transfer.

Section 53.4941(d)-2(a)(2) of the Foundation Excise Tax Regulations provides that the transfer of real or personal property by a disqualified person to a private foundation shall be treated as a sale or exchange if the foundation takes the property subject to a mortgage or similar lien which a disqualified person placed on the property within the 10-year period ending on the date of transfer. The regulation further provides that the term "similar lien" shall include, but is not limited to, deeds of trust and vendors' liens, but shall not include any other lien if such lien is insignificant in relation to the fair market value of the property transferred.

ANALYSIS

A loan on a life insurance policy is sometimes characterized as an advance of the proceeds of the policy. The insurer will not demand repayment of the loan, but a failure to repay the loan will reduce the cash surrender value of the policy and the amount payable on the death of the insured. Similarly, the insurer will not demand payment of interest on the loan as it accrues, but a failure to pay the interest will further reduce the cash surrender value of the policy and the amount payable on the death of the insured. Thus, the loan constitutes a charge against the policy. Compare J. Simpson Dean, 35 T.C. 1083 (1961), nonacq. 1973-2 C.B. 4 (nonacquiescence on another issue).

The fact that the insurer will not demand repayment of the loan or payment of interest as it accrues does not mean that the loan is not a "mortgage or other lien" within the meaning of section 53.4941(d)-2(a)(2) of the regulations. The transfer of the policy in the instant case relieves the donor of the obligation to either repay the loan, pay interest on the loan as it accrues, or suffer continued diminution in the value of the policy. Thus, the effect of the transfer is essentially the same as the transfer of property subject to a mortgage or similar lien. In addition, the amount of the loan is not insignificant in relation to the value of the policy.

HOLDING

The donation of the life insurance policy described above, which is subject to an outstanding policy loan, is a transfer of real or personal property by a disqualified person to a private foundation and is an act of self-dealing under section 4941(d)(1)(A) of the Code.

See Rev. Rul. 80-133, this page, this Bulletin, for the application of section 4944 of the Code to a similar transaction where the donor is not a disqualified person.

Section 4944.—Taxes on Investments Which Jeopardize Charitable Purpose

26 CFR 53.4944-1: Initial taxes.

Private foundation; jeopardizing investment; donation of life insurance policy. A whole-life insurance policy that was subject to a loan to the donor-insured was donated to a private foundation. The face value of the policy, less any outstanding loan principal or interest, was payable to the donee upon the donor's death. The combined interest and premium payments made by the donee over the life expectancy of the donor would exceed the amount it would receive under the policy and were, therefore, jeopardizing investments.

Rev. Rul. 80-133

ISSUE

Under the circumstances described below, are the payments by a private foundation of premiums on a life insurance policy and the interest on a loan secured by the policy jeopardizing investments under section 4944 of the Internal Revenue Code?

FACTS

The organization is exempt from federal income tax under section 501(c)(3) of the Code and is a private foundation under section 509(a) of the Code. A whole-life insurance policy was donated to the foundation. At the time of the donation, the policy was subject to a policy loan that the insurer had made to the donor. The policy provided that, upon the death of the insured, the foundation would receive insurance proceeds in an amount equal to the face value of the policy reduced by the sum of the outstanding principal of the loan and any unpaid interest thereon.

At the time of the donation of the policy, the life expectancy of the insured-donor was 10 years. Instead of immediately surrendering the policy to the insurer for its cash surrender value, the foundation retained the policy as an investment and annually pays the premiums and interest due on the policy and the policy loan, respectively. The combined premium and interest payments are of such an amount that, by the end of eight years, the foundation will have invested a greater amount in premiums and interest than it could receive as a return on this investment, i.e., in the form of insurance proceeds upon the death of the insured.

LAW AND ANALYSIS

Section 4944 of the Code imposes a tax on private foundations and, under certain conditions, foundation managers for investing any amount in such a manner as to jeopardize the carrying out of any of the foundation's exempt purposes.

Section 53.4944-1(a)(2)(i) of the Foundation Excise Tax Regulations provides that an investment shall be considered to jeopardize the carrying out of the exempt purposes of a private foundation if it is determined that the foundation managers, in making such investment, have failed to exercise ordinary business care and prudence, under the facts and circumstances prevailing at the time of making the investment, in providing for the long-term and short-term financial needs of the foundation to carry out its exempt purposes. In the exercise of the requisite standard of care and prudence the foundation managers may take into account the expected return on an investment and the need for diversification within the investment portfolio. The determination whether the investment of a particular amount jeopardizes the carrying out of the exempt purposes of a foundation shall be made on an investment by investment basis, in each case taking into account the foundation's portfolio as a whole.

The foundation managers in the present case invested in a life insurance policy of an insured who has a life expectancy of ten years. The foundation pays combined premium and interest payments that will produce a financial loss to the foundation at the end of eight years. The period of time the payments could reasonably be expected to last is ten years. Under the facts and circumstances, the foundation managers, by investing at the projected rate of return prevailing at the time of the investment failed to exercise ordinary business care and prudence in providing for the long-term and short-term financial needs of the foundation in carrying out its exempt purposes.

See Rev. Rul. 80-132, page 12, this Bulletin, for the application of section 4941 of the Code to a similar transaction where the donor is a disqualified person.

HOLDING

Under the circumstances described above, each payment made by the private foundation for a premium on the insurance policy and the interest on the policy loan is a jeopardizing investment under section 4944 of the Code.

Accordingly, the deletion of Egypt from the list of countries requiring cooperation with an international boycott is retroactively effective to January 26, 1980.

(Also Part I, Sections 219, 404, 408, 415; 1.408-1.)

Rev. Proc. 80-17

Section 1. Purpose

This revenue procedure sets forth the procedures for the issuance of rulings and opinion letters by the National Office of the Internal Revenue Service as to the acceptability of the form of any prototype simplified employee pension (SEP) agreement under sections 408(k) and 415 of the Internal Revenue Code.

Sec. 2. Background and General Information

.01 The Revenue Act of 1978, Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1, created new rules that permit simplified employee pensions for tax years beginning after December 31, 1978.

.02 The general procedures of the Service relating to the issuance of rulings, determination letters, and opinion letters for employee plans matters are set forth in section 601.201 of the Statement of Procedural Rules.

.03 Procedures relating to the issuance of rulings, determination letters, and opinion letters pertaining to the establishment of individual retirement accounts and individual retirement annuities (IRAs) are set forth in Rev. Proc. 75-6, 1975-1 C.B. 646, as modified by Rev. Procs. 76-32, 1976-2 C.B. 654, and 77-24, 1977-2 C.B. 532.

.04 The Service has developed a model SEP agreement that meets the requirements of section 408(k) of the Code for those employers who wish to adopt such a program. Form 5305-SEP, Simplified Employee Pension-Individual Retirement Accounts Contribution Agreement, is used for this purpose. Eligible employers who adopt the model SEP agreement and follow its terms are assured that the model SEP meets the requirements of section 408(k). Because automatic approval has been granted with respect to model SEPs, no ruling, opinion, or determination letter from the Service is necessary.

.05 Receipt of a favorable opinion letter on a SEP is not required as a condition of receiving favorable tax treatment.

.06 The Service will only issue opinion letters on prototype SEP agreements. The Service will not issue opinion letters with respect to prototype SEP-IRAs that consolidate the SEP and IRA in one document. Nor will an opinion letter issued on a prototype SEP provide reliance as to the status of any IRA.

Sec. 3. Opinion Letters

.01 The National Office of the Service will furnish, on request, a written opinion as to whether the prototype SEP submitted by a sponsor satisfies the requirements of section 408(k) of the Code. For this purpose, a sponsor is a trade or professional association (other than an employee association), a bank (including credit unions, savings and loan associations, etc.), a regulated investment company, an insurance company, or a person who under regulations may act as a trustee or custodian of an IRA.

.02 Each opinion letter will contain an identifying serial number and a file-folder number. A copy of the opinion letter should be furnished to employers using the approved SEP agreement.

.03 If a particular employer adopts a prototype SEP in accordance with the form approved by the Service and observes the provisions thereof, the affected taxpayers may rely on the opinion letter provided (a) SEP contributions are made to an Internal Revenue Service model IRA or a Service approved master or prototype IRA and (b) contributions under the SEP do not (in combination with another SEP or any terminated, qualified defined benefit plan of the employer) fail to satisfy the requirements of section 415 of the Code.

Sec. 4. Instructions to Sponsoring Organizations and Employers

.01 A sponsoring organization, of the type referred to in section 3.01 above, that desires a written opinion as to the acceptability of the form of a prototype SEP should submit its request to the National Office. A single copy of all applicable documents, including the SEP agreement, must be submitted with the request.

.02 The request should be addressed to:

Commissioner of Internal Revenue
1111 Constitution Ave., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20224
ATTENTION: E:EP:T

.03 Form 5306-SEP, Simplified Employee Pension (SEP) Application for Approval of Prototype SEP Agreement, is to be used for SEP agreements being submitted to the Service.

.04 Any amendment to an IRA, the sole effect of which is to permit or facilitate SEP contributions of up to $7,500, will not affect the status of the IRA to which it relates and should not be submitted to the Service for review.

.05 If an amendment is made to the form of a previously approved prototype SEP agreement, the following procedure will apply:

(1) Amendments to SEPs by sponsors will require submission of Form

5306-SEP and documentation as described under section 4.01 above, together with the amendments.

(2) Upon approval by the Service, an opinion letter will be issued to the applicant, and the sponsor should send a copy of the amended SEP and opinion letter to every affected employer.

SEC. 5. EFFECT ON OTHER PLANS

.01 Under section 415(e), (f), and (g) of the Code, a SEP is combined with other plans maintained by an employer for purposes of determining whether the limitations on benefits and contributions in section 415 are exceeded.

.02 Service model profit-sharing plans (Form 5612 or 5613) and money purchase plans (Form 5614 or 5615) specify that they cannot be used with any other qualified plan maintained by the employer. If such model plans are not used with any other qualified plan, the employer and affected employees may rely on the assurance of the Service that the terms of the model plan meet the qualification requirements of the Code. A SEP agreement is not a qualified plan, but it will be treated as such, for the purpose of applying the above restriction, if the employer concurrently maintains a SEP and a model profit-sharing, or money purchase pension plan. The effect of this treatment is that the affected taxpayers may no longer rely on the qualified status of the model plan if a SEP is also maintained.

.03 If an employer maintains a master or prototype defined contribution plan, the plan currently contains language which will coordinate contributions under that plan with any other master or prototype defined contribution plan maintained by the same employer. However, such a plan does not contain language to coordinate with a SEP and may, as a consequence, not satisfy section 415 of the Code if it is maintained with a SEP.

.04 If an employer maintains any combination of defined contribution or defined benefit plans including those enumerated in section 5.02 and 5.03 or, in addition to any defined contribution or defined benefit plan, has ever maintained a defined benefit plan which is now terminated, and wants a determination as to whether that plan, or those plans, in combination with a SEP agreement satisfy the requirements of section 415 of the Code, the employer may apply to the District Office for a determination letter on the plan under the procedures prescribed in section 601.201 of the S.R.R., and Rev. Procs. 72-6, 1972-1 C.B. 710 (as modied by Rev. Procs. 75-47, 1975-2 C.B. 581, and 77-25, 1977-2 C.B. 534), 72-7, 1972-1 C.B. 715, 75-52, 1975-2 C.B. 592, 76-38, 1976-2 C.B. 661, and 77-22, 1977-2 C.B. 529, as appropriate.

SEC. 6. RULING LETTERS

.01 If an adopting employer maintains more than one SEP, or has ever maintained a qualified defined benefit plan (which is now terminated), covering any of the same employees as does the SEP, the employer may request a ruling letter as to whether the SEP (in combination with the other SEP or plans) satisfies the requirements of section 415 of the Code.

.02 The employer should submit the request for a ruling letter to the National Office and include a single copy of each SEP and qualified plan.

.03 The ruling request should be addressed to:

Commissioner of Internal Revenue
1111 Constitution Ave., N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20224
ATTENTION: E:EP:T

SEC. 7. EFFECT ON OTHER DOCUMENTS

.01 The general instructions of section 601.201 of the S.P.R. are applicable to the extent that the matter is not covered by the specific procedures and instructions contained in this revenue procedure.

.02 Rev. Proc. 75-6, concerning the issuance of Service rulings, determination letters, and opinion letters for IRAs, is modified to allow existing IRAs on which a favorable ruling, determination letter, or opinion letter has been issued, to be amended to accept SEP contributions up to $7,500 without affecting their tax-qualified status.

.03 Rev. Proc. 77-15, 1977-1 C.B. 572, concerning Service model money purchase and profit-sharing plans is modified to treat SEP agreements as a qualified plan for the purpose of applying the conditions for full reliance.

SEC. 8. EFFECTIVE DATE

This revenue procedure is effective May 12, 1980, the date of its publication in the Internal Revenue Bulletin, and only applications received after this date will be considered.

Announcement 80-65

Public Law 96-223, Crude Oil Windfall Profit Tax Act of 1980, and the related Committee Reports will be published in 1980-3 Cumulative Bulletin.

The volume of material involved makes it impractical to publish the law and related material in the weekly Internal Revenue Bulletin.

The special edition of the Cumulative Bulletin should be available in June.

Amendment of Rev. Rul. 80-98

Announcement 80-68

The final paragraph in the LAW AND ANALYSIS section of Rev. Rul. 80-98, 1980-14 I.R.B. 25, is amended to read as follows:

In Rev. Rul. 80-36, 1980-6 I.R.B. 11, examples are set forth in which amounts paid to a citizen of Japan for performing research at a heart research foundation in the United States are either compensation for services rendered or payments made under a grant, allowance, or award within the meaning of Article 20(1) of the Treaty. Rev. Rul. 80-36 also superseded Rev. Rul. 76-567, 1976-2 C.B. 491, in which the taxpayer a citizen and resident of Japan, received funds from a charitable organization paid in connection with the taxpayer's research work at an institute located in the United States. Rev. Rul. 76-567 concluded that the amount paid to the taxpayer for the research work was a grant, allowance, or award within the meaning of Article 20(1)(a)(iii) of the Treaty and, thus, is exempt from federal income tax. However, the revenue ruling did not distinguish between an amount paid under a grant for research and an amount paid as compensation for services rendered in performing research.

This amendment will be reflected in Rev. Rul. 80-98 when it is published in 1980-1 C.B.

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of a prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Announcement Relating to Decisions of the Tax Court

It is the policy of the Internal Revenue Service to announce in the Internal Revenue Bulletin at the earliest practicable date the determination of the Commissioner to acquiesce or not acquiesce in a decision of the Tax Court which disallows a deficiency in tax determined by the Commissioner to be due.

Notice that the Commissioner has acquiesced or nonacquiesced in a decision of the Tax Court relates only to the issue or issues decided adversely to the Government.

Actions of acquiescences in adverse decisions shall be relied on by revenue officers and others concerned as conclusions of the Service only to the application of the law to the facts in the particular case. Caution should be exercised in extending the application of the decision to a similar case unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same, and consideration should be given to the effect of new legislation, regulations, and rulings as well as subsequent court decisions and actions thereon.

Acquiescence in a decision means acceptance by the Service of the conclusion reached, and does not necessarily mean acceptance and approval of any or all of the reasons assigned by the court for its conclusions.

No announcements are made in the Bulletin with respect to memorandum opinions of the tax court.

The announcements published in the weekly Internal Revenue Bulletins are consolidated semiannually and annually. The semiannual consolidation appears in the first Bulletin for July and in the Cumulative Bulletin for the first half of the year and the annual consolidation appears in the first Bulletin for the following January and in the Cumulative Bulletin for the last half of the year.

The Commissioner does NOT ACQUIESCE in the following decision:

Mr. Long, from the Committee on Finance, submitted the following report to accompany H.R. 2797.[1]

The Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H.R. 2797) to make technical corrections related to the Revenue Act of 1978, having considered the same, reports favorable thereon with amendments and recommend that the bill as amended do pass.

(Vol. 1) 1] and other 1978 tax legislation. These amendments were developed as a result of a review of the application of the tax law changes made by 1978 tax legislation, taking into account comments submitted to the committee from the Treasury Department, the Internal Revenue Service, the staff, tax practitioners, and others from the public. In addition to written statements submitted to the committee, the Subcommittee on Taxation and Debt Management Generally received public testimony on November 7, 1979, on H.R. 2797, as passed by the House of Representatives. The committee subsequently made further amendments to the bill as a result of the testimony and comments received.

The bill is divided into nine general parts. The first part (sec. 2) coordinates the enactment dates of the Revenue Act of 1978 and the Energy Tax Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-618, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 2) 1]; the next seven parts (secs. 101-107) cover technical, clerical, and conforming amendments to the provisions of the first seven titles of the Revenue Act of 1978 (and the Internal Revenue Code provisions amended thereby); and the last part (sec. 108) covers technical, clerical, and conforming amendments to the Foreign Earned Income Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-615, 1978-2 C.B. 415], the Black Lung Benefits Revenue Act [Pub. L. 95-227, 1978-1 C.B. 494], and the Energy Tax Act of 1978.

[11] III. GENERAL EXPLANATION OF PROVISIONS

A. Technical Amendments to the Revenue Act of 1978

1. Coordination of Amendments Made by the Revenue Act of 1978 and the Energy Tax Act of 1978

(Sec. 2 of the Bill and Secs. 46 and 48 of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1], the present investment tax credit rate of 10 percent was scheduled to decline to 7 percent (4 percent for utility property) on January 1, 1981. Under the Revenue Act of 1978, the 10-percent rate of the credit was made permanent for all taxpayers.

The provisions of the Code (sec. 46 (a)(2)) which pertain to the rate of the credit also were amended and restated by the Energy Tax Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-618, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 2) 1]. Although the energy tax amendments were passed by the Congress before the amendments made by the Revenue Act of 1978, these two bills were signed into law by the President in reverse of the order these bills were passed by Congress.[1]

Reasons for change

The order of enactment of the Revenue Act of 1978 and the Energy Tax Act of 1978 technically may have caused the 10-percent credit to again be temporary. The bill corrects this unintended result.

Explanation of provision

The bill directs that, for purposes of applying the amendments made to the investment credit provisions by these two laws, the Energy Tax Act of 1978 will be deemed to have been enacted first. As a result, the 10-percent credit rate will be permanent as was intended by the Revenue Act of 1978.

Effective date

The provision takes effect as if enacted as part of the Revenue Act of 1978.

[12] 2. Technical Amendments Relating to Individual Income Tax Reductions and Extensions

a. Eligibility for earned income credit for persons claiming section 913 deductions (sec. 101(a)(1) of the bill and sec. 43(c)(1) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, the earned income credit is not available to taxpayers who are entitled to exclude amounts from income under section 911 (relating to income earned by certain employees in camps) or section 931 (relating to income from sources within the possessions of the United States) for the taxable year. This provision affects only those taxpayers who lived abroad during part of the year since the earned income credit generally is not available to those taxpayers whose principal place of abode for the taxable year is outside the United States.

Reasons for change

The Foreign Earned Income Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-615, 1978-2 C.B. 415] established a new set of deductions under section 913 of the Code which generally are available to those taxpayers who formerly were entitled to the section 911 exclusion. The committee believes that the credit should continue to be unavailable to the same type of taxpayers who formerly were denied the credit because they qualified for the section 911 exclusion.

Explanation of provision

The bill denies the earned income credit to taxpayers who claim deductions under section 913, as well as to those who claim the benefits of section 911 or 931.

Effective date

The amendment made by this provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1977.

b. Treatment of earned income credit as earned income under AFDC and SSI (secs. 101(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the bill and secs. 402 and 1612 of the Social Security Act)

Present law

Under present law, the earned income credit is not taken into account as income for purposes of determining eligibility for, or the amount of, benefits or assistance under any Federal programs or State or local program that is financed in whole, or in part, with Federal funds.

Reasons for change

The Revenue Act of 1978 repealed the provisions of present law requiring that the earned income credit be disregarded for purposes of Federal or Federally-aided assistance programs, effective in 1980. [13] However, conforming changes were not made to the Social Security Act.

Explanation of provision

The bill amends the Social Security Act to provide that the earned income credit would be treated as earned income for purposes of the aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) and supplemental security income (SSI) programs. This treatment applies both to any advance payments made by an employer and to any refund of Federal taxes made by reason of the earned income credit (because the actual credit for a year is larger than the total amount of advance payments for that year). Language is added to the bill as passed by the House of Representatives to make clear that, if advance payments of the earned income credit exceed the actual credit, so that the individual must return the difference, an appropriate reconciling increase in AFDC or SSI benefits would be made by the welfare agency. This increase could be computed, for example, by reducing by this difference the amount of earned income that is taken into account for purposes of these programs in the month the difference is returned; the increase would be equal to the amount of benefits lost in the previous year because of the excess advance payments.

[1] The Revenue Act of 1978 (P.L. 95-600) was signed into law first, on November 6, 1978, and the Energy Tax Act of 1978 (P.L. 95-618) was then signed into law on November 9, 1978.

Effective date

The amendments made by these provisions apply to payments for months beginning after December 31, 1979.

c. Correction of effective date for advance payment of earned income credit (sec. 101(a)(2)(C) of the bill and sec. 105(g)(2) of the Act)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 contained a new provision allowing employees to elect to have advance payments of the earned income credit added to their paychecks each pay period. In order to give employers time to implement procedures necessary to accommodate for the advance payment of the earned income credit to their employees, the Congress intended this provision to be effective with respect to wages paid after June 30, 1979.

Reasons for change

Due to a typographical error, the Act referred to wages paid after June 30, 1978.

Explanation of provision

The bill corrects a typographical error in the Act to provide that the provision is effective with respect to wages paid after June 30, 1979.

The committee believes that the Secretary should interpret the statute in a manner that will address the problems which occur in giving advance payments to agricultural workers in the field. Specifically, the committee believes that employers should not be required to make advance payments to these workers when they are paid on a daily basis because of the administrative difficulties employers would encounter in trying to maintain a list of all workers who had filed advanced payment certificates and, in having each day, every crew leader compare the name of every worker being paid to the names on [14] this list. Since these workers are not now subject to mandatory income tax withholding, employers are not required to consult similar records (withholding, i.e., allowance certificates) in computing net pay. In view of the potential administrative burden, the committee believes that employers should not be required to make advance payments to these workers paid on a daily basis and not subject to mandatory income tax withholding.

Effective date

The amendment made by this provision would be effective upon enactment and would apply with respect to wages paid after June 30, 1979.

d. Clerical amendment to earned income credit (sec. 101(a)(2)(D) of the bill and sec. 43(h) of the Code)

The bill redesignates subsection (h) of section 43 (relating to coordination with advance payments of earned income credit) as subsection (g).

e. Relationship of section 85 of the Code to railroad unemployment compensation (sec. 101(a)(3) of the bill and sec. 128(a)(8) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, unemployment compensation was not includible in gross income. The Act made all types of unemployment compensation paid under government programs includible in gross income for taxpayers with income above specified amounts (Code sec. 85), effective for payments of unemployment compensation made after December 31, 1978.

Reasons for change

The Code contains a cross reference indicating that the exclusion of railroad unemployment compensation from gross income is determined by a provision of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act. However, because the Congress intended railroad unemployment compensation insurance benefits to be treated in a manner similar to other types of unemployment compensation paid under government programs, this cross reference is no longer accurate.

Explanation of provision

The bill modifies the existing cross reference to make it clear that railroad unemployment compensation benefits are includable in gross income for certain taxpayers in a manner similar to all other unemployment compensation benefits paid under government programs.

Effective date

The amendment made by this provision applies to payments of railroad unemployment compensation insurance benefits made after December 31, 1978.

[15] 3. Technical Amendments Relating to Deferred Compensation and ESOP Provisions

a. Extension of deferred compensation rules to certain rural electric cooperatives and their trade organizations (sec. 101(a)(4) of the bill and sec. 457(d)(9)(B) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 provided that employees and independent contractors who provide services for a State or local government, a rural electric cooperative (described in section 501(c)(12)), or an association of such cooperatives, that maintains an eligible deferred compensation plan will be able to defer the inclusion of income of compensation deferral meets certain requirements.

Reasons for change

The 1978 Act provision did not apply to certain rural electric cooperatives in the Tennessee Valley Authority ("TVA") area which are exempt from taxation under section 501(c)(4) (but which, generally because of TVA requirements, cannot meet all the requirements for exemption under section 501(c)(12)). In addition, the provision did not apply to certain national and State associations of rural electric cooperatives because some of their members are not domestic rural electric cooperatives and because some of the organizations are exempt from taxation as social welfare organizations (described in sec. 501(c)(4)) rather than as trade associations (described in sec. 501(c)(6)). The committee believes that these omissions were inadvertent and that the provision should apply to these organizations.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that the types of rural electric organizations eligible for the deferred compensation rules include (1) any organization which is exempt from tax under section 501 (a) and which is engaged primarily in providing electric service on a mutual or cooperative basis,[1] and (2) any organization described in section 501 (c)(4) or (6) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a) and at least 80 percent of the members of which are rural electric cooperatives which are eligible for these rules.

Effective date

This provision is effective as if it had been included in section 457 of the Code by section 131 of the Revenue Act of 1978. Thus, any plan to which section 457 applies by virtue of this provision will have until January 1, 1982, to satisfy the plan requirements for classification as an eligible State deferred compensation plan. However, the limitations on amounts that can be deferred under such a plan will apply for all taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

[16] b. Deferral of effective date of deduction timing rules relating to deferred compensation payments to independent contractors (sec. 101 (a)(5)(A) of the bill and secs. 404 (b) and (d) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, section 404(a)(5) of the Code provided that where an employer deferred payment of compensation to an employee pursuant to a nonqualified plan, the employer could deduct the compensation only in the year in which the compensation was includible in the employee's gross income. If the payment was not made pursuant to a qualified plan, but pursuant to a "method of employer contributions or compensation [having] the effect of a stock bonus, pension, profit-sharing, or annuity plan, or similar plan deferring the receipt of compensation . . .," the deduction-timing limitations of section 404(a) were also applicable (italics added).

Section 133 of the 1978 Act added a new Code section 404(d) which extends the deduction-timing limitation of section 404(a) to payments of deferred compensation made to independent contractors. Section 133 of the 1978 Act also amended section 404(b) by changing the word "or similar plan" to read "or other plan." These amendments apply to deductions for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

Reasons for change

The Lawyers' Title Guaranty Fund (the Fund) is an unincorporated business trust whose members consist of almost 6,000 Florida lawyers. The Fund issues title insurance policies on the basis of title examinations made by the lawyer-members. Under the agreement between the lawyers and the Fund, the payment by the Fund to lawyer-members on account of their issuance of title policies is deferred for 7 years, the period of adverse possession under Florida law. One of the principal reasons for this deferral of payment is that retention of these amounts due for commissions serves to provide a more adequate financial base to provide security to policyholders. In Lawyers' Title Guaranty Fund v. United States, 508 F.2d 1 (5th Cir. 1975), the court held that the obligations of the Fund to lawyer-members were deductible by the Fund as ordinary and necessary business expenses in the year of the issuance of the policy. This decision was accepted by the Internal Revenue Service in Rev. Rul. 77-266, 1977-2 C.B. 236.

Nonetheless, the changes made by the 1978 Act would disallow any deduction for amounts due to lawyer-members of the Fund until the amounts are made available to lawyer-members after the 7-year period of limitations in Florida. The resulting tax on these amounts would decrease the necessary reserves of the Fund since it is not possible to increase the premium rates of title insurance to the home buyers for policies sold during 1979. This could adversely affect the security of the home buyers.

[17] Accordingly, the committee believes that it is appropriate to delay the effective date of the change made by the 1978 Act in this case for one year until taxable years beginning after December 31, 1979. This one-year delay will provide the Fund adequate time to restructure their handling of the commissions on title insurance.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that the changes made by section 133 of the Revenue Act of 1978 are to apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1979, in the case of a qualified title title insurance company plan. A qualified title insurance company plan is a plan which defers the payment of amounts credited by a qualified title insurance company to separate accounts for members of the company in consideration of their issuance of policies of title insurance and under which no part of the credited amounts is payable to or withdrawable by the members until after the period for the adverse possession of real property under applicable State law. A qualified title insurance company is defined to mean an unincorporated title insurance company organized as a business trust which is engaged in the business of providing title insurance coverage on interest in and liens upon real property obtained by clients of the members of the company and which is subject to tax under section 831 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Effective date

This amendment is effective as if it were included in the Revenue Act of 1978.

[18] c. Nondiscriminatory participation requirements for cafeteria plans (sec. 101(a)(6)(A) of the bill and sec. 125(g)(3)(B) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, if a cafeteria plan was in existence on June 27, 1974, a participant in the plan was taxable only to the extent the participant elected taxable benefits under the plan. The 1978 Act made this favorable tax treatment applicable to all cafeteria plans meeting certain nondiscrimination standards, including a standard regarding the maximum number of years of employment which may be required as a condition of plan participation.

[1] This provision is not intended to have any effect on the issue of whether a rural electric cooperative which is not described in section 501(c)(12) may qualify for tax exempt status under section 501(a) as an organization described in section 501(c)(4).

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the use of the term "service requirement" in the cafeteria plan participation eligibility rules might lead taxpayers to believe that hours of service must be counted as they are under the qualified retirement plan participation rules (Code sec. 410(a)).

Explanation of provision

The bill makes it clear that the cafeteria plan participation standard is based on years of employment rather than years or hours of service. The committee expects that the Treasury Department will prescribe by regulation what constitutes a year of employment.

Effective date

This provision applies for plan years beginning after December 31, 1978.

d. Effective date of cafeteria plan provisions (sec. 101(a)(6)(B) of the bill and sec. 134(c) of the Act)

Present law

Under the cafeteria plan rules added by the Revenue Act of 1978, amounts required to be included in income by a highly-compensated participant because the plan does not satisfy nondiscrimination standards will be treated as received or accrued in the participant's taxable year in which the plan year ends. The cafeteria plan rules are effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

Reasons for change

Because the cafeteria plan rules apply to participants' taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, amounts contributed during 1978 under a cafeteria plan which has a fiscal plan year and which does not satisfy the new nondiscrimination rules might have to be included in income by certain participants in 1979. Thus, in certain cases, the cafeteria plan rules apply retroactively.

The committee does not believe that the cafeteria plan rules should cause amounts contributed in 1978 under a cafeteria plan which was [19] in existence on June 27, 1974, to be included in income. In addition, the committee believes that cafeteria plans in existence on June 27, 1974, should not have to be amended retroactively to comply with the new rules contained in the Revenue Act of 1978.

Explanation of provision

The bill makes the cafeteria plan provisions of the Revenue Act of 1978 effective for plan years, rather than for participants' taxable years, beginning after December 31, 1978. Thus, highly compensated participants in fiscal year plans will not have income solely because of the new cafeteria plan rules until 1980. In addition, to comply with the cafeteria plan rules, amendments to plans will not have to be effective before the beginning of the first plan year after 1978.

Effective date

This provision is effective as if it had been included in the Revenue Act of 1978 as enacted.

e. Employee stock ownership plan name change (sec. 101(a)(7)(L) of the bill and secs. 48, 409A, 4975, etc. of the Code)

Present law

Under the Revenue Act of 1978, the type of plan previously referred to as a TRASOP (or investment tax credit ESOP) was designated as an ESOP. The type of plan previously referred to as an ESOP or leveraged ESOP was designated as a leveraged employee stock ownership plan.

Reason for change

The committee has determined that the names given the respective tax-qualified employee stock ownership vehicles by the 1978 Act, do not adequately describe the types of plans involved. Accordingly, the committee has decided to give each of these plans a new name which it considers more appropriate.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, an investment tax credit ESOP or ESOP (as defined in the 1978 Act) is renamed "tax credit employee stock ownership plan" (commonly referred to as a TRASOP). Under the bill, a leveraged employee stock ownership plan is renamed "employee stock ownership plan" (commonly referred to as an ESOP).

Effective date

The amendment made by this section is effective as if it had been included in section 141 of the Revenue Act of 1978.

f. Clerical amendments relating to normalization of the investment tax credit for contributions to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan (sec. 101(a)(7)(A) of the bill and sec. 46(f)(9) of the Code)

Section 101(a)(6(A) of the bill corrects section 46(f)(9) of the Code by striking out "subparagraph (B) of subsection (a)(2)" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "subparagraph (E) of subsection (a)(2)" and by striking out "an employee stock ownership plan which meets the requirements of section 301(d) of the Tax Re- [20] duction Act of 1975 [Pub. L. 94-12, 1975-1 C.B. 545]" in subparagraph (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "a tax credit employee stock ownership plan which meets the requirements of section 409A".

g. Effective dates for tax credit employee stock ownership plans and employee stock ownership plans (sec. 101(a)(7)(B) of the bill and sec. 141(g) of the Act)

Present law

Under present law, the rules governing tax credit employee stock ownership plans and employee stock ownership plans, as enacted by the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1], are effective with respect to qualified investment for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

Reasons for change

The application of the general effective date was unclear with respect to several of the changes relating to tax credit employee stock ownership plans and employee stock ownership plans.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies the operation of the effective date provision of section 141 of the Revenue Act of 1978, which made changes in the law governing tax credit employee stock ownership plans and employee stock ownership plans. The general effective date is retained. Thus, the tax credit employee stock ownership plan changes in the 1978 Act generally apply with respect to qualified investment for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978. In addition, special effective date provisions apply to the tax credit employee stock ownership plan provisions of the Act relating to (1) voting rights, (2) the right of a tax credit employee stock ownership plan to distribute cash in lieu of employer securities (subject to the right of a participant to demand a distribution in the form of employer securities), and (3) put option requirements.

The voting rights provision applies to plans to which the new tax credit employee stock ownership plan provisions generally apply beginning with the first day of such application. A tax credit employee stock ownership plan is required to follow the new voting rights pass-through rules with respect to all employer securities held by it if additional employer securities were acquired by the tax credit employee stock ownership plan on account of qualified investment made in a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1978.

The right of a tax credit employee stock ownership plan to distribute cash in lieu of employer securities (subject to the right of a participant to demand a distribution in the form of employer securities) applies to tax credit employee stock ownership plan distributions after December 31, 1978, provided that the new tax credit employee stock ownership plan rules have become applicable to the plan.

The tax credit employee stock ownership plan put option requirements apply to employer securities which are not readily tradable on an established market and which are acquired by the tax credit employee stock ownership plan after December 31, 1978, on account of a qualified investment made after that date. Your committee deleted the House-passed provision which provided that the employer is permitted to elect to have the 1978 Act put option rules in the Act apply to all employer securities held by the tax credit employee stock ownership plan which are not readily tradable on an established market. [21] The House-passed provision provided that the election could be revoked only with the consent of the Secretary. Your committee deleted the House-passed provision, which allows an employer to elect to have the new put option rules apply to all employer securities held by a tax credit employee stock ownership plan which are not readily tradable on an established market, because it understands that the Secretary of the Treasury has existing authority to allow the election and the revocation of the election of the 1978 Act put option rules with respect to employer securities held by a tax credit employee stock ownership plan.

The bill as passed by the House also allows taxpayers to elect irrevocably to accelerate the general effective date by a year. In such a case, the tax credit employee stock ownership plan changes would apply with respect to qualified investment for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1977. The committee amended this provision to require that, with respect to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan in existence on December 31, 1978, if such an election is made, contributions for the year of the election would have to be allocated under the pre-1978 Act rules. The committee was concerned that an election by a tax credit employee stock ownership plan in existence on December 31, 1978, to have the 1978 Act tax credit employee stock ownership plan rules apply one year early would allow an employer to change the allocation formula, with the result that some employees covered by the tax credit employee stock ownership plan who would have been entitled to an allocation of employer securities to their accounts under the pre-1978 Act tax credit employee stock ownership plan rules would be denied the allocation because of the retroactive election of the 1978 Act tax credit employee stock ownership plan rules.

The bill also would provide effective dates for the changes made by the 1978 Act relating to employee stock ownership plans. These changes concern (1) voting rights, (2) put option requirements, and (3) the right of an employee stock ownership plan to distribute cash in lieu of employer securities (subject to the right of a participant to demand a distribution in the form of employer securities).

Under the bill, in the case of qualifying employer securities acquired by an employee stock ownership plan after December 31, 1979, the plan is required (1) to pass through voting rights to plan participants on such securities, under certain circumstances, and (2) to give participants put options on qualifying employer securities which are not readily tradable on an established market. The committee expects that, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, an employee stock ownership plan could treat qualifying employer securities acquired by it prior to January 1, 1980, under the new voting rights and put option provisions, but is not required to do so.

The right of an employee stock ownership plan to distribute cash in lieu of employer securities (subject to the right of a participant to demand a distribution in the form of employer securities) applies to distributions made after December 31, 1978. (Under the House-passed bill the effective date for such cash distributions from employee stock ownership plans was December 31, 1979.)

Effective date

The amendment made by this section is effective as if it had been included in section 141 of the Revenue Act of 1978.

[22] h. Definition of qualifying employer security for employee stock ownership plans (sec. 101(a)(7)(C) of the bill and sec. 4975(e)(8) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, employee stock ownership plans are subject to certain special rules with respect to qualifying employer securities held by the plans.

Reasons for change

The Revenue Act of 1978 made certain changes in the rules governing employee stock ownership plans. Because of these changes, the definition of qualifying employer securities, as it relates to such plans, is unclear.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that, for purposes of the rules governing employee stock ownership plans, the term "qualifying employer securities" is defined in the same manner as the term "employer securities" in the case of tax credit employee stock ownership plans. This definition generally includes readily tradable common stock of the employer and preferred stock convertible into such readily tradable common stock.

Effective date

This provision applies to stock acquired after December 31, 1979.

i. Nonrecognition of gain or loss on contribution to tax credit employee stock ownership plans (sec. 101(a)(7)(D) of the bill and sec. 409A(m) of the Code)

Present law

Generally, under present law, no gain or loss would be recognized by a corporation which makes a required contribution to a tax credit ownership plan of employer securities issued by a related corporation.

Reasons for change

For technical reasons, this rule, as enacted by the Revenue Act of 1978, did not apply to all required contributions of such employer securities to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that no gain or loss is recognized by an employer on the required transfer of employer securities to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan which it maintains.

Effective date

The amendment is effective with respect to qualified investment for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

j. Employee stock ownership plans may distribute cash in certain cases (sec. 101(a)(7)(E) of the bill and sec. 409A(h)(2) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, employee stock ownership plans are required to meet certain rules also applicable to tax credit employee stock ownership plans. These rules relate to the past-through of voting rights to participants and to participants' rights to demand employer securities.

[23] Reasons for change

Under the Revenue Act of 1978, it was not clear whether an employee stock ownership plan which meets these rules may distribute cash in lieu of employer securities to a participant entitled to a distribution from the plan.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that, like a tax credit employee stock ownership plan, an employee stock ownership plan may (subject to a participant's right to require a distribution in the form of employer securities) distribute cash in lieu of employer securities to a participant entitled to a distribution from the plan.

Effective date

This provision is effective with respect to distributions made after December 31, 1978.

k. Matched employer and employee contributions must stay in plan (sec. 101(a)(7)(F) of the bill and sec. 409A(d) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, employer securities allocated to a participant's account under a tax credit employee stock ownership plan cannot be distributed from that account for an 84-month period. Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, this rule applied to securities contributed by the employer attributable to the additional one percent investment tax credit and to securities attributable to matched employer and employee contributions under the additional one-half percent investment tax credit rules.

Reasons for change

Under the Revenue Act of 1978, it is unclear whether the rule applies to securities attributable to matched employer and employee contributions.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the rule requiring matched employer and employee contributions to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan to remain in the plan for an 84-month period is still applicable. This is consistent with the provisions of the 1978 Act which continue the pre-1978 Act rule that employer contributions to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan may be made for the taxable year in which the additional investment tax credit is allowed regardless of when timely matching employee contributions are made.

Effective date

This provision is effective with respect to qualified investment for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

l. Amount of matching employer contributions to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan (sec. 101(a)(7)(G) of the bill and sec. 48(n)(1)(B) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, a corporate employer is entitled to an additional percentage point of investment tax credit (i.e., 11 percent rather than [24] 10 percent) if it contributes an amount equal to the additional credit to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan. In addition to the one-percent credit, up to ½ percent of extra investment tax credit is allowed where an employer contributes the extra credit amount to the tax credit employee stock ownership plan, and the employer's extra contribution is matched by employee contributions.

Reasons for change

The provisions relating to tax credit employee stock ownership plans, as amended by the Revenue Act of 1978, do not provide for a limitation on the amount of employee contributions which must be matched by the employer as a condition of taking the extra investment tax credit.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, an employer is eligible for an extra investment tax credit attributable to matching employee contributions if it transfers to the tax credit employee stock ownership plan employer securities having an aggregate value equal to the lesser of (1) the total matching employee contributions or (2) ½ percent of its qualified investment for the taxable year.

Effective date

The amendment made by this section is effective as if it had been included in section 141 of the Revenue Act of 1978.

m. Time for contribution of matching employer contributions to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan (sec. 101(a)(7)(H) of the bill and sec 48(n)(1)(C) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, a corporate employer is entitled to an additional percentage point of investment credit (11 percent rather than 10 percent) if it contributes an amount equal to the additional credit to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan. In addition to the one-percent credit, up to ½ percent of extra investment tax credit is allowed where an employer contributes the extra credit amount to the tax credit employee stock ownership plan and the employer's extra contribution is matched by employee contributions.

Generally, to be eligible for the additional tax credit, employee contributions of cash or pledges must be received by the due date (including extensions) for filing the employee's tax return for the taxable year and the employer is required to transfer employer securities or cash to the tax credit employee stock ownership plan not later than 30 days after the due date (including extensions) for filing the employer's return for the taxable year.

Reasons for change

It is unclear whether the employer could transfer employer securities or cash to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan with respect to the extra ½ percent investment tax credit at a time later than 30 days after the due date (including extensions) for filing the employer's return for the taxable year for which the employer claims the additional one-percent credit with respect to employee contributions made after that date.

[25] Explanation of provision

The bill makes it clear that the Secretary may, by regulations, provide that the matching employer contributions to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan could be made later than 30 days after the due date (including extensions) for filing the employer's return for the taxable year for which the employer claims the additional one-percent credit, provided that the employer did not claim a credit for the matching employer contribution for the taxable year and provided that such matching employer contributions are made with respect to matching employee contributions made after the due date for the return.

Effective date

The amendment made by this section is effective as if it had been included in section 141 of the Revenue Act of 1978.

n. Time for establishing a tax credit employee stock ownership plan (sec. 101(a)(7)(I) of the bill and sec. 409A(f)(1) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, a tax-qualified plan had to be established by the close of the first taxable year for which the employer maintaining the plan claimed a deduction or credit for a plan contribution. Many tax credit employee stock ownership plans are not established until the income tax filing deadline (including extensions) for the first taxable year for which the employer maintaining the plan first claims an additional investment tax credit with respect to the plan. Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, this caused many tax credit employee stock ownership plans not to be tax-qualified for the first year of their existence.

The Revenue Act of 1978 required tax credit employee stock ownership plans to be tax-qualified. It also created an exception for tax credit employee stock ownership plans from the general rule requiring tax-qualified plans to be established by the close of the first taxable year for which an employer claims a deduction or credit for a plan contribution.

Reasons for change

While the Revenue Act of 1978 relieved tax credit employee stock ownership plans of the requirement that a tax-qualified plan be established by the close of the first taxable year for which an employer maintaining the plan claims a deduction or credit for a plan contribution, the 1978 Act was not clear as to the date by which a tax credit stock ownership plan does have to be established for the first year of its existence.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, a tax credit employee stock ownership plan does not have to be established by the close of the first taxable year for which the employer maintaining the plan claims an additional investment tax credit with respect to the plan. However, in order for the tax credit employee stock ownership plan to be tax-qualified for the first-year of its existence as required under present law, it must be established [26] by the income tax filing deadline (including extensions) for the first taxable year for which the employer maintaining the plan claims an additional investment tax credit with respect to the plan.

Effective date

The amendment made by this section is effective as if it had been included in section 141 of the Revenue Act of 1978.

o. Definition of employer securities for tax credit employee stock ownership plan and employee stock ownership plan purposes (sec. 101(a)(7)(J) of the bill and sec. 409A(1) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, in the case of a tax credit employee stock ownership plan, the only types of employer securities which may be acquired and held by the plan are (1) common stock of the corporation which is readily tradable on an established securities market and (2) noncallable preferred stock of the issuing corporation which is readily convertible into such common stock. The shares acquired by a tax credit employee stock ownership plan, other than shares which are readily tradable on an established securities market, must have a combination of (1) voting rights equivalent to rights possessed by shareholders of the class of common stock of the issuing corporation having the greatest voting rights and (2) dividend rights equivalent to rights possessed by shareholders of that class of stock of the issuing corporation having the greatest dividend rights.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that a technical correction to the definition of qualifying employer securities with respect to tax credit employee stock ownership plans and employee stock ownership plans is necessary to make it clear (1) that where an employer contributes securities which are not readily tradable on an established securities market, the securities must have a combination of voting power and dividend rights equal to or in excess of the greatest voting power and dividend rights of any classes of common stock of the corporation; (2) that preferred stock convertible to such common stock which is not readily tradable could be contributed; and (3) that noncallable preferred stock would include stock which could be called provided that the holder of the stock could receive other employer securities either by conversion or in exchange for the securities surrendered pursuant to the call.

Explanation of provision

The bill makes three changes to the definition of employer securities which are applicable to both tax credit employee stock ownership plans and employee stock ownership plans.

First, the bill makes it clear that where the employer does not have a class of common stock which is readily tradable on an established market, the employer can contribute stock having a combination of voting power and dividend rights at least equal to the greatest voting power and dividend rights of any classes of common stock of the corporation.

[27] Second, the bill makes it clear that the definition of employer securities includes preferred stock which is convertible into such common stock which is not readily tradable.

Third, the bill provides that, under regulations to be issued by the Secretary, preferred stock is to be treated as noncallable if, after the call, the holder of the securities has a reasonable opportunity to convert the securities to common stock. The committee also intends that preferred stock will be treated as noncallable if, pursuant to the call the holder of the securities receives solely employer securities in exchange for the securities.

These changes to the definition of employer securities for the purpose of employee stock ownership plans, as well as the Technical Corrections Act provision which conforms the definition of qualifying employer securities for the purpose of employee stock ownership plans to the definition of employer securities for the purpose of tax credit employee stock ownership plans, are intended to make no change in the status of qualifying employer securities contributed to employee stock ownership plans before December 31, 1979, the general effective date of the 1978 Act changes affecting employee stock ownership plans.

Under the House bill, the definition of employer securities with respect to an employee stock ownership plan is the same as the definition of employer securities with respect to a tax credit employee stock ownership plan.

Effective date

The amendment made by this section is effective as if it had been included in section 141 of the Revenue Act of 1978.

p. Voting rights for participants in employee stock ownership plans (sec. 101(a)(7)(K) of the bill and sec. 4975(e)(7) of the Code)

Present law

Under the Revenue Act of 1978, an employee stock ownership plan is required to pass through to plan participants voting rights with respect to qualifying employer securities held by the plan. If the plan is maintained by an employer which has a registration-type class of securities, the vote pass-through requirement applies generally. If the plan is maintained by an employer which does not have a registration-type class of securities, the vote pass-through requirement applies only with respect to major corporate issues (e.g., mergers, consolidations, sales of substantially all of a corporation's assets).

Also, under the Revenue Act of 1978, a defined contribution plan which is established by an employer the stock of which is not publicly traded is required to pass through to plan participants voting rights on major corporate issues. This vote pass-through applies only if, after December 31, 1979, the plan acquires securities of the employer and, after the acquisition, more than 10 percent of the plan's assets are invested in such securities.

Reasons for change

Under the Revenue Act of 1978, an employee stock ownership plan maintained by an employer the stock of which is not publicly traded [28] may be subject to vote pass-through rules with respect to employer securities under two separate provisions of the Code. The committee believes that this duplication should be eliminated by deleting the special vote pass-through rule for employee stock ownership plans maintained by an employer which does not have a registration-type class of securities.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, an employee stock ownership plan maintained by an employer which does not have a registration-type class of securities will be required to pass through voting rights to plan participants only under the vote pass-through rule generally applicable to defined contribution plans. Thus, the vote pass-through will be required only (1) with respect to major corporate issues, (2) if the plan is maintained by an employer the stock of which is not publicly traded, and (3), if after acquiring securities of the employer, more than 10 percent of the plan's assets are in such securities.

Effective date

The amendment made by this section is effetcive as if it had been included in section 141 of the Revenue Act of 1978.

q. Coordination of deduction for estate tax attributable to income in respect of a decedent and income tax on lump sum distributions from retirement plans (sec. 101(a)(8)(A) of the bill and sec. 691(c)(5) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, lump sum distributions from qualified pension, profit-sharing, and stock bonus plans are eligible for special income tax treatment. With respect to the portion of the distribution attributable to the employee's participation in the plan after December 31, 1973, a special 10-year averaging formula is provided. With respect to the portion of the distribution attributable to the employee's participation before January 1, 1974, capital gain treatment generally is allowable.

When a beneficiary receiving a lump sum distribution on account of the death of an employee elects to be taxed under the 10-year averaging rules, the distribution is includible in the deceased employee's gross estate and the amount of the distribution is subject to an estate tax. The recipient of the distribution is allowed a separate income tax deduction for the death taxes attributable to that distribution (Code sec. 691(c)).

The Revenue Act of 1978 added a provision which coordinated this deduction for state taxes with the capital gain deduction so that the amount of any capital gain which is income in respect of a decedent is offset by the deduction for estate taxes before the capital gain deduction is computed.

Reasons for change

The Revenue Act of 1978 did not provide a rule to coordinate the use of the special 10-year forward income averaging method with the deduction for estate taxes.

[29] Explanation of provision

The bill provides that the amount of a death benefit distribution subject to 10-year averaging is reduced by the amount of the death tax deduction attributable to the distribution. This will have the effect of reducing the amount of the distribution eligible for the special 10-year averaging formula by the death tax adjustment. This provision will not affect the computation of the minimum distribution allowance (under Code sec. 402(e)(1)(D)).

Effective date

The provision applies with respect to estates of decedents dying after the date of enactment of the bill.

r. Unrealized appreciation in employer securities (sec. 101(a)(8)(B) of the bill and sec. 2039(f)(2) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, lump sum death benefit distributions from tax-qualified pension, etc., plans were includible in the deceased plan participant's gross estate for Federal estate tax purposes. The 1978 Act provided for an estate tax exclusion for such a distribution provided the recipient elects to forego favorable income tax treatment of the distribution.

Reasons for change

Under the Revenue Act of 1978, it is not clear whether the recipient of a lump sum death benefit distribution from a tax-qualified pension, etc., plan, who elects to forego favorable income tax treatment of the distribution in order for the distribution to be excludible from the deceased plan participant's gross estate for Federal estate tax purposes, may exclude from gross income the net unrealized appreciation on any employer securities distributed from the plan.

Explanation of provision

The bill makes it clear that, if an individual receives a lump sum death benefit distribution from a tax-qualified pension, etc., plan and elects to forego favorable income tax treatment of the distribution in order for the distribution to be excluded from the deceased plan participant's gross estate for Federal estate tax purposes, the election will not preclude the recipient from excluding from gross income the net unrealized appreciation on any employer securities distributed from the plan.

Effective date

The amendment made by this section is effective as if it had been included in section 142 of the Revenue Act of 1978.

s. Clerical amendment relating to voting rights on employer securities held by qualified plans and other clerical amendments (secs. 101(a)(7)(M) and (a)(9) of the bill and secs. 46(a)(2)(E), 48(n)(2)(B), 48(o)(5), and 401(a)(22) of the Code)

Section 101(a)(7)(M)(i) of the bill corrects section 46(a)(2)(E) of the Code by inserting "and ending on" before "December 31, 1983" each place it appears.

[30] Section 101(a)(7)(M)(ii) of the bill corrects section 48(n)(2)(B) of the Code by striking clause (ii). The Committee believes this clause is redundant because, under the 1978 Act, tax credit employee stock ownership plans must meet the nondiscrimination requirements applicable to qualified plans.

Section 101(a)(7)(M)(iii) of the bill corrects section 48(o) of the Code by inserting "percentage" after "attributable to the matching employee plan."

Section 101(a)(9) of the bill corrects section 401(a)(22) of the Code by striking "as securities" and inserting in lieu thereof "are securities".

[31] 4. Technical Amendments Relating to Retirement Plans

a. Exclusion of certain employees from participation in simplified employee pensions (sec. 101(a)(10)(A) of the bill and sec. 408(k)(2) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 created a new type of individual retirement plan, known as a simplified employee pension. Employer contributions to simplified employee pensions must not discriminate in favor of employees who are officers, shareholders, or highly compensated. In testing employer contributions for discrimination, certain employees who are included in a collective bargaining unit or who are nonresident aliens may be excluded from consideration. However, the simplified employee pension rules may have required employers to include these employees in the group of employees who are entitled to share in employer contributions to simplified employee pensions.

Reasons for change

The requirement that certain collective bargaining unit employees or nonresident aliens share in employer contributions to simplified employee pensions even though these employees can be excluded from consideration in testing whether simplified employee pensions are discriminatory is inconsistent with the purpose of the simplified employee pension provisions and with the corresponding provisions of the Internal Revenue Code relating to tax-qualified pension plans.

Explanation of provision

The bill permits certain employees who are included in a collective bargaining unit or who are nonresident aliens to be excluded from the group of employees who are entitled to share in employer contributions to simplified employee pensions.

Effective date

The provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978. This is the same effective date as was provided by the Revenue Act of 1978 with respect to simplified employee pensions.

b. Exemption from FICA and FUTA taxes for employer contributions to simplified employee pensions (sec. 101(a)(10)(B) of the bill and secs. 3121(a)(5) and 3306(b)(5) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 created a new type of individual retirement plan, known as a simplified employee pension. Under present law, employer contributions to an IRA (individual retirement account, annuity, or retirement bond of an employee are considered remuneration subject to FICA and FUTA taxes, but employer contributions with respect to an employee to a tax-qualified plan are not [32] subject to these taxes. The 1978 Act did not specify whether employer contributions to a simplified employee pension were subject to FICA or FUTA taxes.

Reasons for change

Employer contributions to a tax-qualified pension plan on behalf of an employee are exempt from FICA and FUTA taxes. The absence of a corresponding exemption for employer contributions to simplified employee pensions is an unintended barrier to the establishment of simplified employee pensions.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, an amount paid by an employer to an employee's individual retirement account or annuity is not subject to FICA or FUTA taxes if the account or annuity is a simplified employee pension and it is reasonable to believe that the employee will be entitled to deduct the payments under the IRA rules applicable to simplified employee pensions.

Effective date

This provision applies for payments made on or after January 1, 1979. This is the same effective date as was provided by the 1978 Act with respect to simplified employee pensions.

c. Clarification of rules relating to excess contributions to simplified employee pensions (sec. 101(a)(10)(C) of the bill and sec. 408(d)(5)(A) of the Code)

Present law

The rules relating to individual retirement accounts and annuities permit the withdrawal of an excess contribution (other than a rollover contribution) without the usual 10 percent additional income tax on early distributions to the extent no deduction was allowed for the contribution. The early distribution tax applies, however, if the amount contributed for the year exceeds $1,750 and the excess is not withdrawn by the time for filing the tax return for the year of the excess contribution (including extensions). Under present law, deductible contributions to individual retirement accounts and annuities may not exceed $1,750, except in the case of a simplified employee pension where contributions up to $7,500 may be deductible. No dollar limitation applies to an excess rollover contribution. Consequently, if an excess contribution is made by an employer to an individual retirement account or annuity of an employee under the simplified employee pension rules and the amount of the contribution is greater than $1,750, the 10 percent additional income tax could apply if the excess is not withdrawn in time.

Reasons for change

The $1,750 limit of present law is not appropriate for employer contributions to simplified employee pensions because up to $7,500 of such contributions for a taxable year may be deductible.

Explanation of provision

The bill permits an individual to withdraw excess employer contributions to a simplified employee pension free of the 10-percent addi- [33] tional income tax where the withdrawal does not exceed the amount of the employer contribution or $7,500, whichever is less. The bill does not affect the treatment of contributions other than excess employer contributions.

Effective date

This provision applies for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978. This is the same effective date as was provided for simplified employee pensions under the Revenue Act of 1978.

d. Contributions to simplified employee pensions after age 70½ (sec. 101(a)(10)(D) of the bill and sec. 219(b)(7) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 created a new type of individual retirement plan, known as a simplified employee pension. Under the rules for simplified employee pensions, an employer may be obligated to contribute to the individual retirement account or annuity of an employee who has attained age 70½. Under the usual rules for individual retirement accounts and annuities, such a contribution is includible in the gross income of the employee but the contribution is not deductible by the employee and is considered an excess IRA contribution.

Reasons for change

Contributions by a corporation, a sole proprietorship, or a partnership to a tax-qualified pension plan on behalf of an individual who has attained age 70½ are deductible (within limits) under present law. The nondeductibility of employer contributions to the simplified employee pension of an employee who has attained age 70½ is an unintended barrier to the establishment of simplified employee pensions.

Explanation of provision

The bill allows an employee who has attained age 70½ to deduct employer contributions to the employee's individual retirement account or annuity if the account or annuity is a simplified employee pension.

Effective date

This provision applies for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978. This is the same effective date as was provided for simplified employee pensions under the Revenue Act of 1978.

e. Coordination of H.R. 10 plans and subchapter S corporation plans with simplified employee pensions (secs. 101(a)(10)(E) and (F) of the bill and secs. 404(h)(4) and 408(k) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 created a new type of individual retirement plan, known as a simplified employee pension. Under the Act, if an employer maintains a defined contribution H.R. 10 plan for a self-employed individual and contributes to a simplified employee pension for that individual, the limitation on the employer's deduction for the contribution to the H.R. 10 plan is reduced by the deduction allowed for [34] the contribution to the simplified employee pension so that the limitation on the total deductible amount set aside for that individual is not increased.

Reasons for change

The rules for simplified employee plans do not provide for coordination with the rules for defined benefit plans of self-employed individuals or with rules for plans covering shareholder-employees of subchapter S corporations.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, the limitation on the amount that may be set aside tax free in a defined contribution plan by a subchapter S corporation on behalf of a shareholder-employee is reduced by the amount deducted by the employer for contributions to the simplified employee pension of that employee. Also, the bill does not allow an employer who maintains a defined benefit plan for self-employed individuals or shareholder-employees to contribute to simplified employee pensions.

Effective date

This provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978. This is the same effective date as was provided by the Revenue Act of 1978 for simplified employee pensions.

f. Integration of simplified employee pensions with Social Security (sec. 101(a)(10)(G) of the bill and sec. 408(k)(3) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, employer contributions to the individual retirement accounts or annuities of employees can qualify as employer contributions to the simplified employee pensions of employees if an employer contribution is made to the individual retirement account or annuity of each employee who is entitled to a contribution.[1] Although the employer's contributions must generally bear a uniform relationship to the total compensation of each employee, these contributions can be integrated with the Social Security system. Under the integration rules, which are generally similar to the rules for integrated H.R. 10 plans, if certain requirements are met, the employer contribution on behalf of an employee is reduced by the amount of Social Security tax to be imposed on the employer with respect to the employee's wages. As under an integrated H.R. 10 plan, contributions for owner-employees are reduced by the amount of the self-employment tax imposed on the individual's earnings and, in the case of a self-employed individual other than an owner-employee, by an amount equal to the Social Security tax which would have been imposed if the individual's earnings from self-employment were wages.

[1] Each employee who has (1) attained age 25 and (2) performed service for the employer during any 3 of the immediately preceding 5 calendar years must be entitled to a contribution.

Reasons for change

Under the 1978 Act, it is not clear whether an employer could make integrated contributions to the simplified employee pension of an employee while maintaining an integrated qualified pension, profit-sharing, or stock bonus plan for the same employee (possibly reducing the employee's benefits twice with respect to the same benefits or contributions considered to be provided by the employer under Social Security).

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies present law by providing that an employer may not make integrated contributions to simplified employee pensions for a year in which the employer maintains an integrated pension, etc., plan. Although it is possible to design rules which would permit partial integration of a simplified employee pension where a partially integrated pension, etc. plan is maintained, the committee believes that the complexity of the rules for partial integration would be inconsistent with the committee's intent in providing for simplified employee pensions. The House bill did not include any similar provision.

[36] Effective date

The amendment applies for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978. This is the same effective date as was provided by the Revenue Act of 1978 for simplified employee pensions.

g. Penalty for failure to file reports (secs. 101(a)(10)(H) and 101(b)(1)(F) of the bill and sec. 6693(a) of the Code)

Present law

The rules relating to simplified employee pensions provide that if an employer contributes to a simplified employee pension, the employer may be required by Treasury regulations to file simplified reports with the Internal Revenue Service and to furnish reports to employees.

Reason for change

It is not clear that present law provides a penalty for an employer's failure to file or furnish the reports with respect to simplified employee pensions.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that a penalty of $10 per report applies to each failure to furnish a report required under the rules for simplified employee pensions, unless the failure is due to reasonable cause. This is the same penalty that is applicable under present law for a trustee's failure to provide certain reports with respect to individual retirement accounts or annuities. The House bill did not include any similar provision.

Effective date

The amendment applies with respect to failures occurring after the date of enactment of the bill.

h. Aggregation of simplified employee pensions (secs. 101(a)(10)(I) and 101(b)(1)(G) of the bill and sec. 415(e)(5) of the Code)

Present law

The Code provides limits on the annual addition to the account of a participant in a profit-sharing or other defined contribution plan. For this purpose, annual additions consist of employer contributions, reallocated forfeitures, and a portion of employee contributions.

The limits are applied to the aggregate of all defined contribution plans maintained by an employer. If the employer is in a controlled group of companies (whether or not incorporated), the limits are applied to the aggregate of all defined contribution plans maintained by the group. Under the rules, employer contributions to the simplified employee pension of an employee are aggregated with other employer contributions to defined contribution plans only if the employee has direct or indirect control of the employer.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that, under the limitation provisions, it is appropriate to treat employer contributions to simplified employee pensions as employer contributions to a defined contribution plan [37] maintained by the employer regardless of the ownership of the employer or the employer's trade or business.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, if an employer contributes to a simplified employee pension, the contribution is taken into account as an employer contribution to a defined contribution plan regardless of the ownership of the employer or of the employer's trade or business. The bill does not change the rule of present law under which employee contributions to an individual retirement account or annuity, or a retirement bond are treated as employer contributions to a defined contribution plan maintained by an employer where the employee has the requisite control of the employer. The House bill did not include any similar provision.

Effective date

The amendment applies for years beginning after the date of enactment of the bill.

i. Clerical amendments relating to simplified employee pensions (sec. 101(a)(10)(K) of the bill, secs. 408(j)(1), 404(h)(2), (3), and (4) of the Code, and sec. 152(g)(2) of the Act)

A clerical amendment is made to section 408(j)(1) to remove an unnecessary reference to section 408(b)(5). Clerical amendments are made to sections 404(h)(2), (3), and (4) to correct an inaccurate reference to section 404(h)(1). A clerical amendment is made to section 152(g)(2) of the Revenue Act of 1978 to correct an inaccurate reference to section 415(a)(2) of the Code.

j. Special limits on benefits under certain defined benefit pension plans (sec. 101(a)(11)(A) of the bill and sec. 415(b)(7) of the Code)

Present law

Under the Code, limits are provided for benefits and contributions under tax-qualified plans, individual retirement plans, and tax-sheltered annuities. Generally, under those rules, benefits under a defined benefit pension plan may not exceed 100 percent of a participant's average high 3-year compensation. An exception to the 100-percent limit was provided by the Revenue Act of 1978 for participants in certain collectively bargained plans.

Reasons for change

The 1978 Act did not provide for situations in which an employee participates in more than one plan maintained by a single employer.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, the exception to the 100-percent limit is restricted to an employee who is a participant in a collectively bargained plan where the employee does not participate in any other plan (subject to the limits on benefits or contributions) maintained by an employer who maintains the collectively bargained plan.

Effective date

This provision applies for years beginning after December 31, 1978. This is the same as the effective date provided by the 1978 Act for the exception to the 100-percent limitation.

[38] k. Limitations for certain collectively bargained pension plans (sec. 101(a)(11)(B) of the bill and sec. 415(b)(7)(C) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, benefits under a qualified defined benefit pension plan generally were limited to the lesser of 100 percent of pay or $75,000 per year, adjusted for inflation since 1974 ($98,100 for 1979). The Act provides that 100-percent-of-pay limit is disregarded, and the $75,000 limit is reduced to $37,500 (adjusted for inflation since 1974), in the case of certain large collectively bargained plans under which each employee who serves during a particular year earns the same pension credit. Under the 1978 Act, the pension credit for a participant must be determined without regard to age at retirement or date of retirement.

Reasons for change

It was intended that the factors of age at retirement and date of retirement be permitted to be taken into account by a plan under the exception to the 100-percent-of-pay limit.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the 100-percent-of-pay limit applies in the case of certain large collectively bargained plans where the amount of the pension credit for a particular employee is based solely on one or more of the following factors: (1) the length of service, (2) the particular years during which service was rendered, (3) the age at retirement, and (4) the date of retirement.

Effective date

The provision applies for years beginning after December 31, 1978. This is the same effective date as was provided by the Revenue Act of 1978 for the exception to the 100-percent-of-pay limit.

l. Clerical amendments regarding tax-sheltered annuities (sec. 101(a)(12) of the bill and sec. 403(b)(7) of the Code)

Section 403(b)(7)(A) is amended by striking "which satisfied" and inserting in lieu thereof "which satisfies".

m. Effective date of section 403(b) annuity rollovers and transitional rule for payments received in 1978 (sec. 101(a)(13) of the bill and sec. 156(d) of the Act)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, recipients of distributions under a tax-sheltered annuity purchased by certain employers which are tax-exempt organizations or public schools were not eligible to defer tax on those distributions by rolling the distributions over to an individual retirement plan (an individual retirement account or annuity, or a retirement bond). The Act permits the recipient of a lump-sum distribution from a tax-sheltered annuity to defer tax on the distribution by rolling it over within 60 days of receipt to an IRA or to another tax-sheltered annuity. Due to a clerical error, as enacted, the rollover provision applies to distributions or transfers made after December 31, 1978, in taxable years beginning after that date.

[39] Reasons for change

The conferees on the Revenue Act of 1978 intended that the tax-sheltered annuity rollover provisions would be available for lump sum distributions received after December 31, 1977. To carry out the original intent of the conferees, the committee believes it is necessary to provide an extended rollover period for recipients of distributions in 1978 who could not have satisfied the requirement that amounts distributed must be rolled over within 60 days of receipt.

Explanation of provision

The bill makes the tax-sheltered annuity rollover provisions effective for distributions or transfers made after December 31, 1977, in taxable years beginning after that date. In addition, the bill provides that the recipient of a qualifying distribution in 1978 will have until December 31, 1980, to complete a rollover to either an IRA or another tax-sheltered annuity. Upon completion of the rollover, the recipient of a qualifying distribution in 1978 will be able to amend his or her 1978 income tax return to take into account the portion of the distribution originally included in income which is no longer subject to tax because of the rollover.

The bill also makes a clerical amendment to Code sections 403(b)(1) and 4973(c)(1) by inserting "409(b)(3)(C)" in lieu of "409(d)(3)(C)".

Effective date

This provision is effective as if it had been included in the Revenue Act of 1978 as enacted.

n. Clerical amendments regarding IRAs (secs. 101(a)(14)(A) and (B) of the bill, sec. 157(h)(3) of the Act, and secs. 219(b)(4), 220 (b)(5), 408(a)(1), 409(a)(4), and 4973(b)(1)(A) of the Code)

Section 101(a)(14)(A) of the bill corrects section 157(h)(3) of the 1978 Act by striking out "the amendments made by this section" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "the amendments made by this subsection".

Section 101(a)(14)(B) of the bill corrects sections 219(b)(4), 220(b)(5), 408(a)(1), 409(a)(4), and 4973 (b)(1)(A) of the Code by inserting "402(a)(7)," after "section 402(a)(5),".

o. Spousal rollovers (sec. 101(a)(14)(C) of the bill and sec. 402(a)(7)(A) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, a surviving spouse who receives a lump sum death benefit distribution from a tax-qualified plan is permitted to make a rollover of the distribution to an IRA. Rollovers, however, are not permitted for complete distributions to surviving spouses upon termination of tax-qualified retirement plans.

Reasons for change

The Revenue Act of 1978, as enacted, did not make clear that a distribution to a surviving spouse upon plan termination is eligible for rollover treatment.

[40] Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that a lump sum distribution from, or complete distribution upon termination of, a qualified plan which is paid to the surviving spouse of a deceased plan participant, and which is attributable to the participant, is eligible for rollover treatment.

Effective date

This provision applies to distributions completed after December 31, 1978, in taxable years ending after that date.

p. Extension of transitional rule relating to removal of five-year requirement for a rollover (sec. 101(a)(14)(D) of the bill and sec. 157 (h)(3)(B) of the Act)

Present law

Under present law, generally an individual who receives a lump sum distribution from a tax-qualified retirement plan is eligible to roll over all or a portion of the distribution without regard to the individual's years of participation under the plan.

However, prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, an individual was required to be a participant in a tax-qualified retirement plan for five years in order to qualify for a rollover to an IRA (or to another tax-qualified retirement plan) of a lump sum distribution from the plan. The 1978 Act eliminated this five-year requirement for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1977, and permitted individuals denied the opportunity for a rollover during 1978, because of the five-year requirement, to complete their rollovers at any time before January 1, 1979.

Reasons for change

The commitee believes that individuals denied the opportunity for a rollover during 1978 because of the five-year requirement were not given sufficient time after enactment of the Act to complete a rollover.

Explanation of provision

The bill permits individuals denied rollover treatment of distributions from tax-qualified retirement plans during 1978, solely because of the five-year plan participation requirement, to make such rollovers until the end of 1980.

Effective date

This amendment would apply to payments made in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1977.

q. Clerical amendments regarding IRAs (secs. 101(a)(14)(E)(i) and (ii) of the bill and secs. 402(a)(6)(D) and 408(d)(5)(B) of the Code)

Section 101(a)(14)(E)(i) of the bill corrects section 402(a)(6)(D) of the Code by striking "many designate" and inserting in lieu thereof "may designate".

Section 101(a)(14)(ii) of the bill corrects section 408(d)(5)(B) of the Code by striking all that follows clause (i) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(ii) the information was erroneous, subparagraph (A) shall be applied by increasing the dollar limit set [41] forth therein by that portion of the excess contribution which was attributable to such information."

r. Correction of cross references in Code section 401(a)(20) (sec. 101 (a)(14)(E)(iii) of the bill and sec. 401(a)(20) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the enactment of Public Law 95-458 [1978-2 C.B. 367], section 401(a)(20) included cross references to sections 402(a)(5) and 403(a)(4) of the Code for the purpose of making it clear that certain total distributions on termination of a tax-qualified pension plan do not result in the disqualification of the plan. Public Law 95-458 amended sections 402(a)(5) and 403 (a)(4) of the Code.

Reasons for change

Public Law 95-458 which amended sections 402(a)(5) and 403(a)(4) of the Code did not make conforming amendments to cross references to those sections in section 401(a)(20) of the Code.

Explanation of provision

The bill conforms the cross references to sections 402(a)(5) and 403 (a)(4) of the Code in section 401(a) (20) of the Code to reflect the changes made to sections 402(a)(5) and 403 (a)(4) of the Code by Public Law 95-458. Thus, the bill makes it clear that certain total distributions on termination of a tax-qualified pension plan do not result in the disqualification of the plan.

Effective date

The amendment made by this section is effective as if it had been included in section 157 of the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1].

[42] 5. Technical Amendments Relating to Tax Shelter and Partnership Provisions

a. Correction of attribution rules for at risk provision (sec. 102(a)(1)(A) of the bill and sec. 465(a) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, the only types of corporations to which the at risk rules (Code sec. 465) applied were subchapter S corporations and personal holding companies. The 1978 Act extended the application of at risk rules to certain closely held corporations (even though they would not qualify as personal holding companies and had not made subchapter S elections). The closely held corporations to which these rules were extended included any corporation in which five or fewer individuals owned 50 percent or more of the stock. However, in determining whether this ownership test is met, the attribution rules of Code section 318, rather than those of Code section 544, are to be applied.[1]

In general, the attribution rules of section 318 are much narrower than those of section 544, which, inter alia, provide for attribution of one partner's stock to another partner in the same partnership and for broader family and corporate attribution. Under section 544, stock in one corporation (the "subsidiary") owned by another corporation (the "parent") is attributed to the parent's shareholders in proportion to the shareholders' ownership in the parent. However, under section 318, the stock of a subsidiary corporation is considered as owned by a shareholder of the parent corporation only if the shareholder owns 50 percent or more in value of the stock of the parent corporation. Similarly, under section 544, an individual is considered as owning stock owned directly or indirectly by his brothers and sisters, spouse, ancestors, and lineal descendants; however, under section 318, an individual is treated as owning only the stock owned directly or indirectly by his spouse, children, grandchildren, and parents.

Reasons for change

The Act adopted the attribution rules of section 318 primarily because it was thought inappropriate to attribute one partner's stock in a corporation to another partner in the same partnership. However, the adoption of these attribution rules inadvertently provided exemption from the at risk rules where the stock ownership of the corporation clearly warranted application of the at risk rules (e.g., where the corporation was a personal holding company but did not [43] meet the section 318 attribution rules). Also, under the section 318 attribution rules, the stock of a wholly-owned subsidiary corporation engaged in an at risk activity would not be treated as 50 percent or more owned by five or fewer individuals so long as no one individual was considered as owning 50 percent or more of the parent corporation's stock. The committee believes that the attribution rules of section 544, other than the rules attributing stock between partners, are more appropriate than the attribution rules of section 318 for the purpose of determining whether a corporation is to be subject to the at risk rules.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides generally that, in determining whether five or fewer individuals own 50 percent or more of the stock of a corporation under the at risk rules, the attribution rules of section 544 are to be applied. However, those rules of section 544 relating to attribution of stock ownership from one partner to another are not to be applied.

Effective date

This provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978. This is the same effective date as that applicable to the provision of the Revenue Act of 1978 to which this provision relates.

b. Clarification of recapture rules of at risk provision (sec. 102(a)(1)(B) of the bill and sec. 465(d) of the Code)

Present law

Under a literal interpretation of the law prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, the at risk rules may have only required the taxpayer to be at risk at the end of the taxable year for which losses are claimed. Thus, arguably, subsequent withdrawals of amounts originally placed at risk may have been made without the recapture of previously allowed losses. The Act added provisions which require the recapture of previously allowed losses when, and to the extent, the amount at risk is reduced below zero. The Act provides that this recapture income is treated as income from the activity to which the at risk rule applies and thus can be used to offset additional losses from the activity if the losses are incurred in the year in which the recapture occurs (or are suspended losses which are treated as having been incurred in such year).

Reasons for change

Because recapture income under the recapture of loss rules is considered income from the activity, any losses from the activity for the year of recapture (including losses carried over from previous years) can be offset against the recapture income without taking into account the amount of the at risk basis. Thus, notwithstanding a negative at risk basis, losses during the year of recapture, to the extent of the amount of recapture income, can be deducted. Moreover, the at risk basis is left at a negative amount, instead of being brought back up to zero by the amount of recapture income (the recapture income, instead, having been applied against the loss).

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that such recapture income is not to be treated as income from the activity for purposes of determining whether current losses (or suspended losses) are allowable.

[1] Prior to the Act, the reference to personal holding companies resulted in the application of the section 544 personal holding company attribution rules. Of course, no attribution rules are applicable (both before and after the Act) in determining whether a corporation is a subchapter S corporation and, therefore, subject to the at risk rules.

[44] Effective date

This provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978. This is the same effective date as that applicable to the provision of the Revenue Act of 1978 to which this provision relates.

c. Clarification of limitation on recapture of losses under at risk provision (sec. 102(a)(1)(C) of the bill and sec. 465(e)(2)(A) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 modified the at risk rules to provide for a recapture of losses where the amount at risk is less than zero. These recapture of loss rules were intended to apply only to losses relating to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, and which (pursuant to Code sec. 465(b)(5) are reflected in reductions to the at risk basis in the activity.

Reasons for change

Because of a possible ambiguity in the provision governing the adjustments which reduce the at risk basis in an activity (Code sec. 465(b)(5)), it is unclear whether the adjustment for losses relating to a taxable year would be made as of the last day of such taxable year or as of the first day of the following taxable year. Consequently, it is unclear whether a loss relating to a taxable year beginning before December 30, 1978, but possibly reflected in an at risk basis adjustment as of the first day of a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1978, would be subject to the recapture of loss rules.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies the application of the recapture of loss provision (Code sec. 465(e)(2)) to indicate that it applies only to losses for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, and not to at risk basis adjustments possibly made after that date which relate to losses for taxable years beginning before December 31, 1978.

Effective date

This provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978. This is the same effective date as that applicable to the provision of the Revenue Act of 1978 to which this provision relates.

d. Waiver of controlled group rule where there is substantial leasing activity (sec. 102(a)(1)(D) of the bill and sec. 465(c) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, the only types of corporations to which the at risk rules (Code sec. 465) applied were subchapter S corporations and personal holding companies. The Act extended the application of the at risk rules to certain closely held corporations (even though they would not qualify as personal holding companies and had not made subchapter S elections). However, the Act contains an exception to the at risk limitations for closely held corporations actively engaged in equipment leasing operations. To qualify for this exception, more than 50 percent of a corporation's gross receipts must [45] be derived from equipment leasing. In order to prevent abuse, the Act provided that the 50-percent test is to be applied to the total gross receipts of all the members of a controlled group of corporations.

Reasons for change

The Act applies the at risk limitations to a number of substantial active equipment leasing operations. This has occurred because the gross receipts from equipment leasing of some members of a controlled group of corporations, while substantial in an absolute sense, constitute less than 50 percent of the total gross receipts of all the members of the controlled group. In many of these situations, some of the corporations in the group have significant active leasing activities (as measured by employees, receipts, and number of transactions). The committee concluded that members of a closely held controlled group of corporations which are substantially involved in equipment leasing should be exempted from the at risk rules.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, if certain tests are met, the leasing gross receipts percentage requirement is not to be applied to the total gross receipts of the controlled group.[1] Instead, the gross receipts requirement, increased to 80 percent, is to be applied separately to each member corporation of the controlled group.

The provisions of the amendment are applied to the quantum of certain activities of the "qualified leasing members" of the controlled group of corporations. A corporation is a qualified leasing member if, in the current and each of the immediately preceding two taxable years, (1) it is a component member of the controlled group of corporations and (2) 80 percent or more of its gross receipts is attributable to equipment leasing.

The controlled group 50 percent requirement would be waived, and, instead, an 80-percent gross receipt corporation-by-corporation requirement would apply, if the qualified leasing members (if any) meet the following tests for the current and two immediately preceding taxable years:

(1) The controlled group had at least three full time employees, substantially all of the services of whom were directly related to the equipment leasing activities of the qualified leasing members;

(2) the qualified leasing members, in the aggregate, entered into at least five separate equipment leasing transactions;[2] and

(3) the qualified leasing members, in the aggregate, had at least $1,000,000 of equipment leasing gross receipts.

An amendment is made to Code section 465(b)(5) (relating to at risk activity basis reductions) in order to make it clear that the loss recapture provisions of section 465(e) (which apply only to previously [46] allowed deductions reflected in basis reductions required under Code sec. 465(b)(5)) do not apply to exempt leasing activity losses.[3]

[1] Of course, if the controlled group meets the 50 percent gross receipts requirement of section 465(c)(4), this new provision would not apply.

[2] It is contemplated that separate written lease agreements with the same lessee pertaining to items of equipment which are related parts of what is in substance a single lease "package" would be treated as one equipment leasing transaction.

Effective date

This provision is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978. This is the same effective date as that applicable to the provision of the Revenue Act of 1978 to which this provision relates.

e. Certain clerical amendments to procedural provisions (secs. 102(a)(2)(A) and (B) of the bill and secs. 6501 and 6511 of the Code)

A clerical amendment to section 6501 of the Code is made to redesignate subsection (q) of section 6501 as subsection (o) to reflect the amendments made to that section by Public Law 95-628 [1978-2 C.B. 435].

A conforming amendment to section 6511 of the Code is made to conform the cross reference in that section to the newly redesignated section 6501(o).

f. Treatment of certain underwriting syndicates or partnerships (sec. 102(a)(2)(C) of the bill and sec. 761(a)(3) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1] imposed a penalty on a partnership which does not file a partnership return. Historically, partnership returns have not been filed in the case of syndicates of dealers in securities formed for the purpose of underwriting, selling, or distributing a securities issue.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that those syndicates which historically have not been treated as partnerships should be given the opportunity to avail themselves of the election under the Code not to be treated as a partnership for income tax purposes.

Explanation of provision

The bill would allow a syndicate of dealers formed for a short period for the purpose of underwriting, selling, or distributing a particular issue of securities to elect not to be treated as a partnership for income tax purposes.

Effective date

The amendment is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

[47] 6. Technical Amendments Relating to the Corporate Tax Rate and to the Investment Tax Credit

a. Computation of tax on income from foreclosure property of REITs (sec. 103(a)(1) of the bill and sec. 857(b)(4)(A) of the Code)

The Revenue Act of 1978 removed the surtax exemption for corporations and replaced it with a graduated rate schedule. This provision makes a technical amendment to conform the tax imposed on the net income from foreclosure property of a real estate investment trust (REIT) with the repeal of the surtax exemption.

b. Clarification of normalization provisions for purposes of investment tax credit (sec. 103(a)(2)(A) of the bill and sec. 312(c)(2) of the Act)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1971 [Pub. L. 92-178, 1972-1 C.B. 443] added rules to provide for the normalization of the investment tax credit for public utility property which qualified for the investment credit after the credit was restored in 1971. The Revenue Act of 1978 repealed the rules relating to the restoration of the credit in 1971 as "deadwood." These amendments created uncertainty as to whether the normalization rules would now also apply to public utility property placed in service before 1971.

Reasons for change

The repeal, under the Revenue Act of 1978, of the rules relating to the 1971 restoration of the investment credit, was not intended to affect the normalization rules which were also enacted in 1971. In order to eliminate difficulties which could arise from a misinterpretation of the 1978 amendments, the bill clarifies the intent of these amendments.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies the application of the normalization rules to public utility property so that the normalization provisions would apply only to public utility property for the period to which the restored investment credit applies.

Effective date

The provision is effective as if enacted as part of the Revenue Act of 1978.

c. Clerical amendments to special rules for energy property (sec. 103(a)(2)((B) of the bill and secs. 46 and 6401 of the Code)

(1) Amendments to section 46(a).—Paragraph (10) of section 46(a) is redesignated as paragraph (9) to maintain the numerical sequence of the paragraphs under section 46(a). The former provisions of section 46(a)(9) were repealed by the Revenue Act of 1978. In [48] addition, section 46(a)(9), as redesignated, is amended to correct two cross-references in that provision.

(2) Amendments to section 6401 (d).—A cross reference in section 6401(d) is amended to reflect the redesignation of paragraph 10 of section 46(a) as paragraph (9) of that section item b, above).

d. Coordination of investment credit rules for pollution control equipment (sec. 103(a)(3) of the bill and sec. 46(c)(5)(B) of the Code)

Present law

The Energy Tax Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-618, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 2) 1] provides a 10-percent investment credit for investments in certain energy property acquired after September 30, 1978 and before January 1, 1983. This credit is in addition to the 10-percent regular investment credit for which energy property also may qualify. Qualifying energy property includes pollution control equipment which is required to be installed in connection with certain other energy property. However, when energy property, including pollution control equipment, is financed in whole or in part by tax-exempt industrial development bonds, a reduced credit of 5-percent is allowed on the qualified investment.

[3] This amendment also has the same clarifying effect with respect to exempt real estate activity losses and those losses attributable to partnership liabilities which were not subject to section 704(d) (as in effect before the date of the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1978 by reason of section 213(f)(2) of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1]).

The Revenue Act of 1978 revised the rules concerning investment credits for pollution control facilities where the taxpayer elects to amortize the cost of pollution control faciilties over 5 years. Under these rules, where 5-year amortization is elected for pollution control facilities which also are financed with tax-exempt industrial development bonds, the taxpayer's qualified investment for purposes of investment credits is one-half of the investment which is subject to the 5-year amortization election.

Where pollution-control equipment which is energy property is subject both to the generally applicable rule which limits qualified investment and to the reduction in the energy credit percentage, the effective rate of the energy credit will be only 2.5 percent.

Reasons for change

It was not intended that the interaction of the changes made to the investment credit rules by the Revenue Ac of 1978 and the Energy Tax Act of 1978 would cause the energy credit for pollution control equipment to be at an effective rate of only 2.5 percent where such equipment is subject to limitations enacted under each of these two Acts. The bill corrects this unintended result.

Explanation of provision

Under the bill, the generally applicable limitation for investment credits on pollution control equipment which is both financed by tax-exempt industrial development bonds and is subject to 5-year amortization will not apply for purposes of the energy credit. As a result, pollution control equipment which is energy property and is financed by industrial development bonds will receive an energy credit of 5 percent as provided by the limitation applicable to energy property.

Effective date

The provision is effective generally with respect to property acquired after December 31, 1978.

[49] e. Treatment of noncorporate lessors for purposes of the investment credit for rehabilitation expenditures (sec. 103(a)(4)(A) of the bill and sec. 46(e)(3) of the Code)

Present law

Under the investment credit provisions generally, availability of the credit is limited with respect to property of noncorporate lessors. Under this limitation, the credit generally is not available to a noncorporate lessor of property which is otherwise qualified unless either (1) the noncorporate lessor produced the property, or (2) the lease term is less than 50 percent of the useful life of the property and the lessor's ordinary and necessary business expenses in connection with the property are more than 15 percent of the rental income produced by the property during the first 12 months of the lessee's use. This limitation was designed to deal with equipment leasing tax shelters which often involve long-term leases on a net basis (i.e., the lessee pays all expenses incident to the maintenance and operations of the leased property). However, the limitation applies with respect to "property" leased by a noncorporate lessor rather than solely to equipment.

The Revenue Act of 1978 made the investment credit generally available to expenditures incurred after October 31, 1978, for rehabilitating older business and commercial buildings (except those used for residential purposes). The 1978 Act did not contain any provision to coordinate the extension of the credit to building rehabilitations with the noncorporate lessor limitation.

Reasons for change

In the case of the rental of commercial buildings, the use of net lease arrangements is traditional and customary. Typically, the tenant of a commercial building will assume responsibility for taxes, insurance, and maintenance with respect to the building. The application of the noncorporate lessor limitation will deny the investment tax credit in many situations where taxpayers have incurred substantial expenditures in rehabilitating older buildings. This restriction will cause an unintended diminution in the impact of extending the credit to rehabilitated buildings, particularly in urban areas where older buildings are presently vacant and make no contribution to the area's economic base.

Explanation of provision

The bill makes the noncorporate lessor limitation inapplicable for purposes of the investment credit for rehabilitation expenditures in order to correct the unintended result of applying this restriction to such expenditures.

Effective date

The provision applies to taxable years ending after October 31, 1978.

f. Coordination of regular investment credit for rehabilitation expenditures with energy investment credit (sec. 103(a)(4)(B) of the bill and sec. 48(g)(2)(B) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 made the regular investment credit available to rehabilitation expenditures for certain buildings which are [50] at least 20 years old. One of the provisions of the Act excludes from the definition of qualified rehabilitation expenditures those expenditures for property which qualify as investment credit property under other investment credit rules. This provision would exclude from the regular investment credit certain rehabilitation expenditures which also qualify as expenditures for energy property eligible for the energy investment credit.

Reasons for change

The intent of the provision which excludes from the definition of qualifying rehabilitation expenditures those costs which otherwise qualify for the investment credit was to continue the application of existing limitations which may apply to such costs for purposes of the regular investment credit. However, this provision, as enacted in the Revenue Act of 1978, also has the unintended effect of disallowing the energy investment credit on expenditures for energy property (such as solar energy equipment) which is installed as part of a qualifying rehabilitation. The elimination of the energy credit in these situations dilutes the incentive to achieve energy conversion in the course of a building rehabilitation.

Explanation of provision

The bill makes both the energy investment credit and the regular investment credit available where rehabilitation expenditures also qualify as expenditures for energy property.

Effective date

The provision applies to taxable years ending after October 31, 1978.

[51] 7. Technical Amendments Relating to the Targeted Jobs Credit and the WIN Credit

a. Rules for work incentive credit and targeted jobs credit for cooperatives (sec. 103(a)(5) of the bill and secs. 50B(f), 52(f) and 52(h) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1], special rules applied for purposes of determining the amount of work incentive (WIN) credit and general jobs credit which could be used by cooperatives. These special rules applied the same rules under which the amount of investment credit for cooperatives was determined.

Reasons for change

While the Act revised the rules pertaining to the investment credit for cooperatives, no change was made to the rules pertaining to the WIN and jobs tax credits for cooperatives. The Congress intended that the rules for determining the amounts of WIN and jobs credits for cooperatives should be the same as the new rules for determining the amount of investment credit for cooperatives.

Explanation of provision

The bill extends the new rules for the investment credit of cooperatives to the WIN and jobs credits. Language is added to the House bill to make clear that this provision applies to both the general jobs credit and the targeted jobs credit.

Effective date

This provision applies to taxable years ending after October 31, 1978.

b. Correction of expiration date of targeted jobs credit (sec. 103(a)(6)(A) of the bill and sec. 51(c)(4) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 provided for a targeted jobs credit which allows employers to claim a tax credit for employing certain categories of individuals.

Reasons for change

The Congress intended that the targeted jobs credit be available for employers with respect to wages paid or incurred up to and including December 31, 1981. However, due to a clerical error, the Act provides that the targeted jobs credit is to expire with respect to wages paid after December 31, 1980.

Explanation of provision

The bill corrects the clerical error to provide that the credit may be claimed with respect to wages paid or incurred up to and including December 31, 1981.

[52] Effective date

This amendment is effective as if it were included in the Revenue Act of 1978.

c. Clarification of the effective date for election of jobs credit (sec. 103(a)(6)(B) of the bill and sec. 321(d) of the Act)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 provides that the jobs credit is elective, rather than mandatory as under prior law.

Reasons for change

While the Act provided that the jobs credit is elective, it did not contain a special effective date for this provision. The Congress intended that taxpayers should be allowed to make this election retroactively in the case of the prior law general jobs credit.

Explanation of provision

The bill corrects this oversight in the Act to provide that the election provision is effective for taxable years ending after December 31, 1976.

Effective date

This provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1976.

d. Clarification of effective date for newly targeted groups under jobs credit (sec. 103(a)(6)(C) of the bill and sec. 321(d)(2)(A) of the Act)

Present law

The Code, prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, provided a jobs credit to encourage employers to expand their work forces. In addition, an extra credit was provided for hiring persons referred under vocational rehabilitation programs. The Act amended the jobs credit to provide that, effective for amounts paid or incurred after December 31, 1978, the credit would be available only for the employment of specific target groups of individuals. For individuals in newly targeted groups (i.e., all individuals in target groups except persons referred under vocational rehabilitation programs for whom the taxpayer claimed a credit under prior law), the credit is available only for persons first hired by the employer after September 26, 1978.

Reasons for change

A literal reading of the Act could imply that an employer is not entitled to the general jobs credit with respect to wages paid to a member of a newly targeted group who first begins work for an employer before January 1, 1979, but after September 26, 1978. However, the Congress intended for an employer to be allowed whatever credit was available under prior law for wages paid or incurred before January 1, 1979, with respect to a member of a newly targeted group who first begins work for an employer before January 1, 1979.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the effective date provision of the Act which relates to newly targeted groups applies only for purposes of amend- [53] ments made by the Act. Thus, with respect to a member of a newly targeted group who first begins work for an employer before January 1, 1979, the employer is allowed whatever credit was available under prior law for wages paid or incurred before January 1, 1979. For purposes of wages paid or incurred on or after January 1, 1979, credit will be allowed with respect to such an individual only if he or she was first hired after September 26, 1978, and this individual would be treated as beginning work on January 1, 1979.

Effective date

This provision is effective with respect to wages paid or incurred after September 26, 1978.

e. Clarification of transitional rule for fiscal year taxpayers claiming jobs credit (sec. 103(a)(6)(D) of the bill and sec. 321(d)(3) of the Act)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 includes a transitional rule to coordinate the effective date of the targeted jobs credit for 1979 with the expiration of the prior general jobs credit at the end of 1978 for fiscal year taxpayers.

Reasons for change

Although the language in the Act was somewhat unclear, the Congress intended for a taxpayer on a 1978-1979 fiscal year to compute the pre-1979 general jobs credit (without regard to the tax liability limitation) for wages paid in 1978, compute the post-1978 targeted jobs credit under the new law (also without regard to the tax liability limitation) for wages paid in 1979, add the two credits together, and then apply the 100 percent of tax liability limitation.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that, under the transitional rule, a taxpayer with a fiscal year beginning in 1978 will compute his total credit for that fiscal year by (1) determining his general jobs credit under prior law (but without regard to the 100 percent of tax liability limitation) for wages paid in 1978 and his targeted jobs credit under the Act (also without regard to the 100 percent of tax liability limitation) for wages paid in 1979, (2) adding the two amounts together, and then (3) applying the 100 percent of tax liability limitation to the sum.

Effective date

This provision applies in the case of taxable years which begin in 1978 and end after December 31, 1978.

f. Clarification that FUTA wages are to be treated as including remuneration of youths participating in cooperative education programs (sec. 103(a)(6)(E) of the bill and secs. 51(d)(8)(D) and 51(c) of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, one of the targeted groups for purposes of the targeted jobs credit is youth participating in a qualified cooperative education program. In general, wages eligible for the targeted jobs credit are Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) wages.

[54] Reasons for change

Section 3306(c)(10)(C) excludes services performed by cooperative education students under the age of 22 from coverage under FUTA. Thus, although cooperative education students of ages 16 through 19 would comprise an eligible target group under this bill, employers would not be able to claim a credit with respect to the wages paid to them.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that wages paid to youths participating in cooperative education programs, although not FUTA wages, are eligible for the targeted jobs credit.

Effective date

The amendments made by this provision generally are effective with respect to amounts paid or incurred after December 31, 1978.

g. Definition of youth participating in a qualified cooperative education program for purposes of the targeted jobs credit (secs. 103(a)(6)(F) and (b) of the bill and sec. 51(d)(8) of the Code)

Present law

Under the Revenue Act of 1978, a credit is provided for the hiring of members of certain target groups. The credit, which is elective, is equal to 50 percent of qualified first-year wages and 25 percent of qualified second-year wages. One of the target groups consists of youths who actively participate in qualified cooperative education programs, who have attained the age of 16 but who have not attained the age of 19, and who have not graduated from high school or vocational school.

Reasons for change

When it drafted the Revenue Act of 1978, the Congress was not aware that many of the students in high school cooperative education programs were 19 years old. The intent of including cooperative education students in the targeted jobs credit would be frustrated if wages paid to 19-year old participants continued to be ineligible for the credit.

Explanation of provision

The provision would amend section 51(d)(8)(A)(i) of the Code to provide that the targeted jobs credit would be available for the hiring of youths who actively participate in qualified cooperative education programs, who have attained the age of 16 but who have not attained the age of 20, and who have not graduated from high school or vocational school.

Effective date

This provision would apply with respect to wages paid or incurred on or after November 27, 1979, in taxable years ending on or after such date.

Revenue effect

This provision would reduce budget receipts in fiscal year 1980 by less than $1 million, by less than $5 million per year in fiscal years 1981 and 1982, and by less than $1 million in fiscal year 1983.

[55] h. Clerical corrections to targeted jobs credit (sec. 103(a)(6)(G) of the bill, secs. 44B, 51, 6501, 383, and 6411 of the Code, and secs. 321(d)(2) and (4) of the Act)

i. Clarification of effective date for WIN-welfare recipient tax credit for fiscal year taxpayers (sec. 103(a)(7)(A) of the bill and sec. 322(e)(1) of the Act)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, the amount of WIN credit available to any employer was limited to $50,000 of tax liability plus one-half of tax liability in excess of $50,000. The Code contained rules for allocating this amount between married individuals filing separately, among members of a controlled group, and between an estate or trust [56] and its beneficiaries. The Act increased the limitation on the credit amount to 100 percent of tax liability, effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

Reasons for change

Although the change in the tax liability limitation made by the 1978 Act is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, it is unclear whether the related rules for apportioning the $50,000 amount are effective during the entire taxable year of fiscal year 1978-79 taxpayers.

Explanation of provision

The bill specifies that, for purposes of applying the prior law tax liability limitation to a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1979, the prior law rules relating to the apportionment of the $50,000 amount shall apply.

Effective date

The provision is effective for taxable years beginning in 1978 and ending after December 31, 1978.

j. Clarification of transitional rule for AFDC recipients and WIN registrants hired after September 26, 1978 (sec. 103(a)(7)(B) of the bill and sec. 332(e)(2) of the Act)

Present law

The Code prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, provided a credit to employers who hired certain AFDC recipients and WIN registrants. The Act amended the credit in several respects, and the amendments generally are effective for work incentive program expenses paid or incurred after December 31, 1978. Under the Act, eligible employees hired after September 26, 1978, are to be treated as having first begun work for the employer no earlier than January 1, 1979.

Reasons for change

The Congress intended that an employer be entitled to whatever credit was available under prior law for wages paid or incurred before January 1, 1979, with respect to AFDC recipients and WIN registrants.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the effective date provision which relates to AFDC recipients and WIN registrants hired after September 26, 1978, applies only for purposes of the amendments made by the Act. Thus, with respect to such an employee who first begins work for an employer before January 1, 1979, the employer would be allowed whatever credit was available under prior law for wages paid or incurred before January 1, 1979. For the purpose of amounts paid or incurred on or after January 1, 1979, such an employee would be treated as beginning work on January 1, 1979, and any wages paid or incurred after December 31, 1978, with respect to this employee would be considered to be attributable to services rendered after that date.

Effective date

This provision is effective with respect to eligible employees hired after September 26, 1978.

[57] k. WIN credit for child care expenses between October 1, 1978 and December 31, 1978 (sec. 103(a)(7)(C) of the bill and sec. 50B(a)(2)(B) of the Code)

Present law

Whether wages are eligible for the WIN credit as adopted in the Revenue Act of 1978 does not depend on whether the work being performed by the eligible employee involves child care services. As the credit applied before the amendments of the Revenue Act of 1978, wages paid for services in connection with a child day care program were eligible for the credit only if paid for services performed before October 1, 1978.

Reasons for change

Because the amendments made by the 1978 Act were effective only for wages paid or incurred after December 31, 1978, there was an unintended three-month gap in WIN credit coverage for child day care services.

Explanation of provision

The bill extends to January 1, 1979, the October 1, 1978, termination date in the WIN credit child care service provision in effect before the amendments of the 1978 Act.

Effective date

The amendment made by this provision applies to wages paid or incurred for services rendered between October 1, 1978 and December 31, 1978.

l. Clerical corrections to WIN-welfare recipient tax credit (sec. 103(a)(7)(D) of the bill, secs. 50A and 50B of the Code, and sec. 322(d) of the Act)

(1) Amendment of section 50A(a)(4)(C).—Section 50A(a)(4)(C) is amended by replacing " '$6,000' and" with " '$6,000' for".

(2) Amendment of section 50B(g)(2)(B).—Section 50B(g)(2)(B) is amended by inserting the phrase "giving rise to such credit" in lieu of the phrase "giving to such credit".

(3) Amendment of section 50B(h)(1)(A)(i).—Section 50B(h)(1)(A)(i) is amended by inserting "90-day" in lieu of "9-day".

(4) Amendment of section 322(d) of the Revenue Act of 1978.—The second subsection designated as subsection (d) of section 322 of the Act is amended by replacing the word "our" in paragraph (1)(A) thereof with the word "out".

[58] 8. Technical Amendments Relating to Other Provisions Primarily Affecting Business Income Tax

a. Clerical amendment to Section 337(a) of the 1978 Act (sec. 103(a)(8) of the bill and sec. 337(a) of the Revenue Act of 1978)

Section 337(a) is amended to correct a typographical error by changing "or a refund profit" to "of a refund profit."

b. Effective date for limit on ordinary loss deduction for small business corporation stock (sec. 103(a)(9) of the bill, sec. 1244 of the Code, and sec. 345(e) of the Act)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, the Code provided that, if certain individual shareholders realized a loss on the disposition of certain stock (sec. 1244 stock), it would be treated as an ordinary loss. Under prior law, the maximum amount of ordinary loss from the disposition of section 1244 stock that could be claimed in any taxable year was $25,000, except for married taxpayers filing joint returns, in which case ordinary loss treatment was limited to $50,000.

In general, the Act increased the amount of section 1244 stock that a qualified small business corporation could issue, simplified and liberalized some of the conditions which must be satisfied for stock to qualify as section 1244 stock, and increased the amount of loss that certain shareholders could treat as an ordinary loss rather than as a capital loss. Under the Act, the maximum amount that could be treated as an ordinary loss in a taxable year was increased to $50,000; in the case of a husband and wife filing a joint return for the taxable year in which the loss is incurred, the maximum amount that may be treated as an ordinary loss was increased to $100,000.

Reasons for change

Under the Act, these provisions applied to common stock issued after the date of enactment (November 6, 1978). This effective date is appropriate for the changes in requirements for qualifying stock; however, as drafted, the Act did not increase the limitation on the amount of loss on previously issued section 1244 stock which could be treated as an ordinary loss in a taxable year. Rather, it created two separate limitations, one for common stock issued prior to the date of enactment and another for common stock issued after the date of enactment (November 6, 1978).

The committee believes that, for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, one set of dollar limitations—the increased dollar limitations—should apply to losses on all section 1244 stock (whether issued before or after November 6, 1978). However, the committee believes that, for taxable years beginning prior to December 31, 1978, it is appropriate to retain the rule that the increased dollar limitation would apply only with respect to losses on section 1244 stock issued [59] after November 6, 1978, even though this will result in two differing dollar limitations applying during the same taxable year. The retention of this "dual limitation" approach for taxable years beginning in 1978 is necessary to prevent certain taxpayers who relied on the effective date for the increased loss treatment amount from being disadvantaged.

Explanation of provision

This bill amends the effective date of the provisions relating to the limitations on the amount of loss on section 1244 stock which may be treated as an ordinary loss by providing that the amendments relating to the ordinary loss limitations for individuals are applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978, whether or not the stock was issued before or after the effective date of the Act.

The bill also provides that, for taxable years beginning before December 31, 1978, the increased dollar limitations apply only with respect to losses on section 1244 stock issued after November 6, 1978. The application of the dollar limitation rules with respect to taxable years beginning before December 31, 1978, may be illustrated by the following example. Assume that an individual who reports income on a calendar year basis and files a joint return with his spouse has two blocks of section 1244 stock which became worthless in December of 1978. One block was acquired for $60,000 in cash on January 15, 1978. The other block of stock was acquired for $40,000 in cash on November 7, 1978. Since the first block of stock was issued prior to November 7, 1978, the individual may treat $50,000 of the loss on the first block of stock as an ordinary loss. The individual may also treat the entire $40,000 of loss on the second block of stock as an ordinary loss.

Effective date

The effective date of this provision is discussed in Explanation of provision, above.

c. Clarification of the club dues limitation on the nondeductibility of entertainment facility expenses (secs. 103(a)(10)(A) and (B) of the bill and sec. 274(a)(2)(C) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, expenses incurred with respect to entertainment facilities were deductible if they were ordinary and necessary, the facility was used primarily for the furtherance of the taxpayer's business (i.e., more than 50 percent of the time that it was used), and the expense in question was related directly to the active conduct of the taxpayer's business. For this purpose, entertainment facility expenses included dues or fees to any social, athletic, or sporting club or organization.

The Act provided generally that no deduction was allowable for any entertainment facility expense. However, the Act provided an exception from this disallowance rule for country club dues.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the provisions of the 1978 Revenue Act which relate to the nondeductibility of entertainment facility [60] expenses should be clarified to conform to the intent of the conferees that the exception apply to other club dues.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies the exception from the facility expense deduction disallowance rule provided in the 1978 Revenue Act so that the exception for country club dues which meet the business use test also would apply to all social, athletic, and sporting club dues or fees which satisfy that test.

Effective date

The provision applies to items paid or incurred after December 31, 1978, in taxable years ending after that date.

d. Clarification of the limitation on the deductibility of certain entertainment facility expenses includible in income of persons who are not employees (sec. 103(a)(10)(C) of the bill and sec. 274(e) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the enactment of the Revenue Act of 1978, expenses incurred with respect to entertainment facilities[1] were deductible if they were ordinary and necessary, the facility was used primarily for the furtherance of the taxpayer's business (i.e., more than 50 percent of the time that it was used), and the expense in question was related directly to the active conduct of the taxpayer's business. For this purpose, entertainment facility expenses included dues or fees paid to any social, athletic, or sporting club or organization. Dues or fees paid to professional associations, civic organizations, or to clubs operated solely to provide meals under circumstances normally considered to be conducive to business discussions generally were not considered to be entertainment facility expenses.

In determining whether an entertainment facility was used primarily for business purposes, all the taxpayer's ordinary and necessary business use of the facility was taken into account. Once it was determined that the facility was used primarily for business, the portion of the expenses which were related directly to the active conduct of the taxpayer's business could be deducted.

The Revenue Act of 1978 provided generally that no deduction was allowable for any entertainment facility expense. However, the Act retained a number of exceptions to the general rule that existed under prior law. One of these relates to expenses treated as employee compensation (sec. 274(e)(3)). Under this exception, expenses for goods, services, and facilities are not subject to the disallowance rules to the extent that the expenses are treated by the taxpayer, with respect to the recipient of the entertainment, as compensation to an employee on the taxpayer's return and as wages to the employee for purposes of income tax withholding. Thus, in the case of facility expenses which satisfy this exception, the Act retained the rules of prior law which formerly had applied to expenses treated as employee compensation.

[61] Reasons for change

It has come to the attention of the committee that there are situations where a manufacturing company promotes the sales of its products through sales incentive awards with salesmen who are not its employees and, consequently, would not come within the exception for facilities provided to employees. In several cases, the sales incentive award is arranged by another corporation on behalf of the manufacturing company. In both these cases, the amount of the award is includible in the gross income of the recipient of the award. The committee believes that the facilities rule should not apply to expenses incurred in connection with these types of sales incentive award plans where the recipient is required to include an amount in income.

[1] An entertainment facility generally is any item of personal or real property owned, rented, or used by a taxpayer during the taxable year for, or in connection with, an activity normally considered to be of an entertainment nature.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that disallowance of expenses for entertainment, amusement, or recreation expenses (Code Sec. 274(a)) does not apply to expenses which are includible in the gross income of the recipient of the entertainment, amusement, or recreation as compensation for services or as a prize or award under section 74 of the Code. This exception would not apply to a payor where the amounts paid are required to be furnished by the payor to the payee on information returns (Form 1099) but are not furnished by the payor.

For example, where a manufacturer provides entertainment facilities to one or more of the employees of its dealers as an incentive award and the right to use the facilities to its dealers who in turn award them to certain employees, the manufacturer will not be subject to these limitations if the value of the entertainment facilities are includible in income of the dealer and the manufacturer companies with any required information reporting. Further, the limitations will not apply to the dealer for any amount if the employee is required to include that amount in his income and the dealer complies with the applicable information reporting requirements. Of course, the rules limiting deductions for entertainment, etc., facilities continue to apply to the individual involved to determine the extent to which he is entitled to deduct the entertainment expenses.

The exemption for items includible in income as compensation for services or as a prize or award is not intended to permit entertainment facilities maintained by the taxpayer to be used for entertainment of its customers, suppliers, executives, or guests.

Effect date

The amendment is effective for expenditures paid or incurred after December 31, 1978, in taxable years ending after that date.

e. Amendments relating to deficiency dividend procedure for REITs (sec. 103(a)(11) of the bill and sec. 860 of the Code)

The bill makes three clerical amendments to the provisions relating to the deficiency dividend procedures for real estate investment trusts and regulated investment companies (Code sec. 860).

First, the bill corrects a cross reference in the effective date of the provision in the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1].

[62] Second, the bill corrects the spelling of the word "deficiency" in the heading to section 860 (f) of the Code.

Finally, the bill adds a parenthesis that was deleted in section 860(f)(2)(A) of the Code.

f. Clarification of treatment of liabilities of controlled corporation (sec. 103(a)(12) of the bill and sec. 357(c)(3) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 provided that where a cash basis taxpayer transfers property to a controlled corporation subject to certain liabilities, an "account payable" which would give rise to a deduction is not considered a liability for purposes of determining the amount of gain recognized by the transferor on the transfer. The legislative history indicates that a taxpayer could qualify under this provision where he was using a cash method or a hybrid cash method of accounting. The legislative history also indicates that an "account payable" would include a trade account payable and other liabilities (e.g., interest and taxes) which relate to the transferred trade or business.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that this provision of the 1978 Act should be clarified in order to clearly reflect the intent of Congress as indicated in the legislative history of the provision.

Explanation of provision

The bill deletes the requirement that only taxpayers who compute taxable income under the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting are eligible to exclude certain liabilities in determining the amount of gain recognized on a transfer to a controlled corporation. The bill also deletes the requirement that the excluded liability must be an account payable.

As a result of these changes, in determining (for purposes of sections 357(c) and 358(d)) the amount of liabilities assumed, or to which the property transferred is subject, in a transfer qualifying under section 351, the amount of certain liabilities are excluded for a transferor. Liabilities excluded under this provision are those liabilities the payment of which by the transferor would give rise to a deduction and those liabilities the payment with respect to which would be described in section 736(a) of the Code.

In general, liabilities the payment of which would give rise to a deduction include trade accounts payable and other liabilities (e.g., interest and taxes) which relate to the transferred trade or business. However, such liabilities may be excluded under this provision only to the extent payment thereof by the transferor would have given rise to a deduction. A liability would not be excluded under this provision to the extent the liability has already been deducted by the transferor. In addition, a liability would not be excluded under this provision to the extent that the incurrence thereof resulted in the creation of, or increase in, the basis of any property.

Effective date

The provision applies to transfers after November 6, 1978.

[63] g. Application of withholding tax to medical reimbursements (sec. 103(a)(13)(A) of the bill and sec. 3041(a)(20) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, medical reimbursements paid to, or on behalf of, an employee under a self-insured medical reimbursement plan of an employer generally were excluded from the employee's gross income and were not subject to withholding tax. Under the Act, such payments may be fully or partly includible in an employee's gross income for a year if the medical reimbursement plan discriminates in favor of highly compensated individuals for the year, and such payments are subject to withholding tax if they are includible.

Reasons for change

In some cases, it may not be possible to make a determination under the medical reimbursement plan rules as to the amount which is includible in gross income until after the year has ended. Consequently, the committee concluded that it is inappropriate for these amounts to be subject to withholding tax.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides an exclusion from withholding tax for amounts paid under a self-insured medical reimbursement plan for an employee. The bill also corrects a clerical error by redesignating one of two paragraphs numbered (18) of Code section 3401 (a) as paragraph (19). (The House bill provides an exclusion from withholding tax where it is reasonable to believe that a reimbursement will be excludible from the employee's gross income under section 105.)

Effective date

The amendment applies to amounts reimbursed after December 31, 1979.

h. Clarification of nondiscriminatory eligibility classification for medical reimbursement plans (sec. 103(a) (13)(B) of the bill and sec. 105(h) (3)(A) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, self-insured medical reimbursement plans were not subject to statutory nondiscrimination rules. Under the Act, nondiscrimination rules regarding eligibility were added.

Reasons for change

The 1978 Act was not clear as to whether the group in whose favor discrimination as to eligibility for participation was prohibited consists of all highly compensated individuals employed by an employer or of only those who are plan participants.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the nondiscrimination rule regarding eligibility for self-insured medical reimbursement plans takes into account all highly compensated individuals employed by the employer.

[64] Effective date

This provision applies to payments made after December 31, 1979.

i. Clarification of excess reimbursement test under medical reimbursement plans (sec. 103(a)(13)(C) of the bill and sec. 105(h)(7)(A) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, medical reimbursements paid to, or on behalf of, an employee under a self-insured medical reimbursement plan of an employer generally were excluded from the employee's gross income. Under the Act, such payments may be fully or partly includible in an employee's gross income for a year if the medical reimbursement plan discriminates in favor of highly compensated individuals for that year.

Reasons for change

Under the 1978 Act, the discrimination tests for measuring the amount of reimbursements under a particular benefit are not the same as the tests for determining whether that particular benefit is discriminatory.

Explanation of provision

The bill conforms the rules for measuring excess reimbursements under a self-insured medical reimbursement plan to the rules prohibiting discrimination in favor of highly compensated individuals under such plans.

Effective date

This provision applies to payments made after December 31, 1979.

j. Clarification of effective date for medical reimbursement plans (sec. 103(a)(13)(D) of the bill and sec. 366(b) of the Act)

Present law

Under the rules provided by the Revenue Act of 1978 for medical reimbursement plans, excess reimbursements made during a plan year are includable in the gross income of a highly compensated individual for the taxable year in which (or with which) the plan year ends.

Reasons for change

Because the rules apply for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1979, excess reimbursements made during 1979, in a plan year beginning after January 1, 1979, and ending after December 31, 1979, will be includable in the 1980 gross income of a highly compensated individual whose taxable year is the calendar year.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that the medical reimbursement plan rules apply only to reimbursements paid after December 31, 1979. Under the bill, reimbursements made before January 1, 1980 will not be taken into account under the rules for medical reimbursement plans for any purpose. (Under the House bill, payments made during 1979, in a plan year ending in 1980, would be excludible from gross income but would be taken into account in determining whether the plan met the nondiscrimination rules for the plan year.)

[65] Effective date

This provision is effective as if it had been included in section 366 of the 1978 Act.

k. Clerical amendments to other provisions primarily affecting business income tax (secs. 103(a)(14), (15), and (16) of the bill and secs. 172(b)(1), 374(e)(1)(A), and 466(e)(2)(B) of the Code)

The following clerical amendments to provisions affected by Title III of the Revenue Act of 1978 are made:

1) An amendment to section 374 (e)(1)(A)(iv) to correct the transposition of numbers in the date "1967" to read "1976" is made.

(A) A correct reference to the subparagraph of section 172 being amended by section 371 of the Act is made to coordinate with the redesignation of that subparagraph by section 703(p)(4) of the Revenue Act of 1978.

(3) The word "years" is corrected to read "year" in section 466(e)(2)(B).

[66] 9. Technical Amendments Relating to Capital Gains, the Minimum Tax, and the Maximum Tax

a. Clerical amendments relating to capital gains tax changes (secs. 104(a)(1), (3)(C), and (3)(D) of the bill, secs. 593(b)(2)(E)(vi), 877b, and 904b(3) of the Code and sec. 403(c)(4)(B) of the act)

The following clerical and conforming amendments to the capital gains provisions are made:

(1) A clerical amendment to section 877(b) is made to omit the reference to section 1201(b) which was repealed by the Revenue Act.

(2) Section 593(b)(2)(E)(iv) is amended to insert the fraction "18/46" in lieu of "3/8" to reflect the new capital gains and corporate tax rates.

(3) Subparagraph (E) of section 904(b)(3) added by section 403 of the Revenue Act of 1978 is redesignated as (F).

(4) The instructional paragraph of section 403(c)(4)(B) of the Act is corrected.

b. Clarification of the effective date of the increased capital gains deduction (sec. 104(a)(2)(A) of the bill and sec. 1202(c) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 increased the capital gains deduction from 50 to 60 percent of the gain effective for sales or exchanges after October 31, 1978. The Act, however, was unclear as to the amount of the deduction which was to be allowed in the case of post-effective date receipts of payments attributable to pre-effective date transactions, such as installment sales.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the provisions of the 1978 Act should be clarified as to the amount of the capital gains deduction which is allowed in the case of amounts properly taken into account by the taxpayer after October 31, 1978, where the sale or exchange occurred on or before that date.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the increased capital gain deduction applies to all amounts properly taken into account by the taxpayer after October 31, 1978.

Effective date

This provision is effective for taxable years ending after October 31, 1978.

[67] c. Clarification of the alternative tax for noncorporate capital gains (sec. 104(a)(2)(B) of the bill and sec. 1201 of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, a noncorporate taxpayer generally deducted from gross income 50 percent of any net capital gain, and the balance of the gain was taxed at the regularly applicable ordinary income rates. However, a partial alternative tax of 25 percent on the first $50,000 of net capital gain could apply, in lieu of taxing 50 percent of the gain at the regular rates, if it resulted in a lower tax than that which was produced by the regular method.

The Act repealed the noncorporate alternative tax for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978. However, the Act inadvertently failed to conform the computation of each partial tax (for periods prior to its repeal) to reflect the increase in the capital gains deduction.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the computation of each partial tax of the noncorporate alternative tax (for periods prior to its repeal) should be conformed to reflect the increase in the capital gains deduction.

Explanation of provision

The bill conforms the calculation of the alternative tax to reflect the Act's increase in the capital gains deduction.

Effective date

This provision applies to taxable years beginning before January 1, 1979.

d. Clarification of the application of the effective date of the capital gains changes to amounts received from certain conduit entities (sec. 104(a)(2)(C) of the bill and secs. 1201(c)(2) and 1202(c)(1) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 increased the net capital gains deduction for noncorporate taxpayers from 50 to 60 percent and decreased the corporate alternative tax rate from 30 to 28 percent. The former provision was effective with respect to post-October 31, 1978, gains and losses, and the latter provision was effective for post-December 31, 1978, gains and losses. However, the Act was unclear as to the applicability of these provisions to the capital gains of certain conduits whose income is taxed to another party where the date that the gains are includible in income by such other party is on or after the Act's effective date.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the application of the provisions of the 1978 Act which relate to the effective dates of the capital gains changes should be clarified for cases where the capital gains of certain conduits are taxed to another.

Explanation of provision

This bill provides that, in applying the increased capital gains deduction or the reduced corporate alternative tax rate, the determination of the period for which gain or loss is properly taken into account [68] must be made at the entity level. Therefore, in the case of pass-through entities, the proper capital gains deduction of an individual will be determined with reference to the time when those gains were taken into account by an entity rather than when a distribution was made, or was deemed to be made, by the entity to that individual. For purposes of applying this rule, "pass-through entities" are regulated investment companies, real estate investment trusts, electing small business corporations, partnerships, estates, trusts, and common trust funds. This entity level determination would apply to taxable years of the recipient beginning before November 1, 1979 (or January 1, 1980, in the case of a corporation).

Effective date

This provision generally applies to taxable years of the recipient which begin before November 1, 1979 (or January 1, 1980, in the case of a corporation).

e. Clarification of the effective date of the reduced corporate alternative capital gains rate (sec. 104(a)(3)(A) of the bill and sec. 1201(c) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 reduced the corporate alternative tax rate for capital gains from 30 to 28 percent effective for sales or exchanges after December 31, 1978. The Act, however, was unclear as to the rate which was to apply in the case of post-effective date receipts of payments attributable to pre-effective date transactions, such as installment sales.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the provisions of the 1978 Act should be clarified as to the application of the reduced corporate alternative capital gains rate in the case of amounts properly taken into account by the taxpayer after December 31, 1978, where the sale or exchange occurred on or before that date.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the reduced rate applies to all amounts properly taken into account by a corporate taxpayer after December 31, 1978.

Effective date

This provision is effective for taxable years ending after December 31, 1978.

f. Undistributed capital gains of regulated investment companies (sec. 104(a)(3)(B) of the bill and sec. 852(b) of the Code)

The bill conforms the basis adjustment rules for shareholders of certain regulated investment companies with undistributed capital gains to reflect the decreased corporate alternative tax on capital gains from 30 percent to 28 percent.

g. Clarification that carryovers may not reduce alternative minimum taxable income (sec. 104(a)(4)(A) of the bill and sec. 55(b)(1) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 imposed an alternative minimum tax which is payable by an individual to the extent the gross alternative [69] tax exceeds the regular tax as increased by the "add on" minimum tax. The alternative minimum tax base is generally the sum of an individual's gross income, adjusted itemized deductions, and capital gains, reduced by deductions allowed for the taxable year. In certain circumstances, it is possible that a deduction may reduce the alternative minimum taxable income base for a taxable year and still be available as a carryback or carryover to reduce taxable income in another taxable year.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that a deduction should not be used both to reduce the alternative minimum tax in the current year and be available as a carryover to reduce the taxpayer's tax for another taxable year.

Explanation of provision

The bill denies the use of a deduction against the alternative minimum taxable income base to the extent the deduction is available as a carryover or carryback to another taxable year.[1]

Effective date

The amendment made by this provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

h. Foreign tax credit allowable against alternative minimum tax (secs. 104(a)(4)(B) and (C) of the bill and sec. 55(c) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 imposed an alternative minimum tax but allowed a foreign tax credit against the tax. In general, the regular foreign tax credit rules are applied. However, in determining the allowable credit, the foreign tax credit limitation is to be computed separately on the basis of alternative minimum taxable income. In addition, a number of adjustments are made to the credit rules to take into account the interactions between the alternative minimum tax and the regular tax.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the rules for computing the foreign tax credit allowable against the alternative minimum tax should be clarified.

Explanation of provision

The bill would revise the foreign tax credit rules applicable to the alternative minimum tax to provide greater clarity, but no substantive changes are made. The bill would make it explicit that the credit may not exceed the amount of the alternative minimum tax. In addition, the definition of alternative minimum taxable income from sources without the United States would be revised to define more clearly the adjustments to be made to gross income.

[70] Effective date

The amendments made by this provision are effective for taxable years beginning after 1978.

i. Clarification of alternative minimum taxable income to taxpayers not itemizing deductions (sec. 104(a)(4)(D) of the bill and sec. 55(b) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 imposed

[1] This rule is not applicable to the capital gains deduction under section 1202 since that deduction is not taken into account in determining a net operating loss deduction under section 172.

an alternative minimum tax which is payable by an individual to the extent the gross alternative minimum tax exceeds the regular tax as increased by the "add on" minimum tax. The alternative minimum tax base is generally the sum of an individual's gross income, adjusted itemized deductions, and capital gains preference item reduced by deductions allowed for the taxable year.

In the case of a taxpayer who does not elect to itemize deductions, no itemized deductions are allowed for the taxable year. In computing the regular income tax, a bracket is included in the tax tables to provide the taxpayer the benefit of a "standard deduction." No comparable provision is included in the computation of the alternative minimum tax.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that a taxpayer who does not itemize deductions should have the benefit of the "standard deduction" in computing the alternative minimum tax.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that a taxpayer who does not elect to itemize deductions will be entitled to a deduction equal to the zero bracket amount (formerly the "standard deduction") in computing the alternative minimum tax.

Effective date

The amendment made by this provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

j. Exclusion of foreign taxes as an adjusted itemized deduction for purposes of the alternative minimum tax (sec. 104(a)(4)(E) of the bill and sec. 57(b) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 added a provision that, for purposes of computing the tax preference for "adjusted itemized deductions" under the alternative minimum tax, deductible State and local taxes, in effect, are treated as an "above the line" deduction. No corresponding provision was made in the case of deductible foreign taxes, although the Act provided that the foreign tax credit is allowable against the alternative minimum tax.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that deductible foreign taxes should be treated in the same manner as State and local taxes for purposes of computing the tax preference for adjusted itemized deductions.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that deductible foreign taxes are treated in the same manner as State and local taxes in computing the tax preference for adjusted itemized deductions.

[71] Effective date

The amendment made by this provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

k. Adjusted itemized deductions of estate or trust and the alternative minimum tax (sec. 104(a)(4)(F) of the bill and sec. 57(b)(2)(A) of the Code)

Present law

The Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1] broadened the minimum tax on preferences to include a preference for adjusted itemized deductions. The Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1] made the preference for adjusted itemized deductions subject to the new alternative minimum tax and clarified the application of the adjusted itemized deduction preference to trusts and estates. Generally, the preference for adjusted itemized deductions is equal to the amount by which itemized deductions exceed 60 percent of adjusted gross income. In the case of estates and trusts, the preference is the amount by which all deductions other than deductions allowable in arriving at adjusted gross income and certain other deductions exceed 60 percent of the estate's or trust's adjusted gross income reduced by all deductions. However, under the Act, deductions allowable in arriving at adjusted gross income were subtracted twice. In addition, unlike an (other than who is not a trust or estate), the personal exemption of a trust or estate does reduce the amount of adjusted gross income.

Reasons for change

The Revenue Act inadvertently reduced the income of an estate or trust twice by the taxpayer's "above the line" deductions in computing adjusted itemized deductions. Moreover, the personal exemption of a trust or estate should be treated the same as an individual.

Explanation of provision

The bill modifies the computation of the preference for adjusted itemized deductions of a trust or estate to clarifying that deductions allowable in arriving at adjusted gross income are taken into account only once. In addition, your committee adds to the House-passed bill an amendment which provides that the personal exemption of a trust or estate does not reduce the adjusted gross income of the trust or estate for purposes of computing the preference for adjusted itemized deductions of the trust or estate.

Effective date

The amendment made by this provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

l. Carryover of residential energy credit in connection with alternative minimum tax (sec. 104(a)(4)(G) of the bill and sec. 55(c)(3) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 imposed a new alternative minimum tax. Generally, credits are not allowed against the alternative minimum tax. However, the Act contained special rules that would allow the carryover of the jobs credit, the work incentive credit, and the investment credit that otherwise would have been lost because of the alter- [72] native minimum tax. No comparable rule was provided for the residential energy credit.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the residential energy credit carryover should not be lost because of the alternative minimum tax.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides a rule similar to the rules applicable to the jobs, work incentive, and investment credits for the residential energy credit that will allow the carryover of the residential energy credit where the taxpayer is subject to the alternative minimum tax.

Effective date

The amendment made by this provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1978.

m. Clerical amendments relating to the alternative minimum tax (sec. 104(a)(4)(H) of the bill and secs. 5, 55, 443, 453, 666, 871, and 877 of the Code)

The following is an explanation of the clerical amendments regarding the alternative minimum tax:

(1) Amendment to section 5.—A cross reference in section 5 to the minimum tax is corrected.

(2) Amendment to section 55(a).—An amendment is made to properly space the final clause of the sentence.

(3) Amendment to section 55(b).—The definition of "regular tax" is amended to exclude the penalty tax on early redemption of retirement bonds to conform to the treatment of the penalty tax on I.R.A. distributions.

(4) Amendment of section 55(c)(3).—A cross reference to section 53(b) is corrected.

(5) Amendment of section 443(d).—Section 443(a)(2) is amended to provide that the annualization of the $10,000 minimum tax exemption applies to all taxpayers.

(6) Amendment of section 453(c).—The application of section 453(c) is clarified by providing that the computation of the adjustment is made without regard to the alternative minimum tax, as well as the add-on minimum tax.

(7) Amendments to section 871 and 877.—A clerical amendment is made by deleting the word "section" before "55".

(8) Amendment of section 666(c).—Section 666(c) relating to the treatment of accumulation distributions from trusts is amended to conform to the rule adopted in section 666(b).

n. Clarification of the treatment of post-October 1978 capital gains for purposes of the maximum tax (sec. 104(a)(5) of the bill, sec. 1348 of the Code, and sec. 441(b)(2) of the Act)

Present law

Prior to the Revenue Act of 1978, the amount of personal service income eligible for the 50 percent maximum tax rate was reduced dollar-for-dollar by an individual's items of tax-preference, including capital gains, for the year. The Act increased the net capital gains deduction from 50 to 60 percent, and provided that post-effective date [73] capital gains would not reduce the amount of personal service income eligible for the 50 percent maximum tax rate. These changes were effective for sales or exchanges after October 31, 1978. However, it was possible that in certain situations, gains after October 31, 1978, would reduce the amount eligible for the 50 percent maximum tax rate.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the provisions of the 1978 Act should be clarified so that post-October 31, 1978 gains do not reduce the amount of personal service income eligible for the 50 percent maximum tax rate.

Explanation of provision

In the case of taxable years beginning before November 1, and ending after October 31, 1978, the bill clarifies that the amount of personal service income which is eligible for the 50 percent maximum tax rate is to be reduced only by 50 percent of the lesser of: (1) the net capital gain for the taxable year or (2) the net capital gain taking into account only gain or loss properly taken into account for the portion of the taxable year before November 1, 1978.[1]

Effective date

This provision is effective for taxable years beginning before November 31, 1978, and ending after October 31, 1978.

[74] 10. Technical Amendments Relating to Other Tax Provisions

a. Power of the Chief Judge of the Tax Court to assign small tax cases to commissioners (sec. 105(a)(1) of the bill and secs. 7456(c) and 7463(g) of the Code)

Present law

Under section 7456(c) of the Code, the chief judge of the Tax Court may assign declaratory judgment proceedings to be heard by commissioners of the court and authorize a commissioner to make the decision of the court with respect to such proceedings. In addition, under section 7463(g) of the Code, the chief judge may assign tax controversies involving a deficiency of $5,000 or less to be heard by commissioners of the court and authorize a commissioner to make the decision of the court with respect to such proceedings.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that, in order to avoid duplication in the provisions of the Code, a single provision should be utilized to empower the chief judge of the Tax Court to assign various types of proceedings to the commissioners.

Explanation of provision

The bill would repeal the specific provision granting the chief judge the power to assign small tax cases to commissioners. In place of this provision, the bill would add "small tax cases" to the types of proceedings the chief judge may assign to commissioners.

Effective date

The provision is effective on the date of enactment.

b. Refund adjustments for amounts held under claim of right (sec. 105

[1] This bill also amends section 441 of the Revenue Act of 1978 by striking out "subparagraph (B)".

(a)(2) of the bill and sec. 6411(d)(2) of the Code)

Present law

If a taxpayer receives income under a claim of right and restores it in a later year, he may, under a special method for computing his tax liability (Code sec. 1341(b)(1)) be treated as having made an overpayment of tax on the last day prescribed by law for payment of tax for the year the income is restored. The Revenue Act of 1978 establishes an expedited procedure for a tentative refund of the overpayment. This procedure is similar to that in effect prior to the 1978 Act for tentative refunds resulting from net operating loss carrybacks.

Reasons for change

Under the 1978 Act, the time within which the Treasury must act on the tentative refund application is unclear. Also, the extent to which the Treasury is to follow procedures similar to those applied to applications for tentative refunds resulting from net operating loss carrybacks is unclear.

[75] Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the Treasury generally is to act on the tentative refund application within a period of 90 days from the date on which the application is filed or from the date of the overpayment (determined under section 1341(b)(1), whichever is later. The date of the overpayment is the last day prescribed by law for the payment of tax for the year in which a deduction is allowed for the restoration of income held under a claim of right.

It is also made clear that the Treasury, within the time period prescribed above and in a manner similar to the procedure provided for tentative refund of net operating loss carrybacks, is to (i) review the application, (ii) determine the amount of the overpayment, and (iii) apply, credit, or refund the overpayment. It is thus made clear that the requirement of similarity to tentative refunds of net operating loss carrybacks applies to all three of these actions by Treasury, and not merely the third.

Effective date

The provision is effective with respect to tentative refund claims filed on and after November 6, 1978.

c. Reduction of estate tax value of jointly held property where spouse of decedent materially participated in farm or other business (sec. 105(a)(3)(A) of the bill and sec. 2040(c)(2) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 contained a provision (Code sec. 2040(c)) which permitted the efforts of a decedent's spouse to be taken into account in determining the amount of jointly held property used in a farm or other business included in the decedent's gross estate. Generally, under this provision, the value of the gross estate could be reduced (1) by the adjusted consideration of the spouse and (2) by 2 percent of the excess of the value of the property over the total adjusted consideration provided by both spouses for each year that the decedent's spouse materially participated in the operation of the farm or other business in which the property was used. The adjusted consideration is the consideration furnished by a spouse plus interest computed at 6 percent per year from the date the consideration was furnished until the date of the decedent's death.

Reasons for change

Under this formula, it was possible that less than the decedent's adjusted consideration, or the portion of the value attributable to the decedent's adjusted consideration, would be included in the decedent's gross estate where the total appreciation in the property was less than the assumed 6 percent increase in the original consideration.

Explanation of provision

The bill would correct this result by providing that the special rule would not apply if the sum of the adjusted consideration provided by both spouses equals or exceeds the value of the property on the date of the decedent's death.

[76] Effective date

This provision is effective for estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1978.

d. Clerical amendment relating to jointly held property (sec. 105(a)(3)(B) of the bill and sec. 2040(c) of the Code)

As a clerical amendment, the bill amends paragraph (1) of section 2040(c) by correcting a plural reference to "subsection (a)" to a singular reference.

e. Clerical amendments relating to time to amend governing instruments of split interest trusts (sec. 105(a)(4)(A) of the bill and sec. 2055(e)(3) of the Code)

The bill makes two clerical amendments to the provision permitting amendment of governing instruments of split interest charitable trusts (Code sec. 2055(e)(3)).

First, the bill corrects the cross reference to subparagraph (A) of section 2055(e)(2) of the Code by capitalizing the letter "A".

Second, the bill adds the article "the" which was erroneously deleted.

f. Amending governing instruments of charitable split interest trusts (sec. 105(a)(4)(B) of the bill and sec. 514 of the Revenue Act of 1978)

Present law

The Tax Reform Act of 1969 [Pub. L. 91-172, 1969-3 C.B. 10] denied an estate tax, gift tax or income tax charitable deduction for the value of a remainder interest passing to charity unless the remainder interest is in a charitable remainder unitrust, charitable remainder annuity trust, or a pooled income fund. In the case of an income interest passing to charity (i.e., a lead trust), a deduction was denied unless the income interest is in the form of a guaranteed annuity or a fixed percentage of the fair market value of the trust (determined annually).

Legislation in 1974 granted a reformation period until December 31, 1975 to redraft wills and other testamentary instruments to conform to the new rules for the estate tax deduction for charitable remainders. The reformation period was extended through December 31, 1977 by the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1].

The Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1] extended, through December 31, 1978, the reformation period for purposes of the estate tax charitable deduction for charitable remainders. The 1978 Act also provided a reformation period through December 31, 1978, for purposes of the income and gift tax charitable deductions in the case of charitable remainders and for purposes of the estate, income and gift tax charitable deductions for charitable lead trusts. The 1974 and 1976 legislation was made effective with respect to estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1969. In 1978, a similar effective date provision was omitted.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that reformation of charitable lead trusts and charitable remainder trusts in order to comply with the requirements of the Tax Reform Act of 1969 should be effective for Federal income, gift and estate tax purposes so long as the reformation is done before the deadline for reformations. While the committee believes it [77] appropriate to allow reformation of trusts to which the requirements of the Tax Reform Act of 1969 apply, it does not believe that the period of limitations should be waived for this purpose.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that the amendment made by section 514 of the Revenue Act of 1978 applies to transfers in trust and contributions made after July 31, 1969, for Federal income tax purposes; to decedents dying after December 31, 1969, for Federal estate tax purposes; and to transfers after December 31, 1969, for Federal gift tax purposes.

Effective date

The amendment is effective as if it were included in the Revenue Act of 1978.

g. Distribution from estate prior to 1980 of farm valuation property (sec. 105(a)(5) of the bill and sec. 1040 of the Code)

Present law

Under present law, the distribution of property by an estate or trust in satisfaction of a pecuniary bequest is treated as a taxable transaction resulting in the recognition of gain or loss to the estate or trust.

The Revenue Act of 1978 added a provision to clarify that where property is subject to special farm or other business use valuation, the tax will be measured by the difference between the fair market value of the property on the date of distribution (determined without regard to special use valuation) and the fair market value of the property on the date of the decedent's death (also determined without regard to special use valuation). However, the postponement of the carryover basis provisions until 1980 inadvertently resulted in a postponement of this provision.

Reasons for change

The committee wishes to correct the inadvertent postponement of the effective date of the provision added by the Revenue Act clarifying the income tax treatment of the distribution of special use valuation property to satisfy a pecuniary bequest.

Explanation of provision

The bill clarifies that the provision added by the 1978 Act concerning the distribution of special use valuation property in satisfaction of a pecuniary bequest is effective for estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1976.

Effective date

The amendment made by this provision applies to estates of decedents dying after December 31, 1976.

h. Clarification of tax treatment of cooperative housing corporations where stock is acquired in a tax-free transaction or by an estate (sec. 105(a)(6) of the bill and sec. 216(b)(6) of the Code)

Present law

A tenant-stockholder in a cooperative housing corporation is entitled to deduct amounts paid to such a corporation to the extent such [78] amounts represent his or her proportionate share of allowable real estate taxes and interest relating to the corporation's land and buildings (Code sec. 216). In general, for a corporation to qualify as a cooperative housing corporation (which can pass through these deductions to tenants-shareholders), 80 percent or more of the gross income of the cooperative housing corporation must be derived from individual tenant-stockholders.

Under the Revenue Act of 1978, if a person who conveys a house, apartment-housing, or leasehold thereof, to a cooperative housing corporation acquires stock in the corporation by purchase or foreclosure, together with a lease or right to occupy the house or apartment, such person would be treated as a tenant-stockholder for up to three years from the date of acquisition (even if such person were not an individual).

Reasons for change

The general intent of this 1978 change was to allow corporate promoters to form cooperative housing corporations and to own the shares in such corporations during a reasonable period while the shares were being sold to individuals who would qualify as tenant-stockholders under the general rules of section 216 of the Code. The requirement that the stock be acquired "by purchase or foreclosure" may well be interpreted as not being satisfied in situations where the corporate promoter acquires the stock in a tax-free transaction (such as a transfer to a controlled corporation pursuant to the provisions of section 351 of the Code). Also, if an individual has conveyed a house, apartment building, or leasehold thereof, to a cooperative housing corporation in exchange for stock, such an individual would be treated as a tenant-stockholder, but it is not clear that his estate would be treated as a tenant-stockholder if the individual dies after acquiring such stock.

Explanation of provision

The bill amends the provisions added by the 1978 Act to provide that, if an original seller (e.g., a corporate promoter) acquires stock of a cooperative housing corporation either from the corporation or by foreclosure, the original seller shall be treated as a tenant-stockholder for a period of not to exceed three years from the date of the acquisition of the stock. However, except in the case of an acquisition of stock of a cooperative housing corporation, by foreclosure, this rule only applies to stock acquired from the cooperative housing corporation which occurs not later than one year after the date on which the apartments or houses (or leaseholds therein) are transferred by the original seller to the corporation.

The bill also provides that, if an individual original seller dies, the estate of the individual will be treated as a tenant-stockholder for the same period as the individual would have been treated as a tenant-stockholder if he had lived.

The amendments made by these provisions are the same as those in the House bill except that the House bill does not contain the provision relating to the estate of an individual original seller.

[79] Effective date

These provisions apply to stock acquired after November 6, 1978. This is the same effective date as the modifications made to Code section 216 by section 531 of the Revenue Act of 1978.

i. Amendments relating to exclusion of certain cost-sharing payments (secs. 105(a)(7) (A) to (D) of the bill and secs. 126 and 1255 of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 provided an exclusion from gross income for all or a portion of certain payments received under a number of Federal and State cost-sharing conservation programs. Under these provisions, no deduction or credit could be claimed with respect to amounts excluded under the Act, and the basis of any property acquired or improved with these payments would not reflect the excluded amounts. Also, under the Act, a special rule was provided for the recapture (that is, treatment as ordinary income rather than capital gains) of excluded amounts if the property, or improvements, purchased with the payments are disposed of before the expiration of 20 years.

Reasons for change

Since the provisions of the Act automatically apply to the excludible portion of all cost-sharing payments, there are some circumstances under which a taxpayer could be worse off under this provision than under prior law. Generally, this results from the fact that, under some circumstances, at least some of the payments received under certain of these programs are reimbursements for costs for which a current deduction would otherwise be allowable. Thus, under prior law, a taxpayer would have had a wash (that is, deductions offsetting income) and the recapture rule would not have applied to him. Under the provisions of the Act, such a taxpayer would have the same effect of a wash (by the exclusion of the income and the disallowance of any corresponding deduction) but would be subject to recapture. Also, there are certain other circumstances where, even though the amounts attributable to reimbursements under these cost-sharing programs were not currently deductible, the taxpayer might (by reason of the application of the investment credit, net operating loss limitations, etc.) be better off under prior law than under the exclusion rule.

Explanation of provision

The bill would provide that the exclusion for cost-sharing payments and the recapture provision do not apply to any portion of any payment which is properly attributable to an amount which is allowable as a deduction for the taxable year in which the amount is paid or incurred. The bill would also provide that, if a taxpayer makes an election, the exclusion provision and the recapture provision will not apply to the excludible portion of any government cost-sharing payment. Such an election would be made not later than the due date (including extensions) for filing the taxpayer's income tax return for the taxable year in which the payment was received or accrued.

[80] In addition, an amendment is made to the recapture provision (Code sec. 1255) to coordinate this provision with the other recapture provisions which could potentially result in ordinary income from the disposition of property acquired or improved with excluded cost-sharing payments.[1] (These provisions are section 1251 (relating to recapture of amounts in so-called "Excess Deduction Accounts") and section 1252 (relating to recapture of previously deducted soil and water conservation expenses or land clearing expenses).)

The bill also contains clerical amendments to the cost-sharing payments exclusion provision and the recapture provision. The clerical amendment to the exclusion provision adds the words "or his delegate" immediately after the words "Secretary of the Treasury" in section 126(a)(9), thus allowing the Secretary to delegate certain responsibilities. Section 1255 (b)(2) indicates that amounts treated as ordinary income under section 1255 are to be treated in the same manner as ordinary income resulting from depreciation recapture with respect to section 1245 property. A clerical amendment clarifies that this rule is to be applied for purposes of sections 163(d), 170(e), 341(e)(12), 453(d) (4)(B), and 751(c).

Effective date

These provisions apply to grants made after September 30, 1979. This is the same effective date as for the related provisions in the Revenue Act of 1978.

---

[1] Under this amendment, the amount recaptured under this section cannot exceed the amount of gain realized on disposition of the property reduced by the sum of the amounts treated as ordinary income by reason of sections 1231 through 1254. For example, assume that a parcel of real property is sold at a gain of $100,000, that $40,000 of such gain is treated as ordinary income under section 1250, and that $75,000 in cost-sharing payments had been excluded from gross income under section 126 with respect to this property within the preceding 10 years. Under these circumstances, $60,000 would be recaptured under section 1255. However, if the amount treated as ordinary income under section 1250 were only $10,000, then the amount recaptured under section 1255 would be the full $75,000.

j. Application of exclusion for certain cost-sharing payments to certain local programs (sec. 105(a)(7)(E) of the bill and sec. 126(a)(10) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 generally provides that gross income does not include the excludible portion of payments received under the following programs:

(1) The rural clean water program authorized by section 208(j) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act;

(2) The rural abandoned mine program authorization by section 406 of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977;

(3) The water bank program authorized by the Water Bank Act;

(4) The emergency conservation measures program authorized by title IV of the Agricultural Credit Act of 1978;

(5) The agricultural conservation program authorized by the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act;

[81] (6) The great plains conservation program authorized by section 16 of the Soil Conservation and Domestic Policy Act;

(7) The resource conservation and development program authorized by the Bankhead-Jones Farm Tenant Act and by the Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act;

(8) The forestry incentive program authorized by section 4 of the Cooperative Forestry Assistance Act of 1978;

(9) Any small watershed program administered by the Secretary of Agriculture which is determined by the Secretary of the Treasury to be substantially similar to the type of programs described in items (1) through (8); and

(10) Any State program under which payments are made to individuals primarily for the purpose of conserving soil, protecting or restoring the environment, improving forests, or providing a habitat for wildlife.

However, for a payment (or portion thereof) to be excluded from income under this provision, two conditions must be met. First, a determination must be made by the Secretary of Agriculture that the payment is made primarily for the purpose of conserving soil and water resources, protecting or restoring the environment, improving forests, or providing a habitat for wildlife. Second, the Secretary of the Treasury must determine that the payment does not result in a substantial increase in the annual income derived from the property with respect to which the payment is made.

Reasons for change

Under present law, it is not clear whether the exclusion would apply to payments received under local programs for conservation purposes.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that the exclusion for cost-sharing payments applies to payments primarily for the purpose of conserving soil, protecting or restoring the environment, improving forests, or providing a habitat for wildlife under programs of a State, possession of the United States, a political subdivision of any of the foregoing, or the District of Columbia.

Effective date

This provision applies to grants made after September 30, 1979. This is the same effective date as for the related provisions in the Revenue Act of 1978.

[82] 11. Amendments Relating to General Stock Ownership Corporations (sec. 106 of the bill and sec. 1391 of the Code)

The Revenue Act of 1978 authorized a State to establish a General Stock Ownership Corporation (GSOC) for the benefit of its citizens. A GSOC must be chartered by an act of the State legislature or as a result of a referendum and must provide for issuance of shares of stock to all the residents of the State (other than those electing not to receive a share). The income of the GSOC would be taxed directly to the shareholders.

The following clerical amendments to the GSOC provisions are made by the bill:

a. Amendments to section 172(b)(1).—The 1978 Act added two subparagraphs (H) to section 172(b)(1). The bill redesignates the subparagraph (H) relating to GSOCs as subparagraph (I) and makes conforming amendments.

b. Amendments to section 1016(a).—Paragraph (21) of section 1016 (a) is redesignated as paragraph (22).

c. Amendments to section 1391.—Several punctuation errors are corrected.

d. Amendment to section 1392.—The word "where" is corrected to read "when".

[83] 12. Amendments Relating to Technical Corrections to the Tax Reform Act of 1976

a. Computation of adjusted itemized deductions in case of estates and trusts (sec. 107(a)(1)(A) of the bill and sec. 57(b)(2)(C) of the Code)

Present law

Under the Revenue Act of 1978, the alternative minimum tax is imposed on the adjusted itemized deductions preference. The charitable contributions deduction is an itemized deduction that normally may result in the adjusted itemized deductions preference. However, the Act provided an exception in the case of certain charitable deductions of trusts and estates. One exception arises where all the unexpired interests in the trust are devoted to religious, charitable, scientific, literary, or educational purposes or for the prevention of cruelty to children or animals (i.e., the purpose described in section 170(c)(2)(B) of the Code). Another exception arises where all of the income interests in the trust are devoted to religious, charitable, etc., purposes (i.e., purposes described in section 170(c)(2)(B) of the Code), and the grantor had a power to revoke the trust at his death. Neither of the two exceptions applies where the interests in the trust are for purposes other than religious, charitable, etc., purposes (i.e., those purposes described in section 170(c)(2)(B) of the Code) but for which a charitable deduction is nonetheless allowable (i.e., those purposes described in Code sections 170(c)(1), (3), (4) and (5)).

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the preference for adjusted itemized deductions attributable to a charitable contribution deduction should not apply in the case of a trust devoted entirely to purposes for which a charitable deduction is allowed.

Explanation of provision

The bill modifies the exceptions for charitable contributions as an item of adjusted itemized deductions preference so that they apply to all interests in the trust devoted to purposes for which a charitable deduction is allowed to the trust.

Effective date

The amendment made by this provision applies to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.

b. Allocation of tax preference items in case of trusts and estates (sec. 107(a)(1)(C) of the bill and sec. 58(c)(1) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 imposed a new alternative minimum tax on individuals including trusts and estates.

[84] In the case of a trust or estate, the items of tax preference are apportioned between the estate or trust and the beneficiaries on the basis of income of the estate or trust allocated to each.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the Treasury should have authority to allocate the tax preferences between a trust or estate and the beneficiaries other than on the basis of income to properly reflect which of the parties received the tax benefit of the preference.

Explanation of provision

The provision allows the Treasury Department to issue regulations to provide rules for apportioning the items of tax preference between a trust or estate and its beneficiaries.

Effective date

This amendment is effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1975.[1]

c. Recapture of depreciation of certain subsidized low-income housing (sec. 107(a)(1)(D) of the bill and sec. 1250(a)(1)(B) of the Code)

Present law

The Revenue Act of 1978 added a provision clarifying that the recapture of depreciation on property on which rehabilitation expenditures were amortized under Code section 191 is to be made under Code section 1250 rather than Code section 1245.

The 1978 Act amended Code section 1250(b)(4) to clarify that the amount of "straight line" depreciation is to be computed without regard to the 5-year useful life under Code section 191. This clarification inadvertently may have caused additional recapture to apply to certain subsidized low-income housing (described in clauses (i), (ii), and (iv) of Code sec. 1250(a)(1)(B)).

Reasons for change

This committee believes that the normal recapture rules of Code section 1250 should apply to subsidized low-income housing on which 5-year amortization under Code section 191 has been taken.

Explanation of provision

The amendment provides that the special 100-month recapture phase-out rules for subsidized low-income housing may apply even though rehabilitation expenditures for that housing have been amortized under Code section 191.

Effective date

The amendment applies to additions to capital account made after June 14, 1976 and before June 15, 1981.

[85] d. Employee of grantor or beneficiary treated as related person for purposes of the tax on generation-skipping transfers (sec. 107(a)(2)(B)(i) of the bill and sec. 2613(e) of the Code)

Present law

Under the generation-skipping provisions added by the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1], an individual is a beneficiary of a trust if he has a present or future power or interest in it. "Power" means "any power to establish or alter beneficial enjoyment of the corpus or income of the trust." A person has an "interest" if the person has either "a right to receive income or corpus from the trust" or "is a permissible recipient of such income or corpus." Thus, one can be a beneficiary by satisfying either or both of the tests. However, the Tax Reform Act of 1976 excluded certain independent trustees from being treated as beneficiaries solely because of powers which they held to distribute trust corpus and income.

The Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1] expanded the categories of individuals to whom independent trustees could make distributions without being treated as beneficiaries. Specifically, the 1978 Act excluded from the group of independent trustees any person who is an employee of a corporation in which the stockholdings of the grantor, the trust, and the beneficiaries of the trust are significant from the viewpoint of voting control, an employee of a corporation in which the grantor or any beneficiary of a trust is an executive, and an employee of a partnership in which the grantor or any beneficiary of the trust is a partner. However, the provision did not exclude a person who is directly employed by the grantor or any beneficiary of the trust.

[1] An identical provision was included in H.R. 6715 (95th Congress), the Technical Corrections bill, as passed by the House of Representatives and reported by the Finance Committee. The provision was also included in H.R. 13511 (95th Congress), the Revenue Act of 1978, as passed by the Senate. However, it was inadvertently deleted from the conference report on that bill.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that a person who is directly employed by the grantor or any beneficiary of the trust should not be considered an independent trustee for purposes of the generation-skipping tax.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that employees of the grantor or any beneficiary of the trust are excluded from the persons who can qualify as an independent trustee for purposes of the tax on generation-skipping transfers.

Effective date

The amendment is effective for any generation-skipping transfer made after June 11, 1976.

e. Certain powers of independent trustee not treated as a power for purposes of the tax on generation-skipping transfers (sec. 107(a)(2)(B)(ii) of the bill and sec. 2613(e) of the Code)

Present law

Under the generation-skipping provisions that were added by the Tax Reform Act of 1976, an individual is a beneficiary of a trust if he has a present or future power or interest in it. "Power" means "any power to establish or alter beneficial enjoyment of the corpus or income of the trust." A person has an "interest" if the person has either "a right to receive income or corpus from the trust" or "is a permissible recipient of such income or corpus." Thus, one can be a beneficiary by satisfying either or both of the tests. The Tax Reform [86] Act of 1976 excluded certain independent trustees from being treated as beneficiaries solely because of powers which they held to distribute trust corpus and income.

Section 702(n)(2) of the Revenue Act of 1978 expanded the categories of individuals to whom independent trustees could make distributions without being treated as beneficiaries. Under the 1978 Act amendment, an individual will not be treated as having a power if such an individual "is a trustee who has no interest in the trust" (emphasis added). Thus, an individual trustee who is the permissible appointee of trust assets under an unexercised power of appointment held by another would be deemed to have an interest in the trust and would therefore be treated as having a power over the trust. The trustee would be a beneficiary of the trust and the independent trustee exemption would be negated. However, the legislative history of the Revenue Act of 1978 states that an individual trustee will not be treated as a beneficiary if "he has no interest in the trust other than as a potential appointee under a power of appointment held by another."

Reasons for change

The committee believes that the position taken in the legislative history technically needs to be incorporated in the Internal Revenue Code.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that, solely for purposes of the independent trustee exemption, a trustee will not be treated as having an interest in the trust if his only interest is as a permissible appointee under an unexercised power of appointment held by another.

Effective date

The amendment is effective for any generation-skipping transfer made after June 11, 1976.

f. Estate tax treatment of gifts made within 3 years of death (sec. 107(a)(2)(F) of the bill and sec. 2035 of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Tax Reform Act of 1976, the gross estate of a decedent included all gifts made in contemplation of death that occurred less than 3 years before the date of the decedent's death. Under this rule, the Internal Revenue Service, for administrative purposes, generally required that only gifts in excess of $1,000 need be included in the estate tax return.

The Tax Reform Act of 1976 provided that all gifts made within 3 years of the decedent's death are to be included in the gross estate of the decedent, regardless of whether the gift was made in contemplation of death. However, the 1976 Act contained an exception to this inclusion rule for gifts to which the annual $3,000 gift tax exclusion applied. The legislative history was somewhat ambiguous and could be read to mean that this exception resulted in the inclusion of only the excess of the estate value of all gifts over the amount excludible under the gift tax annual exclusion.

The Technical Corrections bill, which was added to the 1978 Act, clarified the exception so that only gifts (other than transfer with [87] respect to a life insurance policy) which were made within 3 years of death and were not required to be included in a gift tax return were not to be included in a decedent's gross estate. Under this rule, the entire amount of the gift (and not just the excess of the value of the gift over $3,000) is includible in the gross estate where the aggregate annual gifts to a donee were in excess of $3,000. This clarification was to apply to gifts made after December 31, 1976.

Reasons for change

Because of the ambiguity that existed prior to the committee's action on this issue in October 1977, it is possible that gifts could have been made in excess of $3,000 based upon the assumption that only the excess of the value over $3,000 would be included in the gross estate as transfers within 3 years of death. Therefore, the committee believes that the "subtraction out" concept should be allowed with respect to gifts made before the adoption of the clarifying change by the Ways and Means Committee.

Explanation of provision

The amendment allows executors of decedents to elect with respect to all gifts made in 1977 (other than transfer with respect to a life insurance policy) to all donees to include in the decedent's gross estate only the excess of the death time value over the amount excluded in computing taxable gifts by reason of the $3,000 annual exclusion under section 2503(b). If an executor elects the application of the provision, there will be included in the decedent's gross estate the death time value less the amount excluded under section 2503(b) with respect to such gifts. If this election is made, it will apply to all gifts (other than transfers with respect to a life insurance policy) made by the decedent during 1977 which were made within 3 years of death.

The election by the executor must be made by the due date of the estate tax return (including extensions), or, if later, within 120 days after the date of the enactment of this bill.

Effective date

The amendment made by this provision applies with respect to estates of decedents who made gifts during 1977 which were made within 3 years of death.

Effective date

The provision applies to involuntary conversions after December 31, 1976. This is the same effective date as section 4 of Public Law 95-472.

g. Clerical and conforming amendments (sec. 107(a) of the bill and secs. 46(f), 103, 911, 1014(a), 1016 (a), 2613, and 6698 of the Code)

The following clerical and conforming amendments to the Technical Corrections to the Tax Reform Act of 1976 are made by this provision:

(1) Amendments to section 911.—The effective date of an amendment to section 911 is conformed to the effective date under section 209 of the Foreign Earned Income Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-615, 1978-2 C.B. 415]; the reference to "Subsection (c)" in section 701(a)(3) of the Revenue Act is corrected to read "Subsection (e)"; and the redesignation of paragraph (8) of section 911(c) is repealed.

[88] (2) Amendment to section 1014(a).—A typographical error in the reference to "section 2032A" is corrected.

(3) Amendments to section 2613.—Section 2613(e)(2)(B) is corrected by striking out clause (vi) which is identical to another clause.

(4) Amendment to section 1016 (a).—This redesignation of paragraph (23) is repealed.

(5) Amendment to section 6698.—Section 6698 relating to carryover basis is redesignated as section 6698A.

(6) Amendment to section 46(f).—A cross reference in section 46(f) is corrected to read "subsection (a)(7)(C)".

(7) Amendment to section 103.—A reference to "section 103(d)" is corrected to read "section 103(e)".

[89] B. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS TO OTHER 1978 TAX LEGISLATION

1. Technical Amendments Relating to the Foreign Earned Income Act of 1978

a. Use of tax tables by individuals excluding foreign earned income (sec. 108(a)(1)(A) of the bill and sec. 3 of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1], certain individuals working abroad were allowed to exclude from gross income up to $20,000 annually ($25,000 in some cases). The Tax Reform Act of 1976 amended this provision so that these individuals were taxed on their other income at the higher rate brackets which would have applied if the excluded earned income were not so excluded (i.e., the exclusion was "off the bottom"). This amendment made the use of tax tables inappropriate for these individuals and, under the Tax Reduction and Simplification Act of 1977 [Pub. L. 95-30, 1977-1 C.B. 451], they are not permitted to use the tables.

The Foreign Earned Income Act of 1978 [Pub L. 95-615, 1978-2 C.B. 415] made a number of changes in the foreign earned income exclusion. Among these is a rule that the excluded income is not taken into account in computing the tax on the taxpayer's other income (i.e., the exclusion is "off the top").

Reasons for change

Because the foreign earned income exclusion is taken "off the top" under the 1978 Act, the committee believes that the use of tax tables by taxpayers electing the exclusion is appropriate.

Explanation of provision

The bill would permit individuals who exclude foreign earned income to use the tax tables.

Effective date

The provision is generally effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1977. It does not apply, however, to any taxable year for which an individual elects to be taxed under the Tax Reform Act of 1976.

b. Definition of "earned income" for purposes of the deduction for excess foreign living costs (sec. 108(a)(1)(B) of the bill and sec. 913(j)(1)(A) of the Code)

Present law

The Foreign Earned Income Act of 1978 established a deduction for excess foreign living costs for Americans working abroad. The aggregate amount deductible under this provision cannot exceed the taxpayer's foreign "earned income," and his earned income also is relevant in the calculation of the excess costs, one element of the deduction. For purposes of determining earned income under present law, compensation received in the year after the services are per- [90] formed generally is considered received, and thus earned income, in the year in which the services were performed rather than the next year when the compensation is received. However, compensation received more than one year after the services were performed is not included in earned income for purposes of the housing deductions or the earned income limitation.

Reasons for change

Compensation arrangements for Americans working abroad may defer payment beyond the year following the year in which services are performed. If these payments are not taken into account in the performance year, the individual's earned income for that year and his base housing amount are reduced. This inflates the taxpayer's deduction for excess foreign housing costs and creates the potential for manipulation of the housing deduction.

Explanation of provision

The bill modifies the treatment of deferred compensation in computing the housing element of the excess living cost deduction under section 913.

First, for purposes of computing the housing element of the deduction, deferred compensation is taken into account in the year it is included in income, not the year in which the services giving rise to the compensation were performed. Accordingly, the bill eliminates the requirement of present law that the housing deduction for a year be recomputed and an amended return be filed in situations where the compensation for services performed that year is not taken into income until the following year. However, under the bill, deferred compensation received more than one taxable year after the taxable year in which services are performed is taken into account for purposes of computing the housing deduction, rather than being disregarded as under present law. (The bill continues the rule that compensation deferred for more than one year is not taken into account in computing the earned income limitation.)

Second, the bill provides a new recapture rule to deal with situations where a taxpayer defers compensation from a year in which he claims a deduction under section 913 for excess foreign housing costs (the "performance year") to a year in which he does not have an excess housing cost deduction. This recapture rule only applies where the compensation ("after-received compensation") is deferred for no more than 3 years after the year in which the services are performed. For purposes of determining the amount of recapture (if any), the taxpayer recomputes the qualified housing expense for both the performance year and the year of receipt as though the deferred compensation were received in the performance year rather than the year of receipt. Any decrease in the amount of the aggregate qualified housing expense deduction as a result of this recomputation will be recaptured by including an amount equal to such decrease in income (but not in "housing income") in the year of receipt.

The amount of the recapture is determined by aggregating the housing deduction for the present and all prior taxable years and subtracting from that total the aggregate of the recomputed housing [91] deduction for the present and all prior taxable years for which a housing deduction has been allowed. The recomputed housing deduction is determined by treating after-received compensation as housing income for the performance year instead of the year of receipt. The excess of the aggregate housing deductions actually taken in these years over the recomputed housing deduction for these years will be taken into income in the year the after-received compensation is received. However, any amount recaptured in one year shall not give rise to recapture in a subsequent year.

The computation of the recapture of excess housing deductions is illustrated by the following examples.

Example 1

In 1979, the taxpayer had $200 of housing income and $70 of housing expense. In 1980, he had $300 of housing income attributable to 1980, $100 of housing income that was after-received compensation attributable to 1979, and $90 of housing expenses.

Set forth below are the computations of the taxpayer's actual housing deduction for these two years and also the housing deductions for the two years as recomputed for purposes of determining the recapture amount:

	Actual		Recomputed
	1979	1980	1979	1980
Housing income	$200	$400	[1] $300	[2] $300
Less housing expenses	70	90	70	90
	$130	$310	$230	$210
	×20%	×20%	×20%	×20%
Base housing amount	$26	$62	$46	$42
Housing expenses	$70	$90	$70	$90
Base housing amount	26	62	46	42
Housing deduction	$44	$28	$24	$48

[1] $200 of housing income attributable to 1979 plus $100 of deferred compensation attributable to 1979.

[2] $300 of housing income attributable to 1980.

The aggregate actual housing deductions for the two years is $72 and the aggregate recomputed housing deduction for the two years is $72. Since the actual deduction does not exceed the recomputed deduction, there is no excess housing deduction to be recaptured.

This example illustrates the result that, if the taxpayer takes a housing deduction in the year the after-received compensation is received, there will be no recapture under this provision. This is because the after-received compensation will have been fully taken into account in computing the current year housing deduction, thus having increased the base housing amount by 20% of such compensation, and, correspondingly, reducing the housing deduction for the current year by 20% of the after-received compensation.

[92] Where the taxpayer does not take a housing deduction in the current year, there will be recapture if the taxpayer took a housing deduction in the performance year. This is because the full measure of the after-received compensation was not included in the computation of the housing deduction for the current year. The following example illustrates the recapture computation in this situation:

Example 2

Assume the same facts as in example 1 except that the taxpayer's housing expenses in 1980 were $60. The taxpayer's actual and recomputed housing expense in the two years would be as follows:

	Actual		Recomputed
	1979	1980	1979	1980
Housing income	$200	$400	$300	$300
Less housing expenses	70	60	70	60
	$130	$340	$230	$240
	×20%	×20%	×20%	×20%
Base housing amount	$26	$68	$46	$48
Housing expenses	$70	$60	$70	$60
Base housing amount	26	68	46	48
Housing deduction	$44	0	$24	$12

The aggregate actual housing deductions for the two years is $44 while the aggregate recomputed housing deductions is $36. Since the actual housing deductions exceed the recomputed housing deduction by $8, the taxpayer is required to recapture the $8 as income in 1980.

Effective date

The provision is generally effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1977. It does not apply, however, to any taxable year for which an individual elects to be taxed under the Tax Reform Act of 1976.

c. Clerical amendment to section 911 (a)(2) (sec. 108(a)(1)(C) of the bill and sec. 911(a)(2) of the Code)

Section 911(a)(2) is amended to refer to "a foreign country or countries" rather than to "qualified foreign countries".

d. Disallowance of deductions attributable to excluded foreign earned income (sec. 108(a)(1)(D) of the bill and sec. 911(a) of the Code)

Present law

Under the law prior to the Foreign Earned Income Act of 1978, an individual who excluded foreign earned income could not claim any deductions, or take a credit for any foreign income taxes, to the extent properly allocable to or chargeable against the excluded income. This provision (Code sec. 911(a)) was carried over under the 1978 Act but the words "any deduction" inadvertently were omitted with the result [93] that it was less clear that deductions, as well as foreign tax credits, allocable to exclude foreign earned income are to be disallowed.

Reasons for change

The committee believes that it should be made clear that deductions attributable to amounts excluded under the 1978 Act are to be disallowed.

Explanation of provision

The bill amends section 911(a) of the Code to make it clear that deductions, as well as credits, allocable to or chargeable against excluded earned income are not allowable.

Effective date

The provision is generally effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1977. It does not apply, however, to any taxable year for which an individual elects to be taxed under the Tax Reform Act of 1976.

e. Clerical amendment to section 3 (b) (sec. 108(a)(1)(E) of the bill and sec. 3(b) of the Code)

Section 3(b)(1) of the Code is amended by redesignating subparagraphs (B) and (C) as subparagraphs (A) and (B) respectively.

f. Definition of "qualified home leave expenses" for purposes of the deduction for excess foreign living costs (sec. 108(a)(1)(F) of the bill and sec. 913(g) of the Code)

Present law

The Foreign Earned Income Act of 1978 established a deduction for excess foreign living costs of Americans working abroad. One element of the deduction consists of the taxpayer's "qualified home leave expenses." These are defined by the 1978 Act to mean the reasonable amounts paid or incurred by or on behalf of an individual for the transportation of that individual, his spouse, and each dependent from the location of the individual's tax home outside the United States to (i) the individual's present (or, if none, most recent) principal residence in the United States, or (ii) if that rule does not apply to the individual, the nearest port of entry in the continental United States (excluding Alaska), and return.

Reasons for change

Under the 1978 Act, it is unclear whether the rule allowing a deduction for travel to the nearest U.S. port of entry applies to all individuals who do not return to their present (or most recent) U.S. principal residence or only to those individuals who never had a U.S. principal residence. Also, it is unclear whether a deduction is allowable if the taxpayer departs from, or returns to, a location abroad other than his tax home. The committee believes that both these points require clarification.

The nearest-port-of-entry rule under the 1978 Act excludes Alaska and Hawaii. This was intended to permit U.S. taxpayers in the Far East to deduct the cost of travel to the 48 contiguous states and not to be confined to the cost of travel to Alaska or Hawaii, if nearer. The committee believes that individuals should be allowed to elect to include [94] Alaskan and Hawaiian ports of entry so as to permit deduction of the costs of travel to the nearest of these ports.

Explanation of provision

The bill would make it clear that the qualified home leave expenses generally mean the travel costs from any point outside the United States to the individual's principal domestic residence, and from the individual's principal domestic residence to any point outside the United States. However, the amount of the deduction may not exceed the reasonable amount for round-trip transportation between the location of his tax home outside the United States and his principal domestic residence. For these purposes, his principal domestic residence is the location of his present (or, if none, most recent) principal residence in the United States.

The taxpayer need not return to the same foreign location from which he departed. If he ends one foreign assignment and begins another in conjunction with his home leave, acquiring a new foreign tax home, the limitation on the cost of travel to the United States is to be applied with respect to the old foreign tax home and the limitation on the cost of travel from the United States is to be applied with respect to the new foreign tax home.

If the individual's travel in the United States is not travel to and from his principal domestic residence, or if he never had a principal domestic residence, these rules are to be applied by substituting the nearest port of entry in the United States for the individual's principal domestic residence. As under the 1978 Act, the taxpayer may not deduct as qualified home leave expenses the cost of bringing his family abroad to visit him and of returning them to the United States. The travel must originate abroad and be to and from the United States.

The taxpayer may elect to include ports of entry in Alaska and Hawaii among U.S. ports of entry. Thus, if the taxpayer does not travel to his domestic principal residence, he may base his deduction under the nearest-port-of-entry rule on the cost of travel to the nearest port including ports in Alaska and Hawaii.

Effective date

The provision is generally effective for taxable years beginning after December 31, 1977. It does not apply, however, to any taxable year for which an individual elects to be taxed under the Tax Reform Act of 1976.

g. Clerical amendment to section 119 (sec. 108(a)(1)(G) of the bill and sec. 119 of the Code)

The heading of section 119(a) of the Code (relating to meals or lodging furnished for the convenience of the employer) is corrected.

(2) Amendment of sections 192(e) and 501(c)(21).—The references in sections 192(e) and 501(c)(21) of the Code are corrected to be the Federal Mine Safety and Health Act of 1977, instead of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969.

c. Clerical amendment (sec. 108(b)(3)(A) of the bill and sec. 3 of P.L. 95-227)

In section 3(c)(1) of the Black Lung Benefits Revenue Act of 1977, P.L. 95-227, the reference to "subsection (a)(4)" is corrected to "subsection (a)(5)."

d. Correction of cross reference in Code section 7454(b) (sec. 108(b)(3)(B) of the bill and sec. 7454 (b) of the Code)

The bill corrects a cross reference in Code section 7454(b) to Code section 501(c)(21) which was incorrectly referenced to Code section 502 (c)(21).

[96] 3. Technical Amendments Relating to the Energy Tax Act of 1978

a. Repayment of tax on gasoline used in commercial fishing vessels (sec. 108(c)(1) of the bill and sec. 6421 (d)(2) of the Code)

Present law

The Code provides that gasoline, diesel fuel, and special motor fuels purchased for use in commercial fishing vessels may be purchased free of the 4-cents-a-gallon Federal excise taxes on these fuels. In addition, prior to the Energy Tax Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-618, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 2) 1], the Code provided for a 2-cents-a-gallon reduction (through refund, credit, or exemption) of the excise taxes on gasoline, diesel fuel, and special motor fuel, and the refund (or credit) of the 6-cents-a-gallon tax on lubricating oil, with respect to gasoline, special fuels, and lubricating oil used (1) for nonbusiness, off-highway purposes (such as lawnmowers, snowmobiles, etc.) and (2) in motor boats (whether or not such use is business use). These reductions were eliminated by the Energy Tax Act: however, by cross-references the Act provided that articles sold as supplies for vessels employed in the fisheries or whaling business are not subject to the excise taxes on fuels or lubricating oil. These references made it clear that no change was intended with respect to the excise tax exemptions for commercial fishing vessels. If the sale of gasoline and lubricating oil is made to the fishermen other than by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, the Code provides for a refund (or credit) of the tax when the item is sold for use or is used as supplies for such vessels (Code secs. 6416(a) and (b)(2)(B)).

Reasons for change

In some circumstances, it appears that persons purchasing gasoline for use in commercial fishing vessels have been made worse off by the provisions of the Energy Tax Act, and this does not appear to be consistent with Congressional intent. This results from the elimination of the ability of the ultimate purchaser to obtain a 2-cents-a-gallon payment or credit directly from the Treasury for gasoline used in commercial fishing vessels. Although the 4-cents-a-gallon tax can be fully avoided by tax-free purchase, refund, or credit, this approach requires cooperation of the seller and all other persons in the chain of purchase back to the manufacturer, producer, or importer.[1] Apparently, in certain cases, cooperation from such parties is not available, and thus, denial of the 2-cents-a-gallon payment or credit may create a problem for certain taxpayers engaged in commercial fishing. A similar problem occurs with respect to lubricating oil; although a credit or refund can be obtained by a procedure which requires the cooperation of the seller (and the producer), the [97] provision which provided for a direct payment to the vessel operator (Code sec. 6424(a)) was indirectly amended to preclude such a payment.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that the 2-cent-a-gallon payment (or credit) for certain non-highway uses can be obtained with respect to gasoline used in a vessel employed in the fisheries or in the whaling business. Also, the bill provides that a direct payment or credit of the 6-cent-a-gallon tax on lubricating oil can be obtained with respect to lubricating oil used in such vessels.

Effective date

This provision applies to uses after December 31, 1978. This is the same effective date as applies to related provisions which were added by section 222 of the Energy Tax Act of 1978.

b. Tires used in the manufacture of buses (sec. 108(c)(2) of the bill and secs. 4071(e), 6416(b)(3)(C), and 6416(b)(4)(B) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Energy Tax Act of 1978, a 10-percent manufacturers excise tax was imposed on the sale of buses having a gross vehicle weight of more than 10,000 pounds, with certain exceptions (Code sec. 4061(a)). Another provision (Code sec. 4071) imposes excise taxes on tires, inner tubes, and tread rubber. These taxes generally apply to tires and inner tubes used on buses (as well as other tires, inner tubes, and tread rubber).

The Energy Tax Act repealed the excise tax on buses. In the case of excise taxes on highway tires, inner tubes, and tread rubber, the Energy Tax Act also provided an exemption for sales by a manufacturer, producer, or importer of such items "sold for use" by the purchaser on or in connection with an intercity, local, or school bus.

Reasons for change

Present law allows any bus to be sold free of the 10-percent manufacturers excise tax that had previously been imposed on bus bodies and chassis. Also, the owner of an "intercity, local or school bus" can purchase tires, inner tubes, or tread rubber for use on such a bus free of the excise taxes on such items (by exemption, credit, or refund). Tires and inner tubes also may be purchased tax free by a vehicle manufacturer to be placed on a chassis which is to be sold (among other things) to a State or local government or a private nonprofit school. If purchased tax-paid and then so used, a credit or refund of tax is available to the vehicle manufacturer. However, if a manufacturer purchases tires or inner tubes to be placed on a bus which is for domestic use by other than a State or local government or by a nonprofit school, the excise taxes on tires and inner tubes are imposed, and there is no provision for credit or refund of such taxes. Since the basic excise tax on bus bodies and chassis has been repealed, the committee believes that tires and tubes purchased by a manufacturer and placed on every new bus should be exempt from the excise tax on tires and tubes (as well as the excise tax on buses).

[98] Explanation of provisions

The bill provides that, if tires or inner tubes are sold on a tax-paid basis to a manufacturer of bus chassis or bodies, the tire tax is to be credited or refunded to the bus manufacturer upon the sale of the chassis or body.

Effective date

This provision applies to tires and inner tubes which are to be used on a bus which is sold on or after April 20, 1977. This effective date is essentially the same as the effective date of section 231 of the Energy Tax Act of 1978, which repealed the excise tax on bus bodies and chassis effective for sales on or after April 20, 1977.

c. Refund of tax on lubricating oil used in producing rerefined oil (sec. 108(c)(3) of the bill and sec. 6416 of the Code).

Present law

Under present law, a six-cent-per-gallon manufacturers excise tax is imposed on lubricating oil (other than cutting oils) sold in the U.S. by a manufacturer or producer, or used by a manufacturer or producer. The sale of recycled oil is not subject to the tax. However, prior to the Energy Tax Act, the excise tax was imposed on lubricating oil mixed with the used oil.

[1] See Rev. Rul. 79-48, 1979-1 C.B. 434.

Section 404 of the Energy Tax Act exempted the sale of new lubricating oil from the excise tax where the oil is sold for use in a blend with previously used or waste lubricating oil which has been cleaned, renovated, or refined. Such a blend is designated as "rerefined oil."

The exemption applies if the blend contains 25 percent or more of waste oil. All of the new oil in a mixture is exempt from the tax if the blend contains 55 percent or less of new oil. If it contains more than 55 percent new oil, the exemption applies only to so much of the new oil as does not exceed 55 percent of the blend. However, no provision was made for refunds of the excise tax where tax-paid new oil is mixed with waste oil.

Reason for change

The committee believes that a tax refund should be permitted to the extent that new oil sold for use and used in rerefined oil would be exempt from the manufacturers excise tax.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides for credit or refund of tax paid with respect to new oil in rerefined oil to the extent that the blend of new and waste oil would be exempt from the manufacturers excise tax. As a result, refunds will be available for the tax paid on up to 55 percent of a blend of new and waste lubricating oil which contains at least 25 percent of waste oil. However, refunds would not be available until the blend is used or sold.

Effective date

Credit or refund is to be available for new oil mixed with waste oil on or after December 1, 1978 (and sold or used after that date), the effective date of section 404 of the Energy Tax Act of 1978.

[99] d. Credit or refund of tax on truck bodies or chassis used in the manufacture of buses (sec. 108(c)(4) of the bill and sec. 6416(b)(3) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Energy Tax Act of 1978, with certain exceptions, a 10-percent manufacturers excise tax was imposed on the sale of truck or bus bodies or chassis for use on a vehicle having a gross vehicle weight of more than 10,000 pounds (Code sec. 4061(a)).

The Energy Tax Act repealed the excise tax on bus bodies and chassis, but not the excise tax on truck bodies and chassis.

Reason for change

The committee believes it is consistent with the policy of the Energy Tax Act to provide for a credit or refund of tax in situations where a person converts a truck body or chassis (on which tax has been paid) to a bus.

Explanation of provision

The bill permits a person who modifies a truck chassis or truck body into a bus to obtain a credit or refund of the tax paid with respect to the truck chassis or body.

Effective date

This provision applies, in general, to the sale of truck bodies and chassis on or after April 20, 1977, in the same manner as if this provision had been included in section 231(a) of the Energy Tax Act of 1978.

e. Excise tax exemption for bus parts (sec. 108(c)(5) of the bill and sec. 4221(e)(6) of the Code)

Present law

Prior to the Energy Tax Act of 1978, an 8-percent manufacturers excise tax was imposed on parts and accessories (other than tires and inner tubes which are taxed separately under Code sec. 4071) of the type used on buses and trucks (Code sec. 4061(b)).

The Energy Tax Act of 1978 repealed the 8-percent manufacturers excise tax on bus parts and accessories. Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, the parts and accessories tax was not to apply to any part or accessory which is "sold for use" by the purchaser on or in connection with a bus. It was contemplated that such parts and accessories would be sold tax-free by the manufacturer, producer, or importer for use on or in connection with a bus only if appropriate evidence of exemption were furnished by the purchaser. If the sale of the parts and accessories is made other than by the manufacturer, producer, or importer, the Act provided for a refund of the 8-percent tax where the part or accessory is "sold for use" by the purchaser on or in connection with a bus. Thus, parts and accessories that may be interchangeable between trucks and buses continued to be subject to the parts tax if they are not "sold for use" with respect to buses.

[100] Reasons for change

Present law requires that the excise tax be paid on bus parts where such parts are sold to distributors and to subsequent purchasers in the marketing chain. An application is then filed and a rebate is applied for once the ultimate user of the bus part purchases it.

The committee believes that this procedure is unnecessary and that it is appropriate to allow a tax-free sale for resale of bus parts in certain circumstances.

Explanation of provision

The bill provides that, under regulations prescribed by the Treasury, a manufacturer may make a tax-free sale of bus parts to a purchaser for resale to the consumer or to a second purchaser for resale by such second purchaser to the consumer. The provision for tax-free sales may be made only where permitted by Treasury regulations because, in many instances, it is difficult for a manufacturer (or the Treasury) to determine at the point of sale whether certain parts will be used on a bus (and thus be tax-free) or on a truck (and thus be subject to tax). Thus, this grant of authority to the Treasury is designed to allow the Treasury to permit the use of the tax-free sale procedure to the extent feasible without requiring such a procedure where the Treasury does not have reasonable assurances that the parts ultimately will be used on a bus.

The House bill does not contain a comparable provision.

Effective date

The provision is effective for sales

by the manufacturer, producer, or importer on or after the first day of the first calendar month beginning more than 10 days after the date of enactment.

f. Clerical amendment relating to denial of investment credit for certain boilers (sec. 108(c)(6) of the bill and sec. 48(a)(10)(B) of the Code)

This amendment corrects a cross-reference in Code section 48(a)(10)(B) to read "section 46(f)(5)" instead of "section 46(f)(51)."

[101] 4. Technical Amendment to Public Law 95-472

Security for recapture of estate tax reduction from special use valuation where property has been involuntarily converted (sec. 108(d) of the bill and sec. 6324B(c) of the Code)

Present law

The Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1] provided that certain property used for farming or in a closely held business may be valued for estate tax purposes at its current use value instead of its highest and best use value. However, if the property is disposed of within a 15-year period, all or part of the estate tax benefit is recaptured. A lien is placed on the property for the amount of the potential recapture tax.

Section 4 of Public Law 95-472 [1978-2 C.B. 373] provides that if an involuntary conversion of qualified real property takes place, no recapture of the estate tax benefit will occur if the property is replaced by other real property of at least equal value acquired for the same use.

Reasons for change

Present law generally requires that the replacement property be treated in the same manner as the property which was subject to special use valuation. Thus, if the replacement property is sold during the recapture period, the recapture tax would apply in the same general manner as if the involuntarily converted property had been sold.

Present law is unclear as to whether the lien that was placed on the involuntarily converted property is transferred to the replacement property.

Explanation of provision

The bill makes it clear that the lien that applies to special use valuation property which is involuntarily converted applies to qualified replacement property.

[102] IV. EFFECT OF THE BILL ON THE BUDGET AND VOTE OF THE COMMITTEE IN REPORTING THE BILL

Budget Effect

In compliance with section 252(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970, the following statement is made about the effect on the budget of this bill, H.R. 2797, as reported by the committee. The committee estimates that the bill will have a negligible net effect on budget receipts in fiscal year 1980; will reduce budget receipts by less than $5 million in fiscal years 1981 and 1982, and by less than $1 million in fiscal year 1983; and have a negligible effect on budget receipts in fiscal year 1984.

The Treasury Department agrees with this statement.

New Budget Authority and Tax Expenditures

In accordance with section 308 of the Budget Act, after consultation with the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, the committee states that the changes made to existing law by this bill involve no new budget authority or new tax expenditures, and would affect existing tax expenditures as follows: the provision relating to definition of youth under the targeted jobs tax credit would increase tax expenditures by a negligible amount in fiscal year 1980, less than $5 million in fiscal years 1981 and 1982, and less than $1 million in fiscal year 1983.

Consultation with Congressional Budget Office on Budget Estimates

In accordance with section 403 of the Budget Act, the committee advises that the Director of the Congressional Budget Office has examined the committee's budget estimates (as indicated above) and agrees with the methodology used and the resulting revenue estimates for the bill as reported.

Vote of the Committee

In compliance with section 133 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, the following statement is made about the vote of the committee on the motion to report the bill, as amended. The bill, H.R. 2797, as amended, was ordered favorably reported by voice vote.

[103] V. REGULATORY IMPACT OF THE BILL

Pursuant to paragraph 5 of Rule XXIX of the Standing Rules of the Senate, the committee makes the following statement concerning the regulatory impact that might be incurred in carrying out the provisions of H.R. 2797, as reported by the committee.

A. Numbers of individuals and businesses who would be regulated.—The provisions of this bill are primarily to make technical, conforming, clarifying and clerical amendments in order to make corrections or clarifying changes in certain income and estate and gift tax provisions of the Revenue Act of 1978 [Pub. L. 95-600, 1978-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1], and of the 1978 tax legislation.

B. Economic impact of regulation on individuals, consumers, and businesses affected.—The provisions will make it easier for affected taxpayers to understand and comply with the tax code changes made by the Revenue Act of 1978 and other 1978 tax legislation.

C. Impact on personal privacy.—The bill makes negligible changes in those provisions of Federal law relating to the personal privacy of taxpayers.

D. Determination of the amount of paperwork.—The bill will involve little, if any, additional paperwork for taxpayers. It will reduce the uncertainties and paperwork for some taxpayers affected by the tax law changes made by the Revenue Act of 1978 and other 1978 tax legislation.

[104] VI. CHANGES IN EXISTING LAW MADE BY THE BILL AS REPORTED

In the opinion of the committee, it is necessary in order to expedite the business of the Senate, to dispense with the requirements of subsection 4 of rule XXIX of the Standing Rules of the Senate (relating to the showing of changes in existing law made by the bill, H.R. 2797, as reported by the committee).

Part IV. Items of General Interest

New Election Form for Carryover Basis

Announcement 80-63

New Form 5970-A, Election of Carryover Basis, has been developed to allow the election of the carryover basis rules.

Public Law 96-223 repealed the carryover basis rules of section 1023 of the Internal Revenue Code. However, a provision of this law allows the personal representatives of the estates of decedents who died after December 31, 1976, and before November 7, 1978, to elect the carryover basis rules. The election, once made, is irrevocable and must be made on or before July 31, 1980.

The personal representative makes this election by filing Form 5970-A, Election of Carryover Basis. If the election is made, the carryover basis rules must be applied to all carryover basis property, including jointly owned property, acquired or passed from the decedent. Also, if the estate has previously filed a Form 5970, Information Notice to IRS as Required by IRC Section 6039A(a), and has notified the distributees of their carryover basis as required by that form, a timely filed election must still be made by Form 5970-A in order for the carryover basis rules to apply.

The form is now available at Internal Revenue Service offices.

Announcement of the Disbarment, Suspension, or Consent to Voluntary Suspension of Attorneys, Certified Public Accountants, Enrolled Agents and Enrolled Actuaries from Practice before the Internal Revenue Service

Under Section 1026, Title 31 of the United States Code (1970 ed.), the Secretary of the Treasury, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, is authorized to suspend or disbar from practice before the Internal Revenue Service any person who has violated the rules and regulations governing the recognition of attorneys, certified public accountants, enrolled agents or enrolled actuaries to practice before the Internal Revenue Service.

Attorneys, certified public accountants, enrolled agents and enrolled actuaries are prohibited in any Internal Revenue Service matter from directly or indirectly employing, accepting assistance from, being employed by or sharing fees with, any practitioner disbarred or under suspension from practice before the Internal Revenue Service.

This announcement will appear and will continue to appear in the weekly Bulletins for five successive weeks for each attorney, certified public accountant, enrolled agent or enrolled actuary so suspended or disbarred and will later be consolidated and published in the Cumulative Bulletin.

By decision on appeal from an initial decision in an administrative hearing, the following individuals have been suspended or disbarred from further practice before the Internal Revenue Service:

Name	Address	Designation	Effective Date
Sydney M. Eisenberg	Milwaukee, WI	Attorney	April 17, 1980 Disbarment
Leon Feldt	El Paso, TX	Certified Public Accountant	March 26, 1980 Disbarment
David I. Kali	Tucson, AZ	Attorney	Indefinite Suspension from April 1, 1980
Angelos P. Romas	Endicott, NY	Attorney	April 9, 1980 Disbarment

Definition of Terms

Revenue Rulings and Revenue Procedures (hereinafter referred to as "rulings") that have an effect on previous rulings use the following defined terms to describe the effect:

Amplified describes a situation where no change is being made in a prior published position, but the prior position is being extended to apply to a variation of the fact situation set forth therein. Thus, if an earlier ruling held that a principle applied to A, and the new ruling holds that the same principle also applies to B, the earlier ruling is amplified. (Compare with modified, below).

Clarified is used in those instances where the language in a prior ruling is being made clear because the language has caused, or may cause, some confusion. It is not used where a position in a prior ruling is being changed.

Distinguished describes a situation where a ruling mentions a previously published ruling and points out an essential difference between them.

Modified is used where the substance of a previously published position is being changed. Thus, if a prior ruling held that a principle applied to A but not to B, and the new ruling holds that it applies to both A and B, the prior ruling is modified because it corrects a published position. (Compare with amplified and clarified, above).

Obsoleted describes a previously published ruling that is not considered determinative with respect to future transactions. This term is most commonly used in a ruling that lists previously published rulings that are obsoleted because of changes in law or regulations. A ruling may also be obsoleted because the substance has been included in regulations subsequently adopted.

Revoked describes situations where the position in the previously published ruling is not correct and the correct position is being stated in the new ruling.

Superseded describes a situation where the new ruling does nothing more than restate the substance and situation of a previously published ruling (or rulings). Thus, the term is used to republish under the 1954 Code and regulations the same position published under the 1939 Code and regulations. The term is also used when it is desired to republish in a single ruling a series of situations, names, etc., that were previously published over a period of time in separate rulings. If the new ruling does more than restate the substance of a prior ruling, a combination of terms is used. For example, modified and superseded describes a situation where the substance of a previously published ruling is being changed in part and is continued without change in part and it is desired to restate the valid portion of the previously published ruling in a new ruling that is self contained. In this case the previously published ruling is first modified and then, as modified, is superseded.

Supplemented is used in situations in which a list, such as a list of the names of countries, is published in a ruling and that list is expanded by adding further names in subsequent rulings. After the original ruling has been supplemented several times, a new ruling may be published that includes the list in the original ruling and the additions, and supersedes all prior rulings in the series.

Suspended is used in rare situations to show that the previous published rulings will not be applied pending some future action such as the issuance of new or amended regulations, the outcome of cases in litigation, or the outcome of a Service study.

Department of the Treasury
Internal Revenue Service

Statement of Principles of Internal Revenue Tax Administration

The function of the Internal Revenue Service is to administer the Internal Revenue Code. Tax policy for raising revenue is determined by Congress.

With this in mind, it is the duty of the Service to carry out that policy by correctly applying the laws enacted by Congress; to determine the reasonable meaning of various Code provisions in light of the Congressional purpose in enacting them; and to perform this work in a fair and impartial manner, with neither a government nor a taxpayer point of view.

At the heart of administration is interpretation of the Code. It is the responsibility of each person in the Service, charged with the duty of interpreting the law, to try to find the true meaning of the statutory provision and not to adopt a strained construction in the belief that he is "protecting the revenue." The revenue is properly protected only when we ascertain and apply the true meaning of the statute.

The Service also has the responsibility of applying and administering the law in a reasonable, practical manner. Issues should only be raised by examining officers when they have merit, never arbitrarily or for trading purposes. At the same time, the examining officer should never hesitate to raise a meritorious issue. It is also important that care be exercised not to raise an issue or to ask a court to adopt a position inconsistent with an established Service position.

Administration should be both reasonable and vigorous. It should be conducted with as little delay as possible and with great courtesy and considerateness. It should never try to overreach, and should be reasonable within the bounds of law and sound administration. It should, however, be vigorous in requiring compliance with law and it should be relentless in its attack on unreal tax devices and fraud.

Introduction

The Internal Revenue Bulletin is the authoritative instrument of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for announcing official rulings and procedures of the Internal Revenue Service and for publishing Treasury Decisions, Executive Orders, Tax Conventions, legislation, court decisions, and other items of general interest. It is published weekly and may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. Bulletin contents of a permanent nature are consolidated semiannually into Cumulative Bulletins, which are sold on a single-copy basis.

It is the policy of the Service to publish in the Bulletin all substantive rulings necessary to promote a uniform application of the tax laws, including all rulings that supersede, revoke, modify, or amend any of those previously published in the Bulletin. All published rulings apply retroactively unless otherwise indicated. Procedures relating solely to matters of internal management are not published; however, statements of internal practices and procedures that affect the rights and duties of taxpayers are published.

Revenue rulings represent the conclusions of the Service on the application of the law to the pivotal facts stated in the revenue ruling. In those based on positions taken in rulings to taxpayers or technical advice to Service field offices, identifying details and information of a confidential nature are deleted to prevent unwarranted invasions of privacy and to comply with statutory requirements.

Rulings and procedures reported in the Bulletin do not have the force and effect of Treasury Department Regulations, but they may be used as precedents. Unpublished rulings will not be relied on, used, or cited as precedents by Service personnel in the disposition of other cases. In applying published rulings and procedures, the effect of subsequent legislation, regulations, court decisions, rulings, and procedures must be considered, and Service personnel and others concerned are cautioned against reaching the same conclusions in other cases unless the facts and circumstances are substantially the same.

The Bulletin is divided into four parts as follows:

Part I.—1954 Code.

This part includes rulings and decisions based on provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

Part II.—Treaties and Tax Legislation.

This part is divided into two subparts as follows: Subpart A, Tax Conventions, and Subpart B, Legislation and Related Committee Reports.

Part III.—Administrative, Procedural, and Miscellaneous.

To the extent practicable, pertinent cross references to these subjects are contained in the other Parts and Subparts.

Part IV.—Items of General Interest.

With the exception of the disbarment and suspension list included in this part, none of these announcements is consolidated in the Cumulative Bulletins.

The first Bulletin for each month includes an index for the matters published during the preceding month. These monthly indexes are cumulated on a quarterly and semiannual basis, and are published in the first Bulletin of the succeeding quarterly and semi-annual period, respectively.

The Bulletin Index-Digest System, a research and reference service supplementing the Bulletin, may be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents on a subscription basis. It consists of four Services: Service No. 1, Income Tax; Service No. 2, Estate and Gift Taxes; Service No. 3, Employment Taxes; Service No. 4, Excise Taxes. Each Service consists of a basic volume and a cumulative supplement that provide (1) finding lists of items published in the Bulletin, (2) digests of revenue rulings, revenue procedures, and other published items, and (3) topical indexes of Public Laws, Treasury Decisions, and Tax Conventions.

The contents of this publication are not copyrighted and may be reprinted freely. A citation of the Internal Revenue Bulletin as the source would be appropriate.

ARTICLE 5—PERMANENT ESTABLISHMENT

(1) For the purposes of this Convention, the term "permanent establishment" means a fixed place of business through which the business of an enterprise is wholly or partly carried on.

(2) The term "permanent establishment" shall include especially:

(a) a branch;

(b) an office;

(c) a factory;

(f) a building or construction or installation project which does not exist for more than 12 months.

(4) A person acting in a Contracting State on behalf of an enterprise of the other Contracting State—other than an agent of an independent status to whom paragraph (5) applies—shall be deemed to be a permanent establishment of the enterprise in the first-mentioned State if such person has, and habitually exercises in that State, an authority to conclude contracts in the name of the enterprise, unless the contracts are confined to the activities described in paragraph (3) of this Article.

(5) An enterprise of a Contracting State shall not be deemed to have a permanent establishment in the other Contracting State merely because it carries on business in that other State through a broker, general commission agent or any other agent of independent status, where such persons are acting in the ordinary course of their business.

(6) The fact that a corporation which is a resident of a Contracting State controls or is controlled by a corporation which is a resident of the other Contracting State, or which carries on business in that other State (whether through a permanent establishment or otherwise), shall not of itself constitute either corporation a permanent establishment of the other.

ARTICLE 6—INCOME FROM IMMOVABLE PROPERTY (REAL PROPERTY)

(1) Income from immovable property (real property), including income from agriculture or forestry, may be taxed in the Contracting State in which such property is situated.

(2) The term "immovable property" shall be defined in accordance with the law of the Contracting State in which the property in question is situated. (3) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall apply to income derived from the direct use, letting, or use in any other form of immovable property.

ARTICLE 7—BUSINESS PROFITS

If the enterprise carries on business as aforesaid, the business profits of the enterprise may be taxed in that other State but only so much of them as is attributable to that permanent establishment.

(2) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (3), where an enterprise of a Contracting State carries on business in the other Contracting State through a permanent establishment situated therein, there shall in each Contracting State be attributed to that permanent establishment the profits which it might be expected to make if it were a distinct and separate enterprise engaged in the same or similar activities under the same or similar conditions and dealing wholly independently with the enterprise of which it is a permanent establishment.

(3) In the determination of the profits of a permanent establishment, there shall be allowed as deductions those expenses which are incurred for the purposes of the permanent establishment, including a reasonable allocation of executive and general administrative expenses, research and development expenses, interest, and other expenses incurred for the purposes of the enterprise as a whole (or the part thereof which includes the permanent establishment), whether incurred in the State in which the permanent establishment is situated or elsewhere.

(4) No business profits shall be attributed to a permanent establishment by reason of the mere purchase by that permanent establishment of goods or merchandise for the enterprise.

(5) For the purposes of the preceding paragraphs, the profits to be attributed to the permanent establishment shall be determined by the same method year by year unless there is good and sufficient reason to the contrary.

(6) Where profits include items of income which are dealt with separately in other Articles of this Convention, then the provisions of those Articles shall not be affected by the provisions of this Article.

(7) For the purposes of this Convention, "business profits" includes, but is not limited to, income derived from manufacturing, mercantile, banking, insurance, agricultural, fishing or mining activities, the operation of ships or aircraft, the furnishing of services, the rental of tangible personal (movable) property, and the rental or licensing of cinematographic films or films or tapes used for radio or television broadcasting or from copyrights thereof. Such term also includes any other income effectively connected with a permanent establishment which the recipient, being a resident of one of the Contracting States, has in the other Contracting State. Such term does not include the performance of personal services by an individual either as an employee or in an independent capacity.

ARTICLE 8—SHIPPING AND AIR TRANSPORT

(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of Article 7 (Business Profits), profits of an enterprise of a Contracting State from the operation in international traffic of ships or aircraft registered under the laws of the Contracting State in which the person carrying on the enterprise is resident shall be taxable only in that State.

(2) For the purposes of this Article, profits from the operation of ships or aircraft in international traffic include profits derived from the rental on a bareboat basis of ships or aircraft operated in international traffic if such rental income is incidental to other income described in paragraph (1).

(3) Notwithstanding the provisions of Article 7 (Business Profits), profits of an enterprise of a Contracting State from the use, maintenance or rental of containers (including trailers and related equipment for the transport of containers) used for the transport of goods or merchandise in international traffic shall be taxable only in that State.

(4) Gains derived by an enterprise of a Contracting State from the alienation of ships, aircraft or containers owned and operated by the enterprise, the income from which is taxable only in that State, shall be taxable only in that State.

ARTICLE 9—ASSOCIATED ENTERPRISES

(1) Where an enterprise of a Contracting State is related to another enterprise and conditions are made or imposed between the two enterprises in their commercial or financial relations which differ from those which would have been made between independent enterprises, then any income, deductions, receipts, or outgoings which would, but for those conditions, have been attributed to one of the enterprises but by reason of those conditions have not been so attributed, may be taken into account in computing the profits or losses of that enterprise and taxed accordingly.

(2) Where any income, deductions, receipts, or outgoings which have been taken into account in one Contracting State in computing the profits or losses of an enterprise are also taken into account in the other Contracting State in computing the profits and losses of a related enterprise in accordance with paragraph (1) of this Article, then the first-mentioned State shall make such adjustment as may be appropriate to the amount of tax charged on those profits in that State.

(3) If one Contracting State disagrees with the amount of any income, deductions, receipts, or outgoings, taken into account in computing profits or losses in the other in accordance with paragraph (1), the two Contracting States shall endeavor to reach agreement in accordance with the procedure in Article 25 (Mutual Agreement Procedure).

(4) Except as specifically provided in this Article, in determining the tax liability of an enterprise doing business in a Contracting State, or in a political subdivision or local authority of a Contracting State, such Contracting State, political subdivision, or local authority shall not take into account the income, deductions, receipts, or outgoings of a related enterprise of the other Contracting State or of an enterprise of any third State related to an enterprise of the other Contracting State.

(5) For the purposes of this Convention, an enterprise is related to another enterprise if either enterprise directly or indirectly controls the other, or if any third person or persons (related to each other or acting together) control both.

ARTICLE 10—DIVIDENDS

(1) Dividends derived from a corporation which is a resident of a Contracting State by a resident of the other Contracting State may be taxed in the other Contracting State. However, such dividends may be taxed in the Contracting State of which the corporation paying the dividends is a resident, but if the beneficial owner is a resident of the other Contracting State, the tax so charged shall not exceed 15 per cent of the gross amount of the dividends.

(2) As long as an individual resident in the United Kingdom is entitled under United Kingdom law to a tax credit in respect of dividends paid by a corporation which is resident in the United Kingdom, paragraph (1) of this Article shall not apply. In these circumstances, dividends derived from a corporation which is a resident of a Contracting State by a resident of the other Contracting State may be taxed in the other Contracting State. However, such dividends may be taxed in the Contracting State of which the corporation paying the dividends is a resident, but if the beneficial owner is a resident of the other Contracting State, the tax so charged shall not exceed the tax provided in sub-paragraphs (a) and (b) below:

(a) In the case of dividends paid by a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom:

(i) to a United States corporation which either alone or together with one or more associated corporations controls, directly or indirectly, at least 10 per cent of the voting stock of the corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom paying the dividend, the United States corporation shall be entitled to a payment from the United Kingdom of a tax credit equal to one-half of the tax credit to which an individual resident in the United Kingdom would have been entitled had he received the dividend, subject to the deduction withheld from such payment and according to the laws of the United Kingdom of an amount not exceding 5 per cent of the aggregate of the amount or value of the dividend and the amount of the tax credit paid to such corporation;

(ii) in all other cases, the resident of the United States to whom such dividend is paid shall be entitled to a payment from the United Kingdom of the tax credit to which an individual resident in the United Kingdom would have been entitled had he received the dividend, subject to the deduction withheld from such payment and according to the laws of the United Kingdom of an amount not exceeding 15 per cent of the aggregate of the amount or value of the dividend and the amount of the tax credit paid to such resident;

(iii) the aggregate of the amount or value of the dividend and the amount of the tax credit referred to in sub-paragraphs (a) (i) and (ii) of this paragraph paid by the United Kingdom to the United States corporation or other resident (without reduction for the 5 or 15 per cent deduction, as the case may be, by the United Kingdom) shall be treated as a dividend for United States tax credit purposes.

(b) In the case of dividends paid by a United States corporation:

(i) to a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom and controls, directly or indirectly, at least 10 per cent of the voting stock of the United States corporation paying such dividend, the tax charged by the United States shall not exceed 5 per cent of the gross amount of the dividend;

(ii) in all other cases, the tax charged by the United States on payment of a dividend to a resident of the United Kingdom shall not exceed 15 per cent of the gross amount of the dividend.

For the purposes of this paragraph, two corporations shall be deemed to be associated if one controls directly or indirectly more than 50 per cent of the voting power in the other corporation, or a third corporation controls more than 50 per cent of the voting power in both of them.

(3) The term "dividends" for United Kingdom tax purposes includes any item which under the law of the United Kingdom is treated as a distribution and for United States tax purposes includes any item which under the law of the United States is treated as a distribution out of earnings and profits.

(4) Paragraph (1) or (2), as the case may be, shall not apply if the person deriving the dividends, being a resident of a Contracting State, carries on business in the other Contracting State through a permanent establishment situated therein, or performs in that other State independent personal services from a fixed base situated therein, and the holding in respect of which the dividends are paid is effectively connected with such permanent establishment or fixed base. In such a case the provisions of Articles 7 (Business Profits), 14 (Independent Personal Services), or 17 (Artistes and Athletes), as the case may be, shall apply.

(5) Where a corporation which is a resident of a Contracting State derives profits or income from the other Contracting State, that other State may not impose any tax on the dividends paid by the corporation, except insofar as such dividends are paid to a resident of that other State (and where that other State is the United States, to a national of the United States) or insofar as the holding in respect of which the dividends are paid is effectively connected with a permanent establishment or fixed base situated in that other State, even if the dividends paid consist wholly or partly of profits or income arising in that other State.

(6) A corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom shall be exempt from United States tax on its accumulated or undistributed earnings, profits, income or surplus, if individuals (other than nationals of the United States) who are residents of the United Kingdom control, directly or indirectly, throughout the last half of the taxable year, more than 50 per cent of the entire voting power in such corporation.

(7) (a) If the beneficial owner of a dividend being a resident of a Contracting State owns 10 per cent or more of the class of shares of a corporation in respect of which the dividend is paid, then paragraph (1), or as the case may be paragraph (2), of this Article shall not apply to the dividend to the extent that it can have been paid only out of profits which the corporation paying the dividend earned or other income which it received in a period ending 12 months or more before the relevant date. For the purposes of this paragraph the term "relevant date" means the date on which the beneficial owner of the dividend became the owner of 10 per cent or more of the class of shares in question.

(b) Paragraphs (1) and (2) of this Article shall not apply if:

(i) the recipient of the dividend is exempt from tax thereon in the United States; and

(ii) the dividend is paid in such circumstances that, if the recipient were a resident of the United Kingdom exempt from United Kingdom tax, the exemption would be limited or removed.

Provided that this paragraph shall not apply if the beneficial owner of the dividend shows that the shares were acquired for bona fide commercial reasons and not primarily for the purposes of securing the benefits of this Article.

ARTICLE 11—INTEREST

(1) Interest derived and beneficially owned by a resident of the United Kingdom shall be exempt from tax by the United States.

(2) Interest derived and beneficially owned by a resident of the United States shall be exempt from tax by the United Kingdom.

(3) The term "interest" as used in this Article means income from Government securities, bonds or debentures, whether or not secured by mortgage and whether or not carrying a right to participate in profits, and other debt claims of every kind as well as all other income assimilated to income from money lent by the taxation law of the State in which the income arises but subject to the provisions of paragraph (7) of this Article shall not include any income which is treated as a distribution under the provisions of Article 10 (Dividends). Penalty charges for late payment shall not be regarded as interest for the purpose of this Article.

(4) The provisions of paragraphs (1) and (2) shall not apply if the person deriving the interest, being a resident of a Contracting State, carries on business in the other Contracting State through a permanent establishment situated therein, or performs in that other State independent personal services from a fixed base situated therein, and the debt claim in respect of which the interest is paid is effectively connected with such permanent establishment or fixed base. In such a case, the provisions of Article 7 (Business Profits), Article 14 (Independent Personal Services), or Article 17 (Artistes and Athletes), as the case may be, shall apply.

(5) Where, owing to a special relationship between the payer and the person deriving the interest or between both of them and some other person, the amount of the interest paid exceeds for whatever the reason the amount which would have been paid in the absence of such relationship, the provisions of this Article shall apply only to the last-mentioned amount. In that case, the excess part of the payments shall remain taxable according to the law of each Contracting State, due regard being had to the other provisions of this Convention.

(6) Whether or not a resident of a Contracting State derives profits or income from the other Contracting State, the other State may not impose any tax on the interest paid by that resident, except insofar as such inerest is paid to a resident of that other State (and where that other State is the United States, to a national of the United States) or insofar as the debt claim in respect of which the interest is paid is effectively connected with a permanent establishment or a fixed base of the person deriving interest situated in that other State.

(7) Any provision in the law of either Contracting State relating only to interest paid to a non-resident corporation shall not operate so as to require such interest paid to a resident of the other Contracting State to be treated as a distribution by the corporation paying such interest. The preceding sentence shall not apply to interest paid to a corporation of one Contracting State in which more than 50 percent of the voting power is controlled, directly or indirectly, by a person or persons who are residents of the other Contracting State.

(8) The provisions of paragraph (2) of this Article shall not apply if the recipient of the interest is exempt from tax on such income in the United States and such recipient sells or makes a contract to sell the holding from which such interest is derived within three months of the date such recipient acquired such holding.

ARTICLE 12—ROYALTIES

(1) Royalties derived and beneficially owned by a resident of the United Kingdom shall be exempt from tax by the United States.

(2) Royalties derived and beneficially owned by a resident of the United States shall be exempt from tax by the United Kingdom.

(3) The term "royalties" as used in this Article (a) means payments of any kind received as a consideration for the use of, or the right to use, any copyright of literary, artistic or scientific work (but not including cinematographic films or films or tapes used for radio or television broadcasting); any patent, trade mark, design or model plan, secret formula or process, or other like right or property, or for information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience; and (b) shall include gains derived from the alienation of any such right or property which are contingent on the productivity, use, or disposition thereof; including the supply of assistance of an ancillary and subsidiary nature furnished as a means of enabling the application or enjoyment of any such right or property.

(4) The provisions of paragraphs (1) and (2) of this Article shall not apply if the person deriving the royalties, being a resident of a Contracting State, carries on business in the other Contracting State in which the royalties arise, through a permanent establishment situated therein, or performs in that other State independent personal services from a fixed base situated therein, and the right or property in respect of which the royalties are paid is effectively connected with such permanent establishment or fixed base. In such a case the provisions of Article 7 (Business Profits), Article 14 (Independent Personal Services), or Article 17 (Artistes and Athletes), as the case may be, shall apply.

(5) Where, owing to a special relationship between the payer and the person deriving the royalties or between both of them and some other person, the amount of the royalties paid exceeds for whatever reason the amount which would have been paid in the absence of such relationship, the provisions of this Article shall apply only to the last-mentioned amount. In that case, the excess part of the payments shall remain taxable according to the law of each Contracting State, due regard being had to the other provisions of this Convention.

ARTICLE 13—CAPITAL GAINS

Except as provided in Article 8 (Shipping and Air Transport) of this Convention, each Contracting State may tax capital gains in accordance with the provisions of its domestic law.

ARTICLE 14—INDEPENDENT PERSONAL SERVICES

Income derived by an individual who is a resident of one of the Contracting States from the performance of personal services in an independent capacity may be taxed in that State. Such income may also be taxed in the other Contracting State if:

(a) the individual is present in that other State for a period or periods exceeding in the aggregate 183 days in the tax year concerned, but only so much thereof as is attributable to services performed in that State, or

(b) the individual has a fixed base regularly available to him in that other State for the purpose of performing his activities, but only so much thereof as is attributable to services performed in that State.

ARTICLE 15—DEPENDENT PERSONAL SERVICES

(1) Subject to the provisions of Articles 18 (Pensions) and 19 (Government Service), salaries, wages and other similar remuneration derived by a resident of a Contracting State in respect of an employment shall be taxable only in that State unless the employment is exercised in the other Contracting State. If the employment is so exercised, such remuneration as is derived therefrom may be taxed in that other State.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (1), remuneration derived by a resident of a Contracting State in respect of an employment exercised in the other Contracting State shall be taxable only in the first-mentioned State if:

(a) the recipient is present in that other State for a period not exceeding in the aggregate 183 days in the tax year concerned; and

(b) the remuneration is paid by, or on behalf of, an employer who is not a resident of that other State; and

(c) the remuneration is not borne as such by a permanent establishment or a fixed base which the employer has in that other State.

(3) Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this Article, remuneration in respect of an employment as a member of the regular complement of a ship or aircraft in international traffic may be taxed by the Contracting State of which the employer operating the ship or aircraft is a resident.

ARTICLE 16—INVESTMENT OR HOLDING COMPANIES

The provisions of Articles 10 (Dividends), 11 (Interest) or 12 (Royalties) of this Convention shall not apply to a corporation which is a resident of one of the Contracting States and which derives dividends, interest, or royalties arising within the other Contracting State if:

(a) (i) the tax imposed on the corporation by the first-mentioned Contracting State in respect of such dividends, interest or royalties is substantially less than the tax generally imposed by that State on corporate profits; or

(ii) the corporation is a resident of the United States and receives more than eighty per cent of its gross income from sources outside the United States as determined by and for the period prescribed in sections 861(a)(1)(B) and (a)(2)(A) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as they may be amended from time to time in minor respects so as not to affect their general principle; and

(b) 25 per cent or more of the capital of such corporation is owned directly or indirectly by one or more persons who are not individual residents of the first-mentioned Contracting State and are not nationals of the United States.

ARTICLE 17—ARTISTES AND ATHLETES

(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of Articles 14 (Independent Personal Services) and 15 (Dependent Personal Services), income derived by entertainers, such as theatre, motion picture, radio or television artistes, and musicians, and by athletes, from their personal activities as such may be taxed in the Contracting State in which these activities are exercised, except where the amount of the gross receipts derived by an entertainer or athlete, including expenses reimbursed to him or borne on his behalf, from such activities do not exceed 15,000 United States dollars or its equivalent in pounds sterling in the tax year concerned.

(2) Where income in respect of personal activities as such of an entertainer or athlete accrues not to that entertainer or athlete himself but to another person, that income may, not withstanding the provisions of Articles 7 (Business Profits), 14 (Independent Personal Services), and 15 (Dependent Personal Services), be taxed in the Contracting State in which the activities of the entertainer or athlete are exercised. For the purposes of the preceding sentence, income of an entertainer or athlete shall be deemed not to accrue to another person if it is established that neither the entertainer or athlete, nor persons related thereto, participate directly or indirectly in the profits of such other person in any manner, including the receipt of deferred remuneration, bonuses, fees, dividends, partnership distributions or other distributions.

ARTICLE 18—PENSIONS

(1) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (2) of Article 19 (Government Service), any pension in consideration of past employment and any annuity paid to an individual who is a resident of a Contracting State shall be taxed only in that State.

(2) Alimony paid to an individual who is a resident of one of the Contracting States by an individual who is a resident of the other Contracting State shall be exempt from tax in the other Contracting State.

(3) The term "annuity" means a stated sum payable periodically at stated times, during life or during a specified or ascertainable period of time, under an obligation to make the payments in return for adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth.

ARTICLE 19—GOVERNMENT SERVICE

(1)(a) Remuneration, other than a pension, paid by a Contracting State to any individual in respect of services rendered to that State shall be taxable only in that State.

(b) However, such remuneration shall be taxable only in the other Contracting State if the services are rendered in that State and the recipient is a resident of that other Contracting State who:

(i) is a national of that State; or

(ii) did not become a resident of that State solely for the purpose of performing the services.

(2)(a) Any pension paid by a Contracting State or a political subdivision or a local authority thereof to any individual in respect of services rendered to that State or subdivision or local authority thereof shall be taxable only in that State.

(b) However, such pension shall be taxable only in the other Contracting State if the recipient is a national of and a resident of that State.

(3) The provisions of Articles 14 (Independent Personal Services), 15 (Dependent Personal Services), 17 (Artistes and Athletes), and 18 (Pensions), as the case may be, shall apply to remuneration and pensions in respect of services rendered in connection with any business carried on by or on behalf of one of the Contracting States or a political subdivision or a local authority thereof.

ARTICLE 20—TEACHERS

(1) A professor or teacher who visits one of the Contracting States for a period not exceeding two years for the purpose of teaching or engaging in research at a university, college or other recognized educational institution in that Contracting State and who was immediately before that visit a resident of the other Contracting State, shall be exempted from tax by the first-mentioned Contracting State on any remuneration for such teaching or research for a period not exceeding two years from the date he first visits that State for such purpose.

(2) The exemption provided in this Article may be applied by the Contracting State in which the teaching or research is performed to current payments to such professor or teacher in anticipation of fulfilment of the requirements of paragraph (1) or by way of withholding and refund, but in either case exemption shall be conditional upon fulfilment of the requirements of paragraph (1).

(3) This Article shall only apply to income from research if such research is undertaken by the professor or teacher in the public interest and not primarily for the benefit of some other private person or persons.

ARTICLE 21—STUDENTS AND TRAINEES

Payments which a student or business apprentice who was immediately before visiting a Contracting State a resident of the other Contracting State and who is present in the first-mentioned Contracting State for the purpose of his full-time education or training receives for the purpose of his maintenance, education or training shall not be taxed in that State, provided that such payments are made to him from sources outside that State.

ARTICLE 22—OTHER INCOME

(1) Items of income of a resident of a Contracting State, wherever arising, not dealt with in the foregoing Articles of this Convention shall be taxable only in that State.

(2) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall not apply if the person deriving the income, being a resident of a Contracting State, carries on business in the other Contracting State through a permanent establishment situated therein, or performs in that other State independent personal services from a fixed base situated therein, and the right or property in respect of which the income is paid is effectively connected with such permanent establishment or fixed base. In such a case the provisions of Article 7 (Business Profits), Article 14 (Independent Personal Services), or Article 17 (Artistes and Athletes), as the case may be, shall apply.

ARTICLE 23—ELIMINATION OF DOUBLE TAXATION

(1) In accordance with the provisions and subject to the limitations of the law of the United States (as it may be amended from time to time without changing the general principle hereof), the United States shall allow to a resident or national of the United States as a credit against the United States tax the appropriate amount of tax paid to the United Kingdom; and, in the case of a United States corporation owning at least 10 per cent of the voting stock of a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom from which it receives dividends in any taxable year, the United States shall allow credit for the appropriate amount of tax paid to the United Kingdom by that corporation with respect to the profits out of which such dividends are paid. Such appropriate amount shall be based upon the amount of tax paid to the United Kingdom, but the credit shall not exceed the limitations (for the purpose of limiting the credit to the United States tax on income from sources outside of the United States) provided by United States law for the taxable year. For the purposes of applying the United States credit in relation to tax paid to the United Kingdom:

(a) the taxes referred to in paragraphs (2)(b) and (3) of Article 2 (Taxes Covered) shall be considered to be income taxes;

(b) the amount of 5 or 15 per cent, as the case may be, withheld under paragraph (2)(a)(i) or (ii) of Article 10 (Dividends) from the tax credit paid by the United Kingdom shall be treated as an income tax imposed on the recipient of the dividend; and

(c) that amount of tax credit referred to in paragraph (2)(a)(i) of Article 10 (Dividends) which is not paid to the United States corporation but to which an individual resident in the United Kingdom would have been entitled had he received the dividend shall be treated as an income tax imposed on the United Kingdom corporation paying the dividend.

(2) Subject to the provisions of the law of the United Kingdom regarding the allowance as a credit against United Kingdom tax of tax payable in a territory outside the United Kingdom (as it may be amended from time to time without changing the general principle hereof):

(a) United States tax payable under the laws of the United States and in accordance with the present Convention, whether directly or by deduction, on profits or income from sources within the United States (excluding in the case of a dividend, tax payable in respect of the profits out of which the dividend is paid) shall be allowed as a credit against any United Kingdom tax computed by reference to the same profits or income by reference to which the United States tax is computed;

(b) in the case of a dividend paid by a United States corporation to a corporation which is resident in the United Kingdom and which controls directly or indirectly at least 10 per cent of the voting power in the United States corporation, the credit shall take into account (in addition to any United States tax creditable under (a)) the United States tax payable by the corporation in respect of the profits out of which such dividend is paid.

(3) For the purposes of the preceding paragraphs of this Article, income or profits derived by a resident of a Contracting State which may be taxed in the other Contracting State in accordance with this Convention shall be deemed to arise from sources within that other Contracting State, except that where the United States taxes on the basis of citizenship, the United Kingdom shall not be bound to give credit to a United States national who is resident in the United Kingdom on income from sources outside the United States as determined under the laws of the United Kingdom and the United States shall not be bound to give credit for United Kingdom tax on income received by such national from sources outside the United Kingdom, as determined under the laws of the United States.

(4) The provisions of this Article shall not affect the taxation by the United States of foreign oil and gas extraction income and foreign oil related income as provided in the Tax Reduction Act of 1975.

ARTICLE 24—NONDISCRIMINATION

(1) Individuals who are nationals of a Contracting State and who are residents of the other Contracting State shall not be subjected in that other State to any taxation or any requirement connected therewith which is other or more burdensome than the taxation and connected requirements to which nationals of that other State in the same circumstances are or may be subjected.

(2) The taxation on a permanent establishment which an enterprise of a Contracting State has in the other Contracting State shall not be less favourably levied in that other State than the taxation levied on enterprises of that other State carrying on the same activities.

(3) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (4) of this Article, interest, royalties and other disbursements paid by an enterprise of a Contracting State to a resident of the other Contracting State shall, if reasonable in amount, be deductible for the purpose of determining the taxable profits of such enterprise under the same conditions as if they had been paid to a resident of the first-mentioned State. For the purposes of this paragraph, the term "other disbursements" shall include charges for amounts expended by such residents for the purposes of such enterprise, including a reasonable allocation of executive and general administrative expenses (except to the extent representing the expenses of a type of activity which is not for the benefit of such enterprise, but constitutes "stewardship" or "over-seeing" functions undertaken for such resident's own benefit as an investor in the enterprise), research and development in respect of which such enterprise has the benefits under a cost and risk sharing agreement and other expenses incurred by such resident for the benefit of a group of related enterprises including such enterprise.

(4) Paragraph (3) shall not apply to any interest, royalties, or other disbursements to which the provisions of Article 9 (Associated Enterprises), paragraphs (5) and (7) of Article 11 (Interest) or paragraph (5) of Article 12 (Royalties) apply, or would apply but for the provisions of paragraph (2) of Article 1 (Personal Scope).

(5) Enterprises of a Contracting State, the capital of which is wholly or partly owned or controlled, directly or indirectly, by one or more residents of the other Contracting State, shall not be subjected in the first-mentioned Contracting State to any taxation or any requirement connected therewith which is other or more burdensome than the taxation and connected requirements to which other similar enterprises of the first-mentioned State are or may be subjected.

(6) Nothing contained in this Article shall be construed as obliging either Contracting State to grant to individuals not resident in that State any of the personal allowances and reliefs which are granted to individuals so resident.

ARTICLE 25—MUTUAL AGREEMENT PROCEDURE

(1) Where a resident or national of a Contracting State considers that the actions of one or both of the Contracting States result or will result in taxation not in accordance with this Convention, he may, notwithstanding the remedies provided by the national laws of those States, present his case to the competent authority of the Contracting State of which he is a resident or national.

(2) The competent authority shall endeavour, if the objection appears to it to be justified and if it is not itself able to arrive at an appropriate solution, to resolve the case by mutual agreement with the competent authority of the other Contracting State, with a view to the avoidance of taxation not in accordance with the Convention. Where an agreement has been reached, a refund as appropriate shall be made to give effect to the agreement.

(3) The competent authorities of the Contracting States shall endeavour to resolve by mutual agreement any difficulties or doubts arising as to the interpretation or application of the Convention. In particular the competent authorities of the Contracting States may reach agreement on:

(a) the attribution of income, deductions, credits, or allowances of an enterprise of a Contracting State to its permanent establishment situated in the other Contracting State;

(b) the allocation of income, deductions, credits, or allowances between persons;

(c) the nature of particular items of income;

(d) the meaning of terms not otherwise defined in this Convention;

(e) the place where a particular item of income has its source.

(4) The competent authorities of the Contracting States may communicate with each other directly for the purpose of reaching agreement as contemplated by this Convention.

ARTICLE 26—EXCHANGE OF INFORMATION AND ADMINISTRATIVE ASSISTANCE

(1) The competent authorities of the Contracting States shall exchange such information (being information available under the respective taxation laws of the Contracting States) as is necessary for carrying out the provisions of this Convention or for the prevention of fraud or the administration of statutory provisions against legal avoidance in relation to the taxes which are the subject of this Convention. Any information so exchanged shall be treated as secret but may be disclosed to persons (including a court or administrative body) concerned with the assessment, collection, enforcement or prosecution in respect of taxes which are the subject of this Convention. No information shall be exchanged which would disclose any trade, business, industrial or professional secret or any trade process.

(2) Each of the Contracting States will endeavour to collect on behalf of the other Contracting State such amounts as may be necessary to ensure that relief granted by this Convention from taxation imposed by such other Contracting State does not enure to the benefit of persons not entitled thereto. The United Kingdom will be regarded as fulfilling this obligation by the continuation of its existing arrangements for ensuring that relief from taxation imposed by the laws of the United States does not enure to the benefit of persons not entitled thereto.

(3) Paragraph (2) of this Article shall not impose upon either of the Contracting States the obligation to carry out administrative measures which are of a different nature from those used in the collection of its own tax, or which would be contrary to its sovereignty, security or public policy. In determining the administrative measures to be carried out, each Contracting State may take into account the administrative measures and practices of the other Contracting State in recovering taxes on behalf of the first-mentioned Contracting State.

(4) The competent authorities of the Contracting States shall consult with each other for the purpose of cooperating and advising in respect of any action to be taken in implementing this Article.

ARTICLE 27—EFFECT ON DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICIALS AND DOMESTIC LAWS

(1) Nothing in this Convention shall affect the fiscal privileges of diplomatic or consular officials under the general rules of international law or under the provisions of special agreements.

(2) This Convention shall not restrict in any manner any exclusion, exemption, deduction, credit, or other allowances now or hereafter accorded by the laws of either Contracting State.

ARTICLE 28—ENTRY INTO FORCE

(1) This Convention shall be ratified and the instruments of ratification shall be exchanged at Washington as soon as possible.

(2) This Convention shall enter into force immediately after the expiration of thirty days following the date on which the instruments of ratification are exchanged and shall thereupon have effect:

(a) in the United Kingdom:

(i) in relation to any dividend to which sub-paragraph (2)(a)(ii) of Article 10 (Dividends) applies, in respect of income tax and payment of tax credit, for any year of assessment beginning on or after 6 April 1973. A dividend paid on or after 1 April 1973 and before 6 April 1973 shall be treated for tax credit purposes as paid on 6 April 1973;

(ii) in relation to sub-paragraph (2)(a)(i) of Article 10 (Dividends) and any other provision of this Convention, in respect of income tax and payment of tax credit and in respect of capital gains tax, for any year of assessment beginning on or after 6 April 1975;

(iii) in respect of corporation tax, for any financial year beginning on or after 1 April 1975; and

(iv) in respect of petroleum revenue tax, for any chargeable period beginning on or after 1 January 1975;

(b) in the United States:

(i) in respect of credits against United States tax allowed under paragraph (1) of Article 23 (Elimination of Double Taxation), for taxes paid to the United Kingdom on or after 1 April 1973;

(ii) in respect of tax withheld at the source, for amounts paid or credited on or after 1 January 1975; and

(iii) in respect of other taxes, for taxable years beginning on or after 1 January 1975.

(3) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (4) of this Article the Convention between the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the United States of America for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income signed at Washington on 16 April 1945 [T.D. 5569, 1947-2 C.B. 100], as amended by the Supplementary Protocol signed at Washington on 6 June 1946 [T.D. 5569, 1947-2 C.B. 100], by the Supplementary Protocol signed at Washington on 25 May 1954 [1957-1 C.B. 665], by the Supplementary Protocol signed at Washington on 19 August 1957 [1958-2 C.B. 1078] and by the Supplementary Protocol signed at London on 17 March 1966 (hereinafter referred to as "the 1945 Convention") [1966-2 C.B. 582], shall cease to have effect in respect of taxes to which this Convention in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (2) of this Article applies.

(4) Where any provision of the 1945 Convention would have afforded any greater relief from tax any such provision as aforesaid shall continue to have effect:

(a) in the United Kingdom, for any year of assessment or financial year and

(b) in the United States, for any taxable year beginning, in either case, before 1 January 1976.

(5) The 1945 Convention shall terminate on the last date on which it has effect in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this Article.

The Right Honorable

EXCELLENCY: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your note of today's date which reads as follows:

"I have the honour to refer to the recent discussions between representatives of our two Governments concerning the Convention between the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and the Government of the United States of America for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with Respect to Taxes on Income and Capital Gains, signed at London on 31 December 1975, and to propose that the Convention be amended as follows:

1. Replace paragraph (2) of Article 1 (Personal Scope) by the following:

"(2) A corporation which is both a resident of the United Kingdom within the meaning of paragraph (1)(a)(ii) of Article 4 (Fiscal Residence), and a resident of the United States within the meaning of paragraph (1)(b)(ii) of Article 4 shall not be entitled to claim any relief or exemption from tax provided by this Convention, except that such corporation may claim the benefits of Article 23 (Elimination of Double Taxation) with respect to the petroleum revenue tax referred to in paragraph (2)(b) of Article 2 (Taxes Covered), of Article 24 (Nondiscrimination) and of Article 28 (Entry into Force)."

2. Replace sub-paragraph (j) of paragraph (1) of Article 3 (General Definitions) by the following:

"(j) the term "third State" means any State or territory other than the United States or the United Kingdom and the term "enterprise of a third State" shall be construed accordingly".

3. The existing sub-paragraph (j) of paragraph (1) will become a new sub-paragraph (k).

4. Replace paragraph (3) of Article 8 (Shipping and Air Transport) by the following:

"(3) Notwithstanding the provisions of Article 7 (Business Profits), profits of an enterprise of a Contracting State from the use, maintenance or rental of containers (including trailers and related equipment for the transport of containers) used for the transport of goods or merchandise shall be taxable only in that State except where such containers are used for the transport of goods or merchandise solely between places within the other Contracting State".

5. Replace paragraph (4) of Article 9 (Associated Enterprises) by the following:

"(4) Except as specifically provided in this Article:

(a) Where an enterprise doing business in one Contracting State:

(i) is a resident of the other Contracting State; or

(ii) is controlled, directly or indirectly, by an enterprise which is a resident of the other Contracting State; and

(b) where the enterprise which is a resident of the other Contracting State is a corporation, such corporation is neither:

(i) a controlled foreign corporation within the meaning of Section 957 of the United States Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (as it may be amended from time to time without changing the general principle thereof); nor

(ii) created or organized under the laws of the first-mentioned Contracting State or of any third State or controlled, directly or indirectly, by a corporation which is a resident of any third State;

then, in determining the tax liability of the first-mentioned enterprise in the State in which it does business, or in a political subdivision or local authority of that State, such State, political subdivision or local authority shall not take into account the income, deductions, receipts or outgoings of a related enterprise which is a resident of the other Contracting State or of an enterprise of any third State which is related to the enterprise of the other Contracting State, except that this prohibition shall not apply where the first-mentioned enterprise is a resident of the first-mentioned Contracting State, to the extent that it owns, directly or indirectly, the capital of the related enterprise.

6. Replace Article 16 (Investment or holding companies) by the following:

"ARTICLE 16—INVESTMENT OR HOLDING COMPANIES

(1) The provisions of Articles 10 (Dividends), 11 (Interest) or 12 (Royalties) of this Convention shall not apply to a corporation which is a resident of one of the Contracting States and which derives dividends, interest or royalties arising within the other Contracting State if:

(a)(i) the tax imposed on the corporation by the first-mentioned Contracting State in respect of such dividends, interest or royalties is substantially less than the tax generally imposed by that State on corporate profits; or

(ii) the corporation is a resident of the United States and receives more than 80 percent of its gross income from sources outside the United States as determined by and for the period prescribed in Section 861(a)(1)(B) and (a)(2)(A) of the United States Internal Revenue Code of 1954, as they may be amended from time to time in minor respects so as not to affect their general principle and

(b) 25 percent or more of the capital of such corporation is owned, directly or indirectly, by one or more persons who are not individual residents of the first-mentioned Contracting State and are not nationals of the United States.

(2) Nothing in this Article shall however prevent a claim under the provisions of Articles 10 (Dividends), 11 (Interest) or 12 (Royalties) by a United States corporation where more than 75 percent of the capital of that corporation is directly or indirectly owned:

(a) by a United States corporation which receives 20 percent or more of its gross income from sources within the United States as determined by and for the period described in sub-paragraph (1)(a)(ii) of this Article; or

(b) by a corporation (other than a United States corporation) which by reference to the provisions of Section 283 of the United Kingdom Income and Corporation Taxes Act of 1970 (as it may be amended from time to time without changing the general principle thereof) would not fall to be treated as a close company; or

(c) by a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom and in which more than 50 percent of the voting power is controlled, directly or indirectly, by individuals who are residents of the United Kingdom".

If the foregoing proposals are acceptable to the Government of the United States of America, I have the honour to propose that this Note together with your reply in that sense shall constitute an Agreement between our two Governments which shall enter into force on the same date as the Convention."

I have the honor to inform you that the Government of the United States of America agree to the proposal set forth in the above Note and that your Note together with this reply shall constitute an agreement between our two Governments which shall enter into force on the same date as the Convention.

Accept, Excellency, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

Mr. SPARKMAN, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report to accompany Ex. K, 94th Cong., 2d sess.; Ex. Q, 94th Cong., 2d sess.; Ex. J, 95th Cong., 1st sess.

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the Tax

Treaty with the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland[1] for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income (Executive K), as amended by a subsequent Exchange of Notes and two Protocols (Executive Q and Executive J) having considered the same, reports favorably thereon without reservation and recommends that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification thereof.

I. Purpose

The purpose of this Treaty, as amended by the Exchange of Notes and two Protocols (collectively referred to in this report as the proposed treaty), is to replace the existing tax treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom signed on April 16, 1945, and subsequently amended. The proposed treaty is intended to modernize the relationship between the two countries with respect to income taxes and, in particular, to take into account changes in the British income tax system.

II. Background

The proposed Tax Treaty with the United Kingdom was signed on December 31, 1975, and was amended by the Exchange of Notes [2] (signed on April 13, 1976), the first Protocol (signed August 26, 1976) and the second Protocol (signed on March 31, 1977). The Tax Treaty and the Exchange of Notes were transmitted to the Senate on June 24, 1976.

The proposed Tax Treaty, as amended by the Exchange of Notes and the two Protocols, has been approved by the United Kingdom House of Commons.

III. Summary of Treaty

The proposed treaty is substantially similar to the existing tax treaty with the United Kingdom, to other recent U.S. tax treaties, and to the model tax treaty of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD). There are, however, several provisions of the proposed treaty which are not found in other U.S. tax treaties. Of particular significance are the new provisions contained in the proposed treaty (1) which provide for a refund by the U.K. to U.S. portfolio and direct shareholders receiving dividends from British corporations of Advance Corporation Tax (ACT) paid by the distributing corporation (Article 10) and allow a U.S. foreign tax credit for the one-half of the ACT which is not refunded to U.S. direct corporate investors (Article 23), (2) which limit the right of states to apportion income of British multinational corporations under the unitary method (Article 9(4)), and (3) which treat the British Petroleum Revenue Tax (PRT) as a creditable tax for U.S. foreign tax credit purposes (Articles 2 and 23).

[3] IV. Provisions of Treaty

Article 1. Personal scope

Article 1 sets forth the persons covered by the proposed treaty: generally, citizens and residents of the United States and the United Kingdom and corporations resident in either country. This article also contains the usual "saving clause" which provides that, with specified exceptions, the treaty is not to affect the taxation by the United States or the United Kingdom of their citizens or residents.

Article 2. Taxes covered

Article 2 sets forth the taxes covered by the proposed treaty. The treaty generally covers the income taxes imposed by both countries and in addition, applies to the U.S. insurance excise tax and the British Petroleum Revenue Tax (PRT).

Insurance of U.S. risks

Application of the proposed treaty to the insurance excise tax results in the exemption under Articles 7 (Business profits) and 22 (Other income) of British insurance companies with no U.S. permanent establishment from the insurance excise tax. This exemption from both taxes is a departure from the existing U.S.-U.K. tax treaty and other U.S. tax treaties.

Petroleum Revenue Tax (PRT)

The proposed treaty treats the PRT as a creditable tax for U.S. foreign tax credit purposes. The PRT is imposed at a 45-percent rate on assessable profits from oil and gas extraction activities in the United Kingdom (including the North Sea) on a field-by-field basis. It is in addition to, and separate from, the regular U.K. corporate tax and a separate royalty. In the view of the Internal Revenue Service, the PRT would probably not be treated as a creditable tax in the absence of this provision.

Article 3. General definitions

Article 3 defines the terms used in the proposed treaty, which are generally the standard definitions contained in most U.S. tax treaties.

Article 4. Fiscal residence

Article 4 sets forth the rules for determining whether a person is a resident of either country and therefore entitled to the benefits of the treaty.

Article 5. Permanent establishment

Article 5 defines the term permanent establishment for purposes of the treaty. The manner in which income of a resident of one country is taxed by the other country is generally dependent upon whether the income is attributable to a permanent establishment which the resident has in that other country.

Article 6. Real property

Article 6 sets forth the rules governing the taxation of income from real property.

[4] Article 7. Business profits

Article 7 defines the term "business profits" and provides the general rule that residents of one country are not to be taxed on business profits from the other country unless they are attributable to a permanent establishment in that other country.

Article 8. Shipping and air transport

The proposed treaty provides that income derived by a U.S. enterprise from the operation in international traffic of ships or aircraft is exempt from British tax and that such income derived by a British enterprise is exempt from U.S. tax. This exemption is broader than the exemption customarily provided in U.S. tax treaties (including the existing U.S.-U.K. tax treaty) under which shipping and air transport income of a resident of one country is exempt by the other only if the ships and aircraft are registered in the first country.

Article 9. Associated enterprises

Article 9 sets forth the right of each country to allocate income on an arm's-length basis in the case of transactions between related persons.

Article 9(4). State taxation/unitary method

The proposed treaty contains a new provision, not found in other United States tax treaties, which places limitations on the combined reporting method used by several states of the United States to determine the taxable income which multinational corporations derive from sources within the state. Under this apportionment method, the operations of all related corporations (both domestic and foreign) are taken into account on a consolidated basis. The proposed treaty provides generally that in determining the tax liability of a British corporation doing business within a state, or of any subsidiary (U.S. or foreign) doing business within a state which is controlled by a British corporation, the state may not use the combined reporting method to take into account the operations of any related foreign corporation which is not doing business within the state. In such cases, the arm's-length method may be applied.

Article 10. Dividends

Article 10, in conjunction with Article 23 (Elimination of double taxation), contains a new and complex set of provisions with respect to the taxation of dividends. These provisions are designed to resolve the problems presented by the interaction of the U.S. system of corporate taxation and the new hybrid system adopted by the United Kingdom in 1973 which in part integrates corporate and shareholder taxation. Under the new British system, a tax is imposed upon U.K. corporations with respect to dividend payments (the Advance Corporation Tax, or ACT) and is allowed as a refundable credit to U.K. shareholders. In the absence of a tax treaty, no refunds are paid to, and no withholding taxes imposed on, foreign shareholders receiving dividends from British corporations.

Under the proposed treaty, the U.K. is to provide full refunds of the ACT to U.S. portfolio investors (individual shareholders and corporate shareholders owning less than a 10 percent stock interest) in British corporations, but the ACT refunds and dividend payments [5] are to be subject to a 15 percent withholding tax. In the case of U.S. direct corporate investors (corporations owning at least 10 percent of the U.K. corporation's stock), the proposed treaty provides for a refund of one-half of the ACT, but also for a 5 percent withholding tax on the dividend and the refund.

The proposed treaty also provides for rules for the treatment of the ACT for U.S. foreign tax credit purposes and provides for the allowance of an indirect foreign tax credit for ACT which is not refunded (Article 23).

The United States agrees to reduce its statutory 30 percent withholding tax to 15 percent on dividends to Kingdom portfolio investors and to 5 percent on dividends to United Kingdom corporate direct investors. Under the existing treaty, the withholding tax rate is limited to 15 percent on dividends to both portfolio and direct corporate investors.

Article 11. Interest

Article 11 follows the existing treaty and provides for the reciprocal exemption of interest derived by residents of either country from payers in the other. (The U.S. statutory rate is 30 percent.)

Article 12. Royalties

Article 12 follows the existing treaty and provides for the reciprocal exemption of royalties derived by residents of either country from payers in the other. (The U.S. statutory rate is 30 percent).

Article 13. Capital gains

The proposed treaty provides that residents of one country may be taxed by the other country under its internal laws on capital gains derived from sources in that other country. This is a change from the existing treaty under which such capital gains are exempt. However, under the internal laws of both countries, nonresidents are not ordinarily subject to tax on such gains.

Article 16. Investment holding companies

Article 16 denies the benefits of the articles on dividends, interest, and royalties (Articles 10-12) to certain investment and holding companies which qualify for certain tax benefits in the country of residence or which are controlled by shareholders from third countries.

Articles 14, 15, 18-21. Compensation for personal services

Articles 14 (Independent personal services), 15 (Dependent personal services), 18 (Pensions, annuities, and alimony), 19 (Government service), 20 (Teachers), and 21 (Students and trainees) govern the treatment of compensation for personal services. These provisions generally follow the existing treaty and other recent U.S. tax treaties.

Article 17. Artistes and athletes

The proposed treaty contains a separate set of rules which govern the taxation of income earned by public entertainers and athletes. Similar rules are not contained in the existing U.K. treaty, but are contained in several recent U.S. tax treaties. These rules provide that public entertainers and athletes who are residents of either the U.S. or the U.K. and whose gross receipts from performing in the other country exceed $15,000 for the year may be taxed by the country where [6] the services are performed. Under these rules, highly paid entertainers and athletes will be taxable in the country where they perform regardless of the length of their stay in that country.

Article 22. Other income

Article 22 provides rules governing income not otherwise dealt with in other articles. In general, such income is taxed in the country of residence unless attributable to a permanent establishment in the other country.

Article 23. Elimination of double taxation

Article 23 provides the general rule that both countries will allow a foreign tax credit for income taxes paid to the other country on income from sources in the other country. The treaty also clarifies the taxation of United States source income of United States citizens residing in the United Kingdom and branches of U.S. corporations located in the United Kingdom. The treaty generally allows the United Kingdom to tax such income, but in so doing, the United Kingdom must allow a credit against its tax for any United States tax paid with respect to the same income. It also provides the general rule that income derived by a resident of one country which may be taxed under the proposed treaty by the other country will be deemed to arise from sources within that other country. These rules are consistent with our other recent treaties and the OECD model tax treaty.

Article 24. Nondiscrimination

Article 24 is a comprehensive nondiscrimination provision similar to provisions in other U.S. tax treaties under which each country agrees not to discriminate by imposing more burdensome taxes on citizens and corporations of the other country than it imposes on its own citizens and residents.

Articles 25 and 26. Administrative provisions

Articles 25 and 26 contain various administrative provisions similar to those contained in other U.S. tax treaties.

Article 27. Effect on diplomatic officials and domestic laws

Article 27 provides that the treaty will not affect the fiscal privileges of diplomats and consular officials under international law or other agreements. Article 27 also contains the general rule found in other U.S. tax treaties that its provisions do not restrict any right or benefit otherwise available under the laws of either country.

Article 28. Entry into force

Article 28 provides that the proposed treaty will enter into force on the thirty-first day after ratification. Once the treaty enters into force, it applies retroactively with different dates for different taxes and provisions. Most provisions are effective beginning in 1975, but the provisions dealing with ACT refunds to U.S. portfolio shareholders are effective beginning in 1973.

Article 29. Termination

Article 29 provides that the treaty will continue in force indefinitely, but either country may terminate it in any year after 1980 by giving notice through diplomatic channels.

[7] V. DATE OF ENTRY INTO FORCE

The proposed treaty will enter into force 30 days after the date of the exchange of instruments of ratification and have effect according to the schedule in Article 28. The proposed treaty will remain in force indefinitely but may be terminated by either party by giving notice of termination on, or before June 30, in any year after 1980 pursuant to the procedure found in Article 29.

[9] VII. COMMITTEE ACTION

The Committee considered the proposed treaty on March 15, 1978, and ordered it favorably reported by a voice vote with the recommendation that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification of the proposed treaty. Prior to the vote, Senator Church proposed that a reservation be attached to the provision that restricts the use of the unitary taxing method, Article 9(4). The proposed reservation on Article 9(4) was defeated by a vote of 10 to 5. The Senators favoring a reservation were Senators Church, Clark, Humphrey, Sarbanes, and Sparkman. The Senators opposing a reservation were Senators Baker, Case, Glenn, Griffin, Javits, McGovern, Pearson, Pell, Percy, and Stone.

[11] IX. EXPLANATION OF TREATY PROVISIONS*

PART A. ARTICLE-BY-ARTICLE ANALYSIS

Article 1. Personal scope

The proposed treaty generally applies to residents of the United States and residents of the United Kingdom, with specific exceptions designated in other articles. This follows the OECD model tax treaty and most of our other income tax treaties.

However, corporations which are incorporated in the United States but are managed and controlled in the United Kingdom, and thus considered residents of both for purposes of the treaty ("dual-resident corporations"), may only claim the benefits of certain provisions (described within in connection with the relevant articles).

Additionally, the proposed treaty contains the usual "saving clause" which provides that, with specified exceptions, the treaty is not to affect the taxation by the United States or the United Kingdom of their citizens or residents. The principal exceptions involve the determination of domicile for U.K. tax purposes, the limitations placed on the power of state and local governments to tax corporations controlled by U.K. shareholders, and the benefits provided under the foreign tax credit and the nondiscrimination, governmental salaries, teachers, and students provisions.

Article 2. Taxes covered

The proposed treaty generally applies to the U.S. Federal income taxes (including the employee's share of social security taxes) imposed under the Internal Revenue Code. The proposed treaty also applies to the Federal excise tax on insurance premiums paid to foreign insurers (Code sec. 4371). The application of the proposed treaty to the insurance excise tax differs from the existing treaty and other U.S. tax treaties, and it is discussed in greater detail below in connection with the business profits article (Article 7). In the case of the United Kingdom, the proposed treaty applies to the income tax, the capital gains tax, the corporation tax, and the Petroleum Revenue Tax.

* The Committee would like to thank the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation for preparing the explanation of the provisions of the proposed treaty.

The proposed treaty applies to income taxes imposed by political subdivisions or local authorities of the United States and the United Kingdom for purposes of the limitations placed on the combined reporting method of determining income subject to tax in the case of a corporation controlled by a corporation resident in the other country (Article 9(4)). In practice, this applies only to states and localities in the United States because the political subdivisions and local authorities in the United Kingdom do not impose income taxes.

In addition, the nondiscrimination provisions of the proposed treaty (Article 24) apply with respect to all taxes of each country, including all political subdivisions and local authorities of each country.

[12] Finally, the proposed treaty also contains a provision generally found in U.S. income tax treaties to the effect that it will apply to substantially similar taxes which either country may subsequently impose.

Article 3. General definitions

The standard definitions found in most of our income tax treaties are contained in the proposed treaty.

For purposes of the treaty, the term "United States," when used in a geographical sense, includes the states and the District of Columbia. Thus, the treaty does not apply to the possessions of the United States or to Puerto Rico. The term "United Kingdom" means Great Britain and Northern Ireland. The treaty does not apply to the Channel Islands, the Isle of Man, the British colonies, or member-states of the Commonwealth. The term "Nationals" of the United Kingdom includes, for purposes of the treaty, all citizens of the United Kingdom. In addition, in certain limited cases, the term also includes citizens of British colonies and certain other British subjects from Commonwealth countries.

The proposed treaty contains the standard provisions that undefined terms are to have the meaning which they have under the applicable tax laws of the country applying the treaty. Where a term is defined in a different manner by the two countries, the competent authorities of the two countries may establish a common meaning for the term in order to prevent double taxation or to further any other purpose of the treaty.

Article 4. Fiscal residence

The benefits of the proposed treaty are generally available only to residents of the two countries. The proposed treaty defines "resident of the United Kingdom" and "resident of the United States". Generally, the proposed treaty treats as residents of a country individuals who are subject to tax in that country on account of their residence therein. In addition, a set of rules is provided to determine residence in the case of an individual with dual residence. This provision of the proposed treaty is based on the fiscal domicile article of the OECD model treaty and is similar to the provisions found in other U.S. tax treaties.

An individual whom both countries consider to be a resident according to their general rules for determining residence will be deemed for all purposes of the treaty to be a resident of the country in which he has his permanent home, his center of vital interests (his closest economic and personal relations), his habitual abode, or his citizenship. If the residence of an individual cannot be determined by these tests, applied in the order stated, the competent authorities of the countries will settle the question by mutual agreement. Where an estate or trust (taxable as such) is considered to be a resident by both countries, the competent authorities may settle the issue by mutual agreement.

Paragraph (4) of this Article is a unique transitional provision designed to eliminate a difference in the rules for determining domicile under prior U.K. law between American women married to U.K. nationals and American men married to U.K. nationals. Under U.K. [13] law, resident aliens are generally taxed on their worldwide income if they are domiciled in the United Kingdom; but if they are not domiciled there, they are only taxed on their income which they receive in the United Kingdom. Under prior U.K. law, a woman who was a resident of the United Kingdom was considered to be domiciled in the United Kingdom if she was married to a man domiciled in the United Kingdom. A man, however, was entitled to establish on the basis of the facts and circumstances that he was not domiciled in the United Kingdom notwithstanding the fact that he was married to a U.K. domiciliary. In order to eliminate this difference in treatment, the U.K. amended its law in 1973 to provide that any woman married to a U.K. domiciliary after January 1, 1974, may, to the same extent as a man, establish under the facts that she is not a U.K. domiciliary and thus not subject to tax on foreign income until it is remitted.

The problem which the treaty provision resolves is that this new rule providing for equivalent treatment of men and women in the determination of domicile under U.K. law does not apply with respect to marriages which occurred prior to 1974. U.K. law treats a woman married before 1974 as retaining her husband's domicile. The proposed treaty (as modified by the second Protocol) extends the rule providing equivalent treatment to American women married before 1974 to U.K. domiciliaries by providing that marriages before 1974 of women who are U.S. citizens and men domiciled in the United Kingdom shall be deemed to have taken place on January 1, 1974, for purposes of determining domicile for U.K. tax purposes.

Under the existing treaty, the problem of the domicile of U.S. citizens married to U.K. domiciliaries was not as important because the U.K. courts interpreted the treaty as barring the U.K. from taxing U.S. citizens domiciled in the U.K. on U.S. source dividend and interest income and, accordingly, the question of domicile was frequently moot. However, the question becomes more important under the proposed treaty because the treaty makes clear that the United Kingdom may tax U.S. citizens domiciled in the United Kingdom on income from U.S. sources (subject to a credit for U.S. taxes paid) once the existing treaty ceases to apply to such income (April 6, 1976).

A special rule is provided for cases where income eligible for treaty relief in one country is taxable to a resident of the other country only if, and to the extent that, it is remitted to or received by that person. In certain cases, individuals who are residents of the United Kingdom are not taxable on foreign source investment income, unless it is remitted to or received by them in the United Kingdom. If such income were received outside of the United Kingdom and accumulated by the taxpayer, a United Kingdom resident may not be subject to U.K. tax on that income. If the reductions in U.S. tax rate or exemptions from U.S. tax were to apply to those items of income, the United States would be foregoing tax where double taxation does not in fact occur. Thus, this paragraph provides that if under the law in the other country income would only be taxed on a remittance basis, then any reduced rates of tax (e.g., as provided by Article 10 (Dividends)), or relief from taxation (e.g., Article 7 (Business Profits) and 8 (Shipping and Air Transport), 11 (Interest), or 12 (Royalties)) provided by this treaty shall apply only to the extent that the income is remitted to or [14] received by the person in the year in which it accrues to the benefit of that taxpayer. This rule applies to all persons, including individuals, corporations, partnerships, and trusts or estates. A similar provision is contained in the existing treaty.

Article 5. Definition of permanent establishment

The proposed treaty contains a definition of permanent establishment which follows the pattern of the OECD model tax treaty and other recent U.S. income tax treaties. The permanent establishment concept is one of the basic devices used in income tax treaties to avoid double taxation. Generally, a resident of one country is not taxable on its business profits by the other country unless those profits are attributable to a permanent establishment of the resident in the other country. In addition, the permanent establishment concept is used to determine whether reduced rates of, or exemptions from, tax provided for dividends, interest, and royalties are applicable.

In general, a fixed place of business through which a resident of one country engages in industrial or commercial activities in the other country is considered a permanent establishment. This includes a branch, an office, a factory, a workshop, a mine, oil or gas well, quarry, or other place of extraction of natural resources, and any building or construction or installation project which exists for more than 12 months.

This general rule is modified to provide that a fixed place of business which is used for any or all of a number of specified activities will not constitute a permanent establishment. These activities include, among others, the use of facilities for storing, displaying, or delivering mechandise belonging to the resident, the maintenance of a stock of goods belonging to the resident for purposes of storage, display, delivery, or processing by another person, and the purchase of goods or collection of information for the resident.

A resident of one country will be deemed to have a permanent establishment in the other country if it maintains an agent in the other country who has, and habitually exercises, a general contracting authority (other than for the purchase of merchandise) in that other country. The proposed treaty contains the usual provision that the agency rule will not apply if the agent is a broker, general commission agent, or other independent agent acting in the ordinary course of its business.

The fact that a corporation which is a resident of one country controls (or is controlled by) a corporation which is a resident of the other country or which carries on business in the other country shall not of itself cause the latter corporation to be treated as a permanent establishment of the country of the parent's residence.

Article 6. Income from immovable (real) property

The proposed treaty provides that income from immovable property, including income from agriculture or forestry, may be taxed in the country where the property is located. This rule does not preclude the country of residency from taxing the income, but only confirms that the country where the property is located has the primary jurisdiction to tax the income whether or not the income is derived through a permanent establishment.

[15] Immovable property is to be defined under the laws of the country where the property is located. Generally, the term refers to real property for purposes of United States and United Kingdom law. Income from real property includes income from use or renting, but it does not include capital gains on the sale, exchange, or other disposition of real property. Ships, boats, and aircraft are not considered to be immovable property.

Article 7. Business profits

In general

Under the proposed treaty, business profits of a resident of one country are taxable in the other country only to the extent they are attributable to a permanent establishment which the resident has in the other country. The business profits provisions are substantially the same as the provisions in the existing treaty and in the OECD model tax treaty.

In computing the taxable business profits, all expenses, wherever incurred, which are reasonably connected with the business profits are allowed as deductions. These expenses include a reasonable allocation of executive and general administrative expenses, research and development expenses, interest, and other expenses incurred for the enterprise as a whole (or the part which includes the permanent establishment). However, in determining the amount of the deduction for expenses incurred by the head office, the deduction generally will be limited to the expense incurred without including a profit element for the head office.

Profits will not be attributed to a permanent establishment merely because of the purchase of goods or merchandise by that permanent establishment for the account of the enterprise. Thus, for example, where a permanent establishment purchases goods for its head office, the business profits attributed to the permanent establishment with respect to its other activities will not be increased by a profit element on the purchasing.

The profits of a permanent establishment are to be determined on an arm's-length basis. Thus, there is to be attributed to it the industrial or commercial profits which would reasonably be expected to have been derived by it if it were an independent entity engaged in the same or similar activities under the same or similar conditions and dealing at arm's-length with the resident of which it is a permanent establishment. In addition, business profits are to be computed on a consistent basis from year to year.

The proposed treaty sets forth examples of types of income which are considered business profits. It follows the approach of our other recent treaties and the Internal Revenue Code by including within business profits investment income which is effectively connected with the permanent establishment. Personal services income earned by an employee is excluded from business profits.

Insurance of U.S. risks

Under the Code, premiums from insuring U.S. risks which are received by a foreign insurance company having no U.S. trade or business are not subject to U.S. income tax but are subject to the [16] U.S. insurance excise tax (secs. 4371-4374). However, the proposed treaty applies to the insurance excise tax and thus, under the business profits article and Article 22 (Other income), income of a British insurance company from the insurance of U.S. risks is subject neither to U.S. income tax nor to the insurance excise tax unless that insurance income is attributable to a U.S. permanent establishment maintained by the British insurer. This treatment is a departure from the existing tax treaty with the U.K. and other U.S. tax treaties.

Under the Internal Revenue Code (in the absence of a contrary treaty provision), a foreign insurer is subject to U.S. income tax on income derived from the insurance of risks situated in the United States in situations where that insurance income is effectively connected with a U.S. trade or business. A foreign insurance company insuring U.S. risks ordinarily will not be viewed as conducting a U.S. trade or business and thus will not be subject to U.S. income tax if it has no U.S. office or agent and operates in the United States solely through independent brokers.

In these situations, a foreign insurance company is not subject to U.S. income tax, but the insurance excise tax is imposed (except as otherwise provided in a treaty) on the premiums paid for that insurance.[1] The excise tax may be viewed as serving the same function as the withholding tax imposed on dividends, interest, and other types of passive income paid to foreign investors. In general, the excise tax applies to insurance covering risks wholly or partly within the United States where the insured is (i) a U.S. person or (ii) a foreign person engaged in a trade or business in the United States. Under the Code, the excise tax generally applies to any such life, sickness, or accident insurance, or annuity contract unless the foreign insurance company is subject to U.S. income tax. It generally applies to any such casualty policy written by a foreign insurance company unless the policy is placed through an officer or agent of the foreign insurer within a state in which the insurer is authorized to do business.

The treatment of insurance income of foreign insurers is complicated somewhat in situations where, as is usually the case, some portion of the risk is reinsured with other insurance companies in order to spread the risk. In situations where the foreign insurer is engaged in a U.S. trade or business and thus subject to the U.S. income tax, reinsurance premums, whether paid to a U.S. or a foreign reinsurer, are allowed as deductions. Accordingly, the foreign insurer is taxable only on the income attributable to the portion of the risk it retains. However, while no excise tax is imposed on the insurance policy issued by the foreign insurer doing business in the United States (and, in the case of casualty insurance, the policy is written by an officer or agent of the insurer within a State in which it is authorized to do business), the one-percent excise tax on reinsurance is imposed if and when that insurer reinsures that U.S. risk with a foreign insurance company not doing business in the United States (and not subject to U.S. income tax).

[17] The statutory rules governing the taxation of foreign insurance companies insuring U.S. casualty risks have been modified through interpretations of the existing treaty contained in certain closing agreements which have been entered into between the IRS and a number of British insurance companies. These closing agreements constitute confidential taxpayer return information, and the substantive terms and the legal basis of these agreements have not been made public in the form of revenue rulings or revenue procedures. The closing agreements are apparently intended to provide relief in those situations where there is the potential liability for both income tax and excise tax liability because the foreign insurer is subject to the income tax (because it has a U.S. trade or business) but is not exempt from the excise tax (because it is not licensed by a state to write insurance). It is understood that U.K. insurance companies agree in the closing agreements to subject themselves to the U.S. income tax by treating their U.S. operations (frequently an unrelated agent) as a permanent establishment, and the IRS agrees to waive the excise tax under the nondiscrimination clause of the present treaty.

In exempting from the U.S. income tax and the insurance excise tax all insurance income which is not attributable to a permanent establishment in the United States, the proposed treaty makes two changes in the statutory rules governing the taxation of insurance income of U.K. insurance companies. First, any insurance income which is effectively connected with a U.S. trade or business but is not attributable to a U.S. permanent establishment will not be subject to U.S. income tax. This exemption is contained in the existing treaty. Second, U.K. insurance companies not engaged in a U.S. trade or business will no longer be subject to the insurance excise tax. However, those U.K. insurance companies which continue to maintain a U.S. permanent establishment after the proposed treaty enters into force will remain subject to the U.S. income tax on their net U.S. insurance income attributable to the permanent establishment. In addition, the insurance excise tax will continue to apply in situations where a U.K. insurance company with a U.S. trade or business reinsures a policy it has written on a U.S. risk with a foreign reinsurer other than a U.K. resident. The excise tax will apply to such reinsurance even where the U.K. insurance company has a U.S. trade or business but no U.S. permanent establishment and thus will not be subject to U.S. income tax on the net income it derives on the portion of the risk it retains.

[1] The excise tax is imposed at a rate of 4 percent of the premiums paid on casualty insurance and indemnity bonds, and one percent of the premiums paid on life, sickness, and accident insurance, annuity contracts, and reinsurance.

Article 8. Shipping and air transport

The proposed treaty (as modified by the protocol of August 31, 1976)[2] provides that income derived by an enterprise of the United States from the operation in international traffic of ships or aircraft is exempt from United Kingdom tax. Income derived by an enterprise of the United Kingdom from the operation in international traffic of ships or aircraft is exempt from United States tax. These exemptions apply regardless of where the ships or aircraft are registered. The exemption provided in the treaty for U.S. and U.K. resi- [18] dents is broader than the exemption customarily provided in U.S. tax treaties (including the existing U.S.-U.K. tax treaty) under which shipping and air transport income of a resident of one country is exempt by the other only if the ships and aircraft are registered in the first country.

Income from the operation in international traffic of ships or aircraft includes the rental income on a bareboat basis of ships or aircraft operated in international traffic if the rental income is incidental to income from the actual operation of ships or aircraft in international traffic. For example, this rule permits an airline of one country which has excess equipment during certain periods to lease that excess equipment during those periods to an airline of the other country. In such a case the rental income of the lessor is exempt from tax in the other country, whether or not the other airline uses the aircraft in international traffic.

The proposed treaty also provides that income derived by a U.S. enterprise from the use, maintenance, and lease of containers (including trailers and related equipment for the inland transport of containers) used for the transportation of goods or merchandise may not be taxed by the United Kingdom unless the goods or merchandise are transported solely between places within the United Kingdom. Such income derived by U.K. enterprises is similarly exempt from U.S. tax unless the transportation is solely between places within the United States.

Under the proposed treaty, the provisions relating to the taxation of shipping and air transport apply also to profits derived by U.S. or U.K. enterprises from the participation in a pool, a joint business, or an international operating agency.

The proposed treaty also provides that gains of a U.S. enterprise on the sale or other disposition of ships, aircraft or containers owned by the U.S. enterprise shall only be taxable by the United Kingdom if under the treaty the income from the ships, aircraft or containers may be taxable by the United Kingdom. Such gains received by U.K. enterprises are similarly not subject to tax by the United States if the income from the disposed ship, aircraft or container is not subject to U.S. tax.

The proposed treaty also exempts from U.K. tax any income derived by a U.S. citizen who is not a resident of the United Kingdom, or by a U.S. corporation (including a dual resident corporation) from the operation of ships or aircraft registered in the United States. This exemption from U.K. tax applies even if the ships or aircraft are operated solely within the United Kingdom. This provision confirms that the United Kingdom grants to U.S. citizens and corporations (including dual resident corporations) the equivalent exemption required in order for the shipping and aircraft income of U.K. nationals and corporations to be exempt from U.S. tax under Code sections 872(b) and 883. As contrasted with the general shipping and aircraft exemption contained in the proposed treaty, this exemption applies only to income derived from the operation of ships or aircraft registered in the United States.

Except as set forth in the previous paragraphs, the shipping and air transport provisions are subject to the saving clause. Therefore, the [19] United States may, without regard to this article, tax income derived by U.K. residents from shipping or air transport, or from the use of rental of containers, if the U.K. residents are citizens of the United States. Similarly, the United Kingdom can tax shipping and air transport income derived by U.K. nationals resident in the United States.

A number of proposals have been made in recent years to change U.S. tax laws, and the U.S. negotiating position in tax treaties, with respect to international shipping. These have included proposals to tax, at least in some cases, international shipping into and out of the United States and proposals for international arrangements through bilateral treaties or international agreements whereby international shipping income would generally be subject to tax in some jurisdiction. These proposals are generally intended to minimize the competitive advantages of shipping companies operating through countries such as the United Kingdom which do not effectively tax the international shipping income of their residents (including local companies owned by U.S. interests). The Committee has not considered these various proposals and takes no position as to their merits. However, the Committee does not intend, in recommending the ratification of this treaty, to foreclose any such review or revision of U.S. policy toward international shipping. Thus, this treaty is not intended as a precedent for future U.S. treaty policy in this area—particularly as that policy applies to countries which encourage through favorable tax treatment the incorporation and registry of ships which neither operate in the international commerce of that country nor are owned ultimately by residents of that country. In addition, if and when the United States does change its policy toward international shipping, it may be appropriate at that time to consider conforming modifications to this treaty.

[2] The treaty as initially negotiated included a registry test under which the exemption applied only to income of U.S. enterprises from the operation of ships and aircraft registered in the United States and income of British enterprises from the operation of ships and aircraft registered in the United Kingdom.

Article 9. Associated enterprises

The proposed treaty, like most other U.S. tax treaties, contains a provision similar to that contained in the Internal Revenue Code (sec. 482) which recognizes the right of each country to make an allocation of income in the case of transactions between related persons, if an allocation is necessary to reflect the conditions and arrangements which would have been made between unrelated persons.

It is anticipated that when a redetermination has been made by one country with respect to the income of a related person, the other country will attempt to reach an agreement with the first country in connection with the redetermination, and if it agrees with the redetermination, it will make a corresponding adjustment to the income of the other person.

Limitations on state taxation

The proposed treaty also contains a new provision, not found in other United States treaties, which limits the methods by which the United States, the United Kingdom, and political subdivisions and local authorities of each country may tax enterprises of the other country (or enterprises which are directly or indirectly controlled by enterprises of the other country). The proposed treaty provides that in determining the tax liability of such an enterprise doing business within their respective jurisdictions, the United States, the United [20] Kingdom and their political subdivisions and local authorities may not take into account the income, deductions, receipts or outgoings of a related enterprise of the other country or of any third country.

Background.—This provision applies to those states of the United States which, in determining the amount of income of a business operating within the state which is to be apportioned to that state for income tax purposes, require combined reporting of all related business operations (including related business operations of affiliated U.S. and foreign corporations, whether or not doing business within the state). The governments of the United Kingdom and the United States do not apportion income between jurisdictions under this method but rather allocate income between related enterprises under arm's-length principles as specified in other paragraphs of this article. In addition, the political subdivisions and local authorities of the United Kingdom do not impose income taxes. Consequently, this provision's only application is to limit the combined reporting method used by certain states of the United States.

In determining what business income of a corporation is earned within a state and thus subject to income tax by that state, all states imposing an income tax use some type of apportionment system. An apportionment system is necessary because of the difficulties of attempting to account separately for business income in any state where the activities of a single business are carried on beyond the borders of that one state. In most states this business income is apportioned between the state and other jurisdictions according to a basic three-factor formula (or some variation of the formula) under which total business income is multiplied by the average ratio of sales, payroll, and property values within the state to total sales, payroll, and property values associated with the business. This type of apportionment, when applied to a single business of one corporation, is called the "unitary method" of apportionment and is used by most states which have a corporate income tax. The proposed treaty does not affect the application of this method when applied to a single corporation.

However, some states have adopted "combined reporting" requirements, which extend the unitary method to corporations related to the corporation doing business within the state (subsidiaries, parent corporations, or brother-sister corporations), whether or not these related corporations are doing business within the state, where the activities of the related corporations are considered by the state to constitute a unitary business. For example, if a U.K. manufacturing company operating in a state requiring combined reporting owns a U.S. subsidiary which sells the products manufactured by the U.K. parent, the income subject to tax in that state would be determined under the combined reporting method by applying the average ratio of the sales, payroll, and property values in the state to total sales, payroll, and property values of both corporations in both countries and multipling these average ratios against the combined worldwide income of the two corporations.

California, Oregon, and Alaska are the primary states requiring the use of combined reporting in connection with related foreign corporations as well as related domestic corporations. Certain other state gov- [21] ernments have also indicated that combined reporting with respect to related foreign corporations is at times required in their states, or that they may in the future require this type of reporting at least in some cases.

Explanation of limitation.—The treaty provision prevents a state from extending the unitary method through this combined reporting system to related foreign enterprises where the enterprise doing business in the state is either a British enterprise or is controlled directly or indirectly by a British enterprise. Thus, for example, if a U.S. branch of a British corporation does business in a state, that state cannot apply the unitary method to combine the income (and sales, payroll, and property) of any related foreign enterprises (from the United Kingdom or any third country) with those of that British corporation in determining the income of its U.S. branch which is taxable by that state. However, that state may take into account the income and assets of any other branches of that corporation, wherever located, because a corporation is considered to be a single enterprise regardless of how many separate branches or businesses it has. Alternatively, if the British corporation does not do business in the state, but has a U.S. subsidiary (or any other corporation which it directly or indirectly controls) doing business in the state, that state, in determining the taxable income of that U.S. subsidiary, cannot apply combined reporting requirements to include the income (and the sales, payroll, and property values) of the British parent corporation or other related foreign enterprises. Of course, in either situation described above the state may take into account the income and assets of any related U.S. corporations.

The limitation in Article 9(4) applies only to cases where an apportionment formula is used without regard to any application of the arm's-length standard (provided under Article 9(1)). Of course, both countries and their political subdivisions may apply apportionment formulas, including formulas that take into account attributes of related entities, as a method of achieving an arm's-length price for a transaction between related entities. Moreover, apportionment formulas may be used as a method of apportioning income of related entities to the extent that it is established that they are not dealing on an arm's length basis.

There are two additional exceptions to the combined reporting limitation. First, if the British enterprise is a corporation which is itself directly or indirectly controlled by residents of the United States (Code sec. 957) or if any third country, the limitation does not apply. In addition, in computing the tax liability of any U.S. subsidiary (or other enterprise) resident in the state which is controlled by a British enterprise, the three-factor formula may, notwithstanding the general prohibition, be applied to any related foreign enterprise to the extent that the U.S. subsidiary owns, directly or indirectly, the capital of the related foreign enterprise.

For purposes of the proposed treaty, an enterprise is related to another enterprise if either enterprise directly or indirectly controls the other, or if any third person or persons (related to each other or acting together) control both. The term control is not limited to the ownership of the capital of an enterprise, and it includes any kind of control, whether or not legally enforceable, however exercised or exercisable.

[22] Article 10. Dividends

The proposed treaty contains a new and complex set of provisions with respect to the taxation of dividends which in a number of respects are substantially different from the existing tax treaty with the United Kingdom and from other U.S. tax treaties. In 1973, the United Kingdom introduced a new system of corporate taxation which in part integrates its corporate income tax with its individual income tax. The integrated tax system of the United Kingdom differs substantially from the classical system of separate corporate taxation used by the United States (under which dividends received by shareholders are generally taxed without regard to the taxes paid by the distributing corporation). The new provisions contained in the proposed treaty relating to dividends are designed to accommodate the problems which are presented by the interaction of the differing U.K. and U.S. systems.

Under the existing treaty, neither country can tax dividends paid by resident corporations to shareholders resident in the other country at a rate exceeding 15 percent of the gross amount of the dividend.[3] However, the proposed treaty provides that, as long as the U.K. integrated system is in effect, the refund withholding system described below is to apply.

ACT refund to U.S. shareholders

Description of U.K. system.—Under the new system adopted by the United Kingdom, a special "Advance Corporation Tax," or "ACT," is collected from a U.K. corporation on any distribution to its shareholders. The rate of the ACT is presently 33/67 of the amount of the dividend. For years prior to 1977, the rate of the ACT was 35/65 of the dividend. At the U.K. corporate level, ACT payments can, within certain limits, be credited against the regular U.K. 52-percent corporate income tax (the "mainstream tax"), if any, paid by the corporation in the year of the distribution. If no mainstream tax is paid, the ACT can be carried back two years and carried forward indefinitely to be credited against mainstream tax otherwise payable in those years. Where the dividend is out of income on which mainstream tax has been paid and the ACT is fully creditable against that mainstream tax, the aggregate 52-percent tax paid by the corporation is not affected by the payment of a dividend because the ACT payment with respect to the dividend is fully offset by the reduced mainstream tax.

In addition to being allowed as a credit against the distributing corporation's mainstream tax, the amount of ACT paid by the corporation is also refunded to U.K. shareholders receiving the dividends either through a credit against the shareholder's U.K. income tax liability or through a cash refund to the extent that the ACT payment exceeds the shareholder's income tax liability. However, the dividend subject to tax is "grossed up" by the amount of ACT paid by the corporation; that is, the U.K. shareholder is required to include in taxable income the amount of ACT credited or refunded to him as [23] well as the amount of the cash dividend. For example, if a U.K. corporation pays a cash dividend of $67, it must also pay ACT of $33 (which it may credit against the mainstream tax). The shareholder receives a tax credit or refund of $33 and includes in income $100 (the $67 distributed and the $33 of ACT).

[3] The proposed treaty provides that in the event that the United Kingdom modifies its current system of taxation and ceases to allow a shareholder credit to its residents, then dividends will be treated as they are under the existing treaty, and the withholding taxes of both the United States and the United Kingdom will be limited to 15 percent on dividends paid to residents of the other country.

In the absence of a tax treaty, the ACT is not refunded to nonresident aliens of the United Kingdom, Thus, under the new U.K. hybrid system, there is a higher tax burden imposed on dividends to nonresident shareholders than is imposed on U.K. resident shareholders; the unrefunded ACT can thus be viewed as an additional U.K. tax at the corporate level on dividend distributions to foreign shareholders. On amounts distributed to U.K. resident shareholders, the aggregate U.K. tax burden (the tax paid by the corporation reduced by the shareholder credit) ranges from zero to 28 percent (the effective rate depends upon the extent to which the distribution is out of taxable income compared to the extent it is derived from nontaxable earnings or capital). Since nonresident shareholders from nontreaty countries do not receive the refundable shareholder tax credit allowed U.K. resident shareholders, the effective U.K. tax burden on distributions to them ranges from 33 percent to 52 percent. By not making the shareholder credit available to nonresidents, the U.K. hybrid integration system has substantially the same effect with respect to dividends paid to foreign shareholders as if the U.K. imposed a split rate corporate income tax of up to 52 percent on retained earnings and up to 28 percent on earnings distributed as dividends, with a 33-percent dividend withholding tax.

U.S. direct corporate investors.—Under the proposed treaty, separate rules are provided for the taxation of dividends to shareholders which are U.S. corporations owning at least 10 percent of the distributing U.K. corporation's stock (because only corporate shareholders owning 10 percent of the stock are entitled to indirect foreign tax credits for U.K. income taxes paid by the U.K. corporation paying the dividend).[4]

In the case of a U.S. corporation which is a direct investor in a U.K. corporation, the proposed treaty provides that the U.S. corporation is entitled to a payment from the United Kingdom of an amount equal to one-half of the ACT paid with respect to the dividend, subject to a deduction withheld from the payment of up to 5 percent of the combined cash dividend plus the refunded one-half of the ACT.

To illustrate by example, on a divident of $67 paid by a U.K. corporation to a U.S. direct corporate investor, the U.K. corporation pays ACT of $33 to the U.K. Treasury, which in turn refunds approximately $12.50 to the U.S. shareholder—the amount equal to one-half of the ACT paid ($16.50) reduced by 5 percent of the sum of the cash dividend and one-half of the ACT (roughly $4, or 5 percent of the sum of $67 plus $16.50). Thus, the proposed treaty requires that the U.K. refund to direct U.S. corporate investors approximately 38 [24] percent (12.5/33) of the ACT imposed on the corporation. The refund provided for in the proposed treaty reduces the maximum effective U.K. tax burden on distributions to these direct U.S. corporate investors from 52 percent to 43 percent, and the minimum effective U.K. rate from 33 percent to 20.5 percent. Alternatively, the refund can be viewed as reducing the additional U.K. tax imposed on distributions to nonresidents (that is, the unrefunded ACT) from 33 percent to 20.5 percent.

The United Kingdom does not generally impose any withholding tax on nonresident shareholders under its new hybrid system. However, it does impose a withholding tax in those situations where it has agreed in tax treaties to refund the ACT to residents of the other treaty country. In any case where the U.K. corporation pays out some but not all of its after-tax income as dividends, the 5-percent withholding tax has the effect of slightly increasing the foreign tax which is treated as paid by the shareholder on the distribution and thus increasing the U.S. foreign tax credit allowed on the distribution.

U.S. individuals and portfolio investors.—Different rules are provided with respect to dividends from U.K. corporations to U.S. shareholders who are not corporations owning 10 percent of the U.K. corporation's stock (and thus are not entitled to a U.S. indirect foreign tax credit with respect to the taxes paid by the U.K. corporation). In these other cases, the proposed treaty provides for a payment to the U.S. shareholder by the U.K. Treasury of the full amount of the ACT paid by the U.K. corporation with respect to the dividend. However, this refund is reduced by a 15 percent withholding tax on the sum of the dividend and the ACT paid. To illustrate by example, on a dividend of $67 paid by a U.K. corporation to a U.S. resident individual or to a corporate portfolio investor, the U.K. corporation pays ACT of $33 to the U.K. Treasury, which in turn pays over to the U.S. shareholder $18—the excess of the ACT paid ($33) over 15 percent of the sum of the cash dividend and the ACT ($15, or 15 percent of the sum of $67 plus $33).

As discussed in further detail in connection with the provision dealing with the foreign tax credit (Article 23, Elimination of double taxation), the proposed treaty also provides that the full $100 is to be treated for U.S. foreign tax credit purposes as a dividend and that the $15 not refunded is to be treated as a U.K. withholding tax imposed upon the shareholder. As indicated above, the United Kingdom does not generally impose a withholding tax except where it has agreed to refund ACT pursuant to a tax treaty. The withholding tax for shareholders who are U.S. residents has the effect of treating the ACT not refunded as a tax paid by the shareholder receiving the distribution (rather than the corporation paying the dividend), thereby giving the shareholder a foreign tax credit against his U.S. tax liability on the dividend.

U.K. shareholders

With respect to dividends paid by U.S. corporations, the withholding tax which the United States may impose on U.K. resident shareholders depends upon whether or not they are direct corporate investors. In the case of dividends paid to U.K. corporations owning at least 10 percent of the distributing U.S. corporation's stock, the [25] otherwise applicable 30-percent U.S. withholding tax is reduced to 5 percent. (The rate under the existing treaty is 15 percent.) In the case of dividends paid to all other U.K. shareholders, the U.S. withholding rate is only reduced to 15 percent.

[4] As contrasted with the rules applicable to U.K. direct corporate investors in U.S. corporations (discussed below), a U.S. corporation will be considered to be a direct investor where it, together with any related corporations, owns a 10-percent stock interest in the U.K. corporation.

Comparison of rate reductions

As a result of these provisions, the maximum combined effective rate of tax (mainstream corporate tax and ACT) imposed by the U.K. on corporate earnings distributed to U.S. direct corporate shareholders is reduced from 52 percent to approximately 43 percent (a 52-percent corporate burden reduced by an ACT refund paid to the shareholders). In contrast, the maximum combined effective rate of U.S. tax (corporate tax and withholding tax) on U.K. direct corporate investors is reduced by the proposed treaty from approximately 63 percent (48 percent plus a 30 percent withholding tax on the remainder left for distribution) to approximately 51.5 percent (48 percent plus 5 percent of the remainder left for distribution). The combined effective U.K. rate on U.S. resident individuals and portfolio investors is reduced from 52 percent to approximately 39 percent, while the U.S. effective rate on U.K. resident individuals and portfolio investors is reduced from 63 percent to approximately 55.5 percent.

Special rules and exceptions

The dividend provisions do not apply in two circumstances where tax avoidance may occur. First, where a resident of either country owns 10 percent or more of the shares of a corporation with respect to which dividends are paid, these provisions do not apply to the extent that the dividends are paid out of income or profits which the corporation earned or received in a period ending a year or more before the date on which the shareholder became the owner of 10 percent or more of the corporation's stock. This rule is designed to prevent transactions where a 10-percent stock interest is acquired in order to obtain a distribution of the past earnings of a corporation at a reduced rate of tax.

A second rule is designed to deny the benefits of the dividend provisions to U.S. tax-exempt organizations if the dividends are received in circumstances where they would have been subject to U.K. tax if they had been received by an exempt organization of the United Kingdom. Under United Kingdom law, if a resident of the United Kingdom sells securities to a tax-exempt organization immediately before the payment of dividends, the organization will be taxable on the dividends paid in respect to the securities if the transaction was designed to accord the initial seller a preferential rate of tax on his sale. This rule is contained in the existing treaty.

These two tax avoidance rules do not apply if the beneficial owner of the shares satisfies the competent authority of the taxing country that the shares were acquired for bona fide commercial purposes and not to secure the benefits of the proposed convention.

In addition to the above new rules added to the treaty to take into account the U.K. integrated tax system, a number of other provisions were included which are generally similar to those in the existing British treaty or in the OECD model treaty.

[26] The above provisions relating to dividends do not apply to dividends received by U.S. residents who carry on business through a permanent establishment in the United Kingdom, or who perform independent services from a fixed base in the United Kingdom, where the dividends are effectively connected with the permanent establishment or fixed base. Similarly, the provisions do not apply to dividends received by U.K. residents who carry on business through a permanent establishment in the United States, or who perform independent personal services from a fixed base in the United States, where the dividends are effectively connected with the permanent establishment or fixed base. In such situations, the provisions relating to business profits (Article 7), independent personal services (Article 14), or public entertainers and athletes (Article 17), as the case may be, shall apply.

As in the case of most U.S. tax treaties and the OECD model tax treaty, the proposed treaty contains a general limitation on the taxation of dividends paid by corporations which are residents of the other country. Under this provision, the U.K. may not impose any taxes on the dividends paid by a U.S. corporation except where such dividends are paid to U.K. residents or where the dividends are effectively connected with a permanent establishment or fixed base in the United Kingdom. Similarly, the United States may not impose any tax on dividends paid by a U.K. corporation except where the dividends are paid to a resident or citizen of the United States or where the dividends are effectively connected with a permanent establishment or fixed base situated in the United States. These exemptions apply even if the dividends consist wholly or partly of profits or income arising in the taxing jurisdiction.

The proposed treaty also provides that a U.K. corporation shall be exempted from the U.S. accomulated earnings tax if U.K. resident individuals (other than U.S. citizens) control, directly or indirectly, throughout the last half of the taxable year, more than 50 percent of the entire voting power of the corporation. This provision is contained in the existing tax treaty with the United Kingdom.

Article 11. Interest

Under the proposed treaty, interest derived by a resident of one country (other than a citizen of the other country) from sources within the other country is exempt from tax in the source country. This exemption does not apply if the recipient has a permanent establishment or fixed base in the source country and the interest is effectively connected with the permanent establishment or fixed base. If the interest is effectively connected with a permanent establishment or fixed base, then it wil be taxed under the provisions of the proposed treaty dealing with business profits (Article 8), independent personal services (Article 14), or public entertainers and athletes (Article 17), as the case may be. This treatment generally conforms to that provided by other recent U.S. tax treaties of the OECD model tax treaty.

The exemption from U.K. tax under this article will not apply if the recipient of the interest is exempt from tax on such income in the United States and the recipient sells or makes a contract to sell the holding from which such interest is derived within three months after the date the recipient acquired such holding.

[27] A definition of interest is provided which is also substantially identical to that found in the OECD model tax treaty and other recent U.S. income tax treaties. In situations where the payor and recipient are related, the proposed treaty limits the amount treated as interest to that which would have been paid had they not been related.

Interest paid by a resident of one country, regardless of where it derives its income, to a person other than a resident of the other country (and, in the case of interest paid by a U.K. corporation, to a person other than a U.S. citizen) will be exempt from tax by the other country. However, this rule is inapplicable if the interest is effectively connected with a permanent establishment or fixed base which the recipient has in the other country.

Paragraph (7) of this article is carried over from the existing treaty. Under U.K. domestic law, interest payments by U.K. corporations to non-U.K. corporations which have 75 percent or more control, directly or indirectly, of the U.S. corporation are treated as dividends rather than as deductible interest. This paragraph provides (in reciprocal terms) that this rule shall not apply where the interest payment is to a U.S. resident. A dual resident corporation may claim the benefits of the provision with respect to interest payments it makes. However, the exemption does not apply to the interest paid to a U.S. corporation if more than 50 percent of the voting power of the U.S. corporation is directly or indirectly controlled by residents of the United Kingdom.

Paragraph (8) provides that the exemption from United Kingdom tax under paragraph (2) of this Article will not apply if the recipient of the interest is exempt from tax on such income in the United States and the recipient sells or makes a contract to sell the holding from which such interest is derived within three months after the date the recipient acquired such holding.

Article 12. Royalties

Under the proposed treaty, industrial and artistic royalties derived from one country by a resident of the other country are exempt from tax in the source country. The exemption does not apply if the recipient has a permanent establishment in the source country or performs independent personal services through a fixed base in the source country, and the royalties are effectively connected with the permanent establishment or fixed base. If the royalty is effectively connected with a permanent establishment or fixed base, then it will be taxed under the provisions relating to business profits (Article 8), independent personal services (Article 14), or public entertainers and athletes (Article 17), as the case may be. This treatment of royalties is substantially identical to that provided in the OECD model convention.

The proposed treaty does not include film royalties within the scope of the royalties article. Instead, they are treated as business profits and, accordingly, are exempt from tax unless they are attributable to a permanent establishment which the recipient maintains in the source country.

As in the case of the interest provision, the royalty provision does not apply to that part of a royalty paid to a related person which is in excess of an arm's length rate.

[28] Article 13. Capital gains

The proposed treaty provides that, except as provided in Article 8 (Shipping and air transport), capital gains are taxable in accordance with the domestic laws of each country. This rule applies to the existing laws of the United States and the United Kingdom respecting the taxation of capital gains and revisions of those laws subsequent to the effective date of the proposed treaty. Whether an item of income constitutes capital gains shall be determined under the laws of the country seeking to tax those gains.

Under current U.S. law, nonresident alien individuals are generally not taxable in the United States on their U.S. source capital gains unless (1) they are present in the United States for 183 days or more during a taxable year or (2) the gains are effectively connected with the conduct of a U.S. trade or business. Foreign corporations generally are taxable in the United States only on capital gains which are effectively connected with the conduct of a U.S. trade or business.

The representatives of the United States and the United Kingdom are to consult with each other upon the enactment or the proposed enactment by either country of any laws which substantially change the manner in which capital gains derived by nonresidents are taxed.

Article 14. Independent personal services

Under the proposed treaty, income from the performance of independent personal services (i.e., services performed as an independent contractor rather than as an employee) in one country by a resident of the other country is exempt from tax in the country where the services are performed unless (1) the person performing the personal service is present in the source country for 183 or more days during the taxable year and the income is attributable to services performed in that country, or (2) the person maintains a fixed base regularly available to him in the source country and such income is attributable to the fixed base.

Article 15. Dependent personal services

Under the proposed treaty, income from services performed as an employee in one country (the source country) by a resident of the other country will not be taxable in the source country if three requirements are met: (1) the individual is present in the source country for not more than 183 days during the taxable year; (2) compensation is not paid by, or on behalf of, an employer who is a resident of the source country; and

(3) the compensation is not borne by a permanent establishment of the employer in the source country. The treatment of dependent personal services is the same as that provided in the OECD model tax treaty.

Compensation derived by an employee from the performance of personal services as a member of the regular complement of a ship or aircraft operated in international traffic by a resident of one country is exempt from tax by the other country.

Article 16. Investment or holding companies

The proposed treaty contains a provision which in certain situations denies the benefits of the articles on dividends, interest and royalties (Articles 10-12) to a corporation which is entitled in its country of [29] residence to special tax benefits resulting in a substantially lower tax on those types of income than the tax generally imposed on corporate profits by that country. This provision applies if more than 25 percent of the capital of the corporation is owned by individuals who are not residents of that country or U.S. citizens. A similar provision is contained in several recent U.S. tax treaties (Iceland, Norway, and Trinidad and Tobago). The OECD model tax treaty does not have a comparable provision.

This article also provides that a corporation which is a resident of the United States shall not be entitled to the benefits of the articles relating to dividends, interest or royalties arising in the United Kingdom where more than 80 percent of its gross income (including such dividends, interest, or royalties) is derived from sources outside of the United States. This limitation does not apply if more than 75 percent of the capital of the corporation is owned directly or indirectly by individuals who are U.S. citizens or residents.

Neither of these limitations apply to a U.S. corporation if 75 percent or more of its capital is directly or indirectly owned: (a) by another U.S. corporation which receives 20 percent or more of its gross income from sources within the United States; (b) by a foreign corporation which would not be treated as a close company under U.K. law; or (c) by a corporation, resident in the United Kingdom, more than 50 percent of the voting power of which is controlled directly or indirectly by individuals who are residents of the United Kingdom.

The purpose of the first limitation is to prevent residents of third countries from using a corporation in one treaty country, which is preferentially taxed in that country, to obtain the tax benefits in the other treaty country which the proposed treaty provides for dividends, interest, and royalties derived from that other country. This accords with the purpose of an income tax treaty between two countries to lessen or eliminate the amount of double taxation of income derived from sources within one country by a resident of the other country. At the present time, neither the United Kingdom nor the United States grants to investment or holding companies the type of tax benefits with respect to dividends, interest or royalties which would make this limitation applicable. Thus, it will have effect only if the United Kingdom or the United States should subsequently enact special tax measures granting preferential tax treatment to dividends, interest or royalties received by an investment or holding company.

The second limitation is intended to prevent the use of U.S. corporations by residents of third countries in order to take advantage of the reduced rates of tax or exemptions from tax granted by the United Kingdom on dividends, interest and royalties paid to residents (including corporations) of the United States. Generally, interest and dividends paid by U.S. corporations to nonresidents of the United States are not subject to tax by the United States if more than 80 percent of the corporation's gross income is from sources outside the United States (sec. 862). Accordingly, were it not for this provision, a resident of a third country could establish a U.S. corporation solely to derive interest or dividends from the United Kingdom subject to the reduced rates and refunds allowed by the treaty. While such income would be subject to normal corporate taxes in the United States, the [30] corporation's dividends or interest to the third country residents would be exempt from U.S. withholding taxes. This limitation prevents this abuse where the 25 percent or more of the capital of the corporation is owned by individuals who are not U.S. citizens or residents. Since the purpose of this provision is only to prevent the use of U.S. corporations in cases where their income would otherwise qualify for reduced withholding rates in the United Kingdom and their distributions to third country residents would not attract U.S. withholding taxes, exceptions to the rule are given where that corporation is owned by another U.S. corporation whose distributions would attract U.S. withholding taxes; where that corporation is owned by a corporation which is not a close company under U.K. law; and where the corporation is owned by a corporation resident of the United Kingdom 50 percent or more of the voting power of which is controlled by U.K. resident individuals.

Article 17. Artistes and athletes

The proposed treaty contains a separate set of rules which govern the taxation of income earned by public entertainers (such as theater, motion picture, radio or television entertainers and musicians) and athletes. The proposed treaty provides that, notwithstanding the other provisions dealing with the taxation of personal services (Articles 15 and 16), each country may tax nonresident entertainers or athletes on the income from their personal services performed in the country during any year in which their gross receipts (including reimbursed expenses or expenses borne on their behalf) for services performed in that country during that year exceed $15,000. Thus, highly paid entertainers and athletes will be taxable by the country in which they perform, regardless of the period of time spent in that country. However, as in the case of the other provisions dealing with personal services income, this provision does not bar the country of residence or citizenship from also taxing that income. In such a case, double taxation is avoided by the grant of a foreign tax credit.

In addition, the proposed treaty provides that when income in respect of personal services performed by an entertainer or athlete is paid not to the entertainer or athlete but rather to another person or entity, that income will be taxable by the country in which the services are performed in any situation where the entertainer or athlete shares directly or indirectly in the profits of the person or entity receiving the income. For this purpose, participation in the profits of the recipient of the income includes the receipt of deferred compensation, bonuses, fees, dividends, partnership distributions, or other distributions. The provision is intended to prevent performers and athletes from avoiding tax in the country in which they perform by routing the compensation for their services through a third person such as a personal holding company.

Article 18. Private pensions and annuities, and alimony

Under the proposed treaty, private pensions and annuities derived by residents of the United States are exempt from tax by the United Kingdom, and private pensions and annuities derived by residents of the United Kingdom are exempt from tax by the United States. In addition, alimony paid to a resident of either country is exempt from tax by the other country.

[31] Article 19. Government services

Under the proposed treaty, compensation, other than a pension, paid by the Government of either country to an individual for services rendered to that country is generally taxable only in that country. However, such compensation is taxable only in the country in which the services are being performed if the recipient is a resident national of that country or is a resident solely for the purpose of performing the services. This provision does not apply to compensation received for services performed for political subdivisions and local authorities. The provision generally follows the OECD model tax treaty, and it is similar to the provision in the existing U.S.-U.K. tax treaty.

Any pension paid by either country, or a political subdivision or a local authority thereof, to any individual in respect of services rendered to that country or subdivision or local authority is generally taxable only in that country. However, a pension is taxable only in the other country if the recipient is both a national of and a resident of that other country.

These provisions do not apply if the services are rendered in connection with any business carried on by or on behalf of either country or a political subdivision or local authority. In such cases, the provisions of Articles 14 (Independent personal services), 15 (Dependent personal services), 17 (Artistes and athletes), and 18 (Pensions) apply, as the case may be. In addition, these provisions do not apply to an individual who acquires immigrant status in the country in which he performs the services or receives the pension. See paragraphs (3) and (4)(b) of Article 1 (Personal scope).

Article 20. Teachers

The proposed treaty provides that a professor or teacher who is a resident of one country will be exempt from tax in the other country on income from teaching or from engaging in research at an educational institution in the host country if he is present in that other country for a period not exceeding two years. Unlike the present treaty and other U.S. tax treaties, if the two-year period is exceeded, the exemption will be lost retroactively. In addition, as in other U.S. tax treaties, the exemption for income from research only applies if the research is undertaken in the public interest and not primarily for the benefit of some other private person or persons.

Article 21. Students and trainees

The treatment afforded students and trainees under the proposed treaty corresponds generally to the existing treaty and to the OECD model tax treaty. Residents of one country who become students or business apprentices in the other country will be exempt from tax in the host country on payments received for their maintenance, education, or training, if they are engaged in a full-time education or training program and the payments are made from sources outside the host country. Payments will be considered to have been made from sources outside of the host country when they are borne by a person who is not a resident of that country. The exemption does not apply to payments to students or business apprentices who are nationals of or residents with immigrant status in the host country.

[32] Article 22. Other income

Items of income not otherwise dealt with in the proposed treaty which are derived by residents of either country shall be taxable only by the country of residence, regardless of the source of the income. That rule, however, does not apply to residents of one country carrying on a business in the other country through a permanent establishment or performing independent personal services in that other country from a fixed base situated therein, where the income paid is effectively connected with the permanent establishment or fixed base. In such situations, the provisions of Article 7 (Business profits), Article 14 (Independent personal services) or Article 17 (Artistes and athletes), as the case may be, shall apply.

However, the article specifies that each country may continue to tax income paid out of trusts. This provision allows the U.K. to continue to apply its taxes on accumulation and discretionary trusts.

Article 23. Elimination of double taxation

In general

The proposed treaty contains the general rule contained in many U.S. tax treaties under which the United States agrees that it will continue to allow its U.S. citizens and residents to claim a foreign tax credit (Code sec. 901) against the U.S. tax for the appropriate amount of income taxes paid to the United Kingdom. The proposed treaty also makes the indirect foreign tax credit (Code sec. 902) available where a U.S. corporation receives a dividend from a U.K. corporation in which it has at least a 10-percent ownership interest. In this case, a credit will be allowed for the appropriate amount of tax paid to the United Kingdom by the U.K. corporation with respect to the profits out of which the dividend is paid. The (direct or indirect) credit allowed under the proposed treaty is subject to the limitations and in accordance with the provisions of U.S. law (as it may be amended from time to time without changing the general principle of allowing a foreign tax credit) applicable to the year in question.

The proposed treaty similarly provides that the United Kingdom shall allow a foreign tax credit against its tax for U.S. tax paid on profits or income from sources within the United States. The credit is to be subject to the provisions of U.K. law regarding the allowance of a foreign tax credit as they may be amended from time to time without changing the general principle of allowing a foreign tax credit. In addition, the proposed treaty provides that where a U.K. corporation receives a dividend from a U.S. corporation and the U.K. corporation controls (directly or indirectly) at least 10 percent of the voting power of the U.S. corporation, the United Kingdom is to allow an indirect credit for the U.S. taxes paid by the U.S. corporation in respect to the profits out of which the dividends are paid.

In addition, the proposed treaty sets forth the general rule that income or profits derived by a resident of one country which may, under the proposed treaty, be taxed by the other country shall be deemed to arise from sources within that other country. However, an exception to that rule is provided with respect to residents of the United Kingdom who are U.S. citizens (and thus are taxed by the United States on the basis of citizenship). Under the proposed treaty, the United Kingdom shall not be required in that situation to allow a credit with re- [33] spect to U.S. tax on income the U.S. citizen earned from sources outside the United States (as determined under the laws of the United Kingdom). Similarly, the United States shall not be required to allow to such U.S. citizens a foreign tax credit for U.K. taxes on income from sources outside the United Kingdom (as determined under the laws of the United States).

The Advance Corporation Tax (the "ACT")

Background.—In addition to the general rules providing for the allowance of the foreign tax credit, the proposed treaty also sets forth special rules which govern the manner in which the taxes imposed by the United Kingdom on U.K. corporations (in particular, the ACT) are to be treated for purposes of the U.S. foreign tax credit allowable on dividends paid to U.S. shareholders.

As discussed above in connection with the provisions of the proposed treaty relating to dividends (Article 10), the United Kingdom has a hybrid corporate tax system which in part integrates the tax imposed on corporations and their shareholders. Under the U.K. system, the effective rate of tax paid by a U.K. corporation depends upon the extent to which it has paid out dividends. The corporation is subject to a "mainstream" corporation tax imposed at a rate of 52 percent. When it makes a distribution to its shareholders, it is subject to an additional tax, the ACT, equal to 33/67 of the distribution. However, since the corporation is entitled to credit the ACT payment against its mainstream tax liability (subject to certain limitations), the ACT payment does not result in an increased tax burden on the corporation except in situations where the U.K. corporation distributes amounts with respect to which the mainstream corporate tax has not been paid (distributions out of earnings in excess of U.K. taxable income, out of capital, or out of non-U.K. source earning against which a U.K. foreign tax credit has been allowed for mainstream tax purposes—no foreign tax credit is allowed against the ACT).

In addition to the credit of the ACT allowed against the corporation's mainstream tax, U.K. shareholders are entitled to credit an amount equal to the ACT payment against their U.K. income tax liability on the distribution (the U.K. shareholder receives a cash refund to the extent, if any, that the ACT payment by the corporation exceeds the shareholder's tax liability). In the absence of a tax treaty, the ACT is not refunded to nonresident aliens, and the unrefunded ACT results in an actual increased tax burden with respect to dividends paid to nonresidents.

Creditability of ACT.—It is open to question whether, in the absence of the proposed treaty, the unrefunded ACT would be treated as a creditable income tax for U.S. foreign tax credit purposes. On the one hand, although the unrefunded ACT may be viewed economically as a foreign tax with respect to income of the U.S. shareholders because it is imposed with respect to dividend income paid to them, it is imposed on the paying U.K. corporation rather than the U.S. shareholder receiving the distribution and thus probably would not be allowed as a direct income tax credit to the U.S. shareholder.[5]

[34] On the other hand, although it is a tax imposed on the paying U.K. corporation, it is not imposed with respect to income of the paying corporation, but rather on all distributions made by the U.K. corporation, whether out of taxable income, out of untaxed earnings, or out of capital. Under present IRS ruling policy, in order for a foreign tax to qualify for the U.S. foreign tax credit, it must be imposed on the net gain of the taxpayer (determined by allowing the deduction of the generally significant expenses incurred in the production of that income), it must be imposed only on income that is realized, and it must be imposed on the receipt of income rather than some other transaction.[6] It would appear that, at least in form, the ACT would not satisfy these criteria. There is, therefore, a reasonable possibility that the ACT would not be viewed by the IRS as a creditable tax in the absence of the proposed treaty.

However, notwithstanding these technical difficulties, the ACT could be treated as a creditable income tax to the extent that it is allowed as an offset against the U.K. "mainstream" corporate tax, which is a creditable income tax. Under this treatment, in situations where the ACT is offset against a mainstream tax accruing in years subsequent to the dividend payment, no foreign tax credit would be allowed in the absence of the treaty until that later year in which the mainstream liability is offset.

ACT refunds to U.S. portfolio shareholders.—In the case of dividends paid to U.S. resident shareholders (other than U.S. corporations owning more than 10 percent of the U.K. corporation's stock), the proposed treaty provides (Article 10, Dividends) that the United Kingdom is to pay to the U.S. shareholder an amount equal to the amount which would be refunded to U.K. resident shareholders with respect to the distribution. However, the refund to these U.S. shareholders is to be reduced by an amount equal to 15 percent of the sum of the distribution and the full refund which would be paid to U.K. shareholders. For example, on a distribution of $67, U.K. resident shareholders would be allowed a credit of $33. Under the proposed treaty, U.S. shareholders (other than direct corporate investors) would receive a net refund of $18—the $33 credit allowable to U.K. shareholders less $15 (15 percent of the sum of the $67 distribution and the $33 credit). Since the amount of the refund paid to U.K. shareholders is 33 percent of the sum of the dividend and the refund, the net payment made to these U.S. shareholders ($33 less $15, or 18 percent of that sum) is to be a little more than one-half of the credit allowed to U.K. shareholders (18/33rds).

The proposed treaty provides that for U.S. foreign tax credit purposes the U.S. shareholders are to be treated as having received a dividend equal to the distribution paid plus an amount equal to the full refund payable to U.K. shareholders (Article 10(2)(a)(iii)) and that the reduction in the refund payable to U.S. shareholders equal to 15 percent of that grossed-up dividend is to be treated as creditable income tax imposed on the U.S. shareholder (Article 23(1)(b)). For example, on a dividend of $67, the U.S. shareholder will receive a net payment from the U.K. Treasury of $18 and will be treated for U.S. [35] foreign tax credit purposes as having received a dividend of $100 ($67 distribution plus $33 gross refund) from which a $15 creditable income tax has been withheld. The effect of providing for a full 33-percent payment to the U.S. shareholder subject to the special 15-percent reduction is to permit the U.S. shareholder to claim a foreign tax credit for the 15-percent reduction.

ACT refunds to U.S. direct corporate investors.—In the case of distributions made to U.S. corporations which own at least 10 percent of the voting stock of the distributing U.K. corporations ("direct corporate investors"), the provisions contained in the proposed treaty relating to the U.S. foreign tax credit are more complicated. In the case of distributions to U.S. direct corporate investors, the proposed treaty provides that the U.K. Treasury is to make a payment to U.S. direct corporate shareholders equal to one-half the credit which would be allowed to U.K. resident shareholders. However, the payment from the U.K. Treasury is to be reduced by an amount equal to 5 percent of the sum of the distribution and the payment. To illustrate by example, on a $67 distribution to a U.S. direct corporate investor, the distributing U.K. corporation pays ACT of $33 to the U.K. Treasury, which in turn pays approximately $12.50 to the U.S. direct corporate shareholder. This payment to the U.S. shareholder is $16.50 (one-half of the $33 credit which would be allowed to a U.K. resident shareholder) less roughly $4 (5 percent of the sum of that $16.50 and the $67 distribution).

For purposes of the U.S. foreign tax credit, the proposed treaty treats the U.S. direct corporate shareholder as receiving a dividend equal to the distribution paid plus an amount equal to one-half of the credit allowable to U.K. shareholders (Article 10(2)(a)(iii)). The reduction in the payment to the U.S. shareholder of 5 percent of the grossed-up distribution is to be treated as a creditable income tax (under Code sec. 901) imposed on the U.S. shareholder (Article 23(1)(b)). In addition, the remaining one-half of the amount which would be credited to U.K. residents but which is not refunded to U.S. direct corporate investors is treated as a creditable income tax imposed on the distributing U.K. corporation. As a result, the U.S. direct corporate shareholder can claim a deemed-paid foreign tax credit.

For example, on a distribution of $67, the U.S. direct corporate shareholder would be treated as receiving a dividend of $83.50 (the $67 distribution plus one-half of the $33 credit which would be allowed to U.K. resident shareholders), and would be treated as having paid a creditable income tax of 5 percent of that amount, or roughly $4. In addition, the U.K. corporation would be treated as having paid additional income tax of the remaining $16.50 which is not refunded, and the U.S. shareholder will be entitled to an indirect foreign tax credit for that unrefunded $16.50.

The technical explanation of the proposed treaty issued by the U.S. Treasury Department further details the manner in which direct U.S. corporate investors are to compute their U.S. foreign tax credit with respect to dividends received from U.K. corporations. For purposes of computing the indirect foreign tax credit, the technical explanation does not treat the ACT refund which is paid to the U.S. shareholder [36] by the U.K. Treasury (equal to half the credit allowable to U.K. shareholders) as a refund of U.K. tax paid to the U.S. shareholder, but instead treats it as a refund of U.K. tax to the distributing U.K. corporation. The partial refund of the ACT paid to the U.S. shareholders provided in the proposed treaty reduces the maximum effective U.K. tax rate with respect to dividends paid to U.S. shareholders to 43 percent while the U.K. tax rate on retained profits is 52 percent. The effect of the method of computing the foreign tax credit set forth in the proposed treaty Treasury's technical explanation is to average the reduced U.K. taxes paid with respect to the distribution with the higher U.K. taxes paid on retained earnings in determining the U.K. tax which is attributed to the dividend distribution.

To illustrate by example, where a U.K. corporation with $200 of taxable income distributes one-half of its $96 of after-tax earnings, or $48, a refund is paid to the U.S. shareholder of $9 ($12 refund, reduced by $3 withholding tax). This refund reduces the effective rate of U.K. tax on the dividend to 43 percent ($52 of tax paid by the corporation reduced by a $9 refund to the U.S. shareholder). For indirect foreign tax credit purposes, however, the distributing corporation would be treated as having paid $92 in U.K. tax ($104 minus the full $12 refund without regard for the withholding tax). Since one-half of after tax income is distributed, one-half of the taxes as determined ($46) are allowed as an indirect foreign tax credit. In effect, the U.S. shareholder is permitted to average the 52-percent rate paid with respect to the retained earnings and the 43 percent paid with respect to the dividend received and claim a 48.5-percent foreign tax credit.[8] If the retained profits are subsequently distributed to the U.S. shareholder (thereby lowering the average rate attributable to the previous dividend to 43 percent), the U.S. shareholder is treated as having received a refund of a portion of the U.K. taxes claimed as a foreign tax credit with respect to the earlier dividend and must reduce the foreign tax credit claimed in the prior year.

The Treasury's technical explanation also set forth a complex set of rules and examples intended to be used for purposes of determining the earnings to which ACT payments by a U.K. corporation are to be attributed for purposes of computing the indirect U.S. foreign tax credit. The technical explanation also sets forth rules for determining the credit where the U.K. corporation has non-U.S. shareholders. These rules are necessary because the treatment of the refund of the ACT to shareholders as a refund of tax to the corporation would dis- [37] tort the average U.K. tax paid by the corporation attributed to its shareholders where the shareholders receive refunds of differing amounts.

The ACT refunds, the withholding tax, and the unrefunded portion of the ACT are treated for U.S. foreign tax credit purposes in a manner which is generally favorable to U.S. shareholders. These rules raise difficult and complex issues. In recommending the ratification of the proposed treaty, the Committee does not intend that these rules necessarily serve as a model for future treaties. Further, in recommending the ratification of the treaty, the Committee does not intend to adopt or reject the amplifications of the foreign tax credit rules contained in the Treasury technical explanation. Consequently, Treasury would not be foreclosed by the ratification of the treaty from modifying those administrative interpretations in the future should it deem it advisable to do so. Of course, the rules contained in the treaty also do not limit any legislative action in this area; the computation of the foreign tax credit for unrefunded ACT may be subject to any generally applicable changes in the U.S. foreign tax credit rules which may subsequently be enacted.

Petroleum Revenue Tax

The proposed treaty also provides that the U.K. Petroleum Revenue Tax (the "PRT") is to be treated as a creditable income tax for U.S. foreign tax credit purposes. It is the position of the Internal Revenue Service that the PRT is not a tax on net income and that therefore it would not be eligible for the U.S. foreign tax credit in the absence of the proposed treaty. In the view of the IRS, the PRT is more in the nature of a deductible royalty or excise tax.

The PRT is imposed at a 45 percent rate on assessable profits from oil and gas extraction activities in the U.K. (including the North Sea) on a field-by-field basis. It is in addition to, and separate from, the regular U.K. corporate tax (and a 12.5 percent royalty payable on North Sea production). The amount of PRT paid is allowed as a deduction for purposes of computing the regular U.K. corporate income tax. Operating and capital losses from nonextraction activities are not allowed as deductions in computing the PRT. In addition, no deduction is allowed for interest or other financing costs. However, a special additional deduction based on the amount of capital investment is provided to compensate for the disallowance of interest expenses in computing profits for purposes of the PRT. The aggregate amount payable to the U.K. Government in taxes and royalties on oil and gas extraction income is roughly 60 to 70 percent.

The proposed treaty also makes it clear that the provisions of this article requiring the U.S. to allow a foreign tax credit for U.K. taxes, in particular the PRT, do not affect the limitations on credits for foreign taxes imposed on foreign oil and gas extraction income and foreign oil-related income which are contained in the Tax Reduction Act of 1975 [Pub. L. 94-12, 1975-1 C.B. 545]. Since the treaty was negotiated prior to the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1976 [Pub. L. 94-455, 1976-3 C.B. (Vol. 1) 1], the proposed treaty does not also refer to the limitations on foreign tax credits for oil and gas extraction taxes contained in the 1976 Act. However, since the proposed treaty provisions require only that a U.S. foreign tax credit be allowed in accord- [38] ance with the provisions and subject to the limitations of the law of the United States (as it may be amended from time to time without changing the general principle of allowing a foreign tax credit), the additional limitations contained in the 1976 Act, and any similar limitations applying to foreign income taxes imposed on oil and gas extraction income or oil related income which may in the future be adopted, will apply in computing the U.S. foreign tax credit allowable with respect to U.K. taxes on oil and gas extraction income and oil-related income.

[8] The allowance of the foreign tax credit at a 48.5-percent rate rather than at the average rate of U.K. tax (47.5 percent) imposed on retained and distributed profits from the characterization of the $9 net payment by the U.K. to the U.S. shareholder as comprised of (i) a $12 ACT refund to the U.K. subsidiary (one-half of the $24 ACT imposed) reduced by (ii) a $3 withholding tax (5 percent of the sum of the $48 dividend and the $12 unrefunded ACT) rather than merely as an ACT refund of the net $9 payment made by the U.K. (or ⅜ of the ACT imposed). This treatment yields a slightly higher foreign tax credit than would otherwise be available because the full amount of the withholding tax is available to the U.S. shareholder as a direct credit, while the reduction in its deemed paid foreign taxes attributable to the ACT refund is allocated between the dividend and the earnings retained by the U.K. subsidiary.

Article 24. Nondiscrimination

The proposed treaty contains a comprehensive nondiscrimination provision similar to provisions which have been embodied in other recent U.S. income tax treaties and the OECD model treaty. One country cannot discriminate by imposing more burdensome taxes on its residents who are citizens of the other country, or on permanent establishments maintained in that country by residents of the other country, than it imposes on its nationals and resident corporations. The nondiscrimination provision also applies to corporations or other enterprises of one country which are owned by residents of the other country. The nondiscrimination provision does not, however, oblige either country to grant individual residents of the other country any personal allowances, reliefs, or deductions for taxation purposes on account of personal status or family responsibiliites (e.g., dependency deductions) which it grants to its own residents.

The proposed treaty provides generally that interest, royalties, and other disbursements paid by a U.S. enterprise to a U.K. enterprise, whether or not related, shall, if reasonable in amount, be deductible by the U.S. enterprise in computing its U.S. taxable income to the same extent as if they had been paid to another U.S. enterprise. Similarly, such payments by U.K. enterprises to U.S. enterprises are deductible for U.K. tax purposes to the same extent as deductions are allowed for similar payments made to U.K. enterprises. For purposes of this provision, the term "other disbursements" includes charges or allocations for amounts expended by a resident of the other country for the benefit of the enterprise (e.g., amounts expended by a U.S. parent corporation for the benefit of its U.K. subsidiary). It includes a reasonable allocation of executive and general administrative expense incurred on behalf of the enterprise by the resident of the other country (except that it does not include such expenses to the extent that they are not for the benefit of the enterprise, but are for "stewardship" or "overseeing" functions for the resident's own benefit as an investor in the enterprise). The term also includes charges and allocations of research and development expenses where the enterprise has the benefits of such activities under a cost or risk-sharing agreement and other expenditures incurred by the resident for the benefit of a group of related enterprises which includes the resident.

This provision does not apply to interest, royalties, or other disbursements paid or charged to a related resident of the other country to the extent that they exceed the arm's-length amount which would be paid under similar circumstances to an unrelated party. This provision also does not apply to interest payments by a corporation to a U.S. [39] corporation controlled by U.K. shareholders (see Article 11(7), Interest). Under certain circumstances such payments are treated as dividends for U.K. tax purposes.

Articles 25 and 26. Administrative provisions

The proposed treaty contains various administrative provisions generally along the lines of the provisions contained in other U.S. tax treaties. In general, the proposed treaty provides—

(1) for consultation and negotiation between the two countries to resolve differences arising in the application of the proposed treaty and also to resolve claims by taxpayers that they are being subjected to taxation contrary to the terms of the proposed treaty;

(2) for the exchange between the countries of information pertinent to carrying out the provisions of the proposed treaty and of the domestic laws of the countries concerning taxes covered by the proposed treaty; and

(3) that each country is to assist the other in collecting taxes imposed by the other country to the extent necessary to insure that the benefits provided by the proposed treaty are enjoyed only by persons entitled to those benefits.

Article 27. Effect on diplomatic officials and domestic laws

The proposed treaty contains the rule found in other U.S. tax treaties that its provisions are not to affect the fiscal privileges of diplomatic and consular officials under the general rules of international law or the provisions of special agreements.

In addition, the proposed treaty contains the rule found in other U.S. tax treaties that its provisions do not restrict in any manner any exclusion, exemption, deduction, credit, or other allowances accorded by the laws of either country. Thus, the proposed treaty can only be applied when it benefits a taxpayer.

Article 28. Entry into force

The proposed treaty will enter into force on the thirty-first day following the date on which the instruments of ratification are exchanged. Once the proposed treaty enters into force, it applies retroactively, with different effective dates provided with respect to different taxes and provisions.

With respect to the income and capital gains taxes imposed by the United Kingdom, the provisions of the proposed treaty generally apply for any year of assessment beginning on or after April 6, 1975 (the United Kingdom tax year begins on April 6). However, the provision relating to the refund of the ACT and the imposition of the 15 percent withholding tax on dividends paid by United Kingdom corporations to U.S. individual investors and corporate portfolio investors (Article 10(2)(a)(ii)) applies with respect to dividends paid after April 1, 1973 (the date the ACT system came into effect). The proposed treaty will apply with respect to the corporation tax for any financial year beginning on or after April 1, 1975. With respect to the Petroleum Revenue Tax, it applies for any chargeable period beginning on or after January 1, 1975 (the date the PRT first came into effect).

The proposed treaty will generally apply on a retroactive basis to taxes imposed in the United States (including state income taxes subject to the limitations provided in Article 9(4)) for taxable years [40] beginning on or after January 1, 1975. The proposed treaty applies to any U.S. withholding taxes paid or credited on or after January 1, 1975, without regard to when the taxable year began. In addition, the provisions under which the United States is required to allow a foreign tax credit for United Kingdom taxes (including the income tax, the capital gains tax, the corporation tax, the unrefunded ACT, the deemed withholding tax, the Petroleum Revenue Tax, and local taxes) apply with respect to United Kingdom taxes paid on or after April 1, 1973.

The provisions of the existing treaty will generally cease to have effect on a retroactive basis with respect to a tax to which the proposed treaty applies at the time the proposed treaty comes into effect with respect to that tax. However, where any provisions of the existing treaty would have afforded greater relief from tax, that provision will continue to have effect for any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1976. The existing treaty will terminate on the last date on which it has effect under the above provisions.

The termination of the existing treaty will not, however, affect agreements which extend the existing treaty to certain territories of the United Kingdom (Antigua, Belize, the British Virgin Islands, Dominica, the Falkland Islands, Montserrat, St. Christopher-Nevis-Anguilla, St. Lucia, and St. Vincent). In those cases, the existing treaty will continue to apply. However, the United States has requested the United Kingdom to advise those territories that the United States desires to renegotiate the existing treaty as it affects them so as to reflect the principles of the proposed treaty.

Article 29. Termination

The proposed treaty will continue in force indefinitely, but either country may, on or before June 30 of any year after 1980, terminate it by giving notice through diplomatic channels.

If such notice is given, the treaty will cease to be effective for taxable years beginning on or after January 1 of the following year for U.S. tax; for a year of assessment beginning on or after April 6 of the following year for the U.K. income tax and capital gains tax; for a financial year beginning on or after April 1 of the following year for the U.K. corporation tax; and for a chargeable period beginning on or after January 1 of the following year for the U.K. Petroleum Revenue Tax.

[50] LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

THE WHITE HOUSE,
June 24, 1976.

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith for Senate advice and consent to ratification the Convention for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion with respect to Taxes on Income signed at London on December 31, 1975, together with an exchange of notes modifying certain provisions of the Convention signed at London on April 13, 1976.

I also transmit for the information of the Senate the report of the Department of State with respect to the Convention and the exchange of notes.

This Convention and exchange of notes are designed to modernize the relationship with respect to taxes on income which has evolved between the United States and the United Kingdom from a similar Convention signed at Washington on April 16, 1945.

The Convention with subsequent exchange of notes is similar to other recent United States income tax treaties, although it does have some new features which are described in the enclosed report of the Department of State.

Such tax conventions help promote economic cooperation with other countries. I urge the Senate to act favorably on this Convention and exchange of notes at an early date and to give its advice and consent to ratification.

GERALD R. FORD.

[51] LETTER OF SUBMITTAL

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 8, 1976.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

The PRESIDENT: I have the honor to submit to you, with a view to its transmission to the Senate for advice and consent to ratification, the Convention between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the Avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income signed at London on December 31, 1975, and an exchange of notes signed at London on April 13, 1976, modifying certain provisions of the Convention.

The proposed Convention with the United Kingdom is similar in its essential respects to other recent United States income tax treaties, and to the model income tax convention of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. There are, however, several provisions in the Convention with the United Kingdom which require special comment.

Article 10 (Dividends) represents a new approach to meshing, by treaty, two tax systems which differ sharply in their treatment of corporations and their shareholders—the "classical system" in the United States, under which corporate profits and dividend income are taxed separately in the hands of the corporation and the shareholder, and the British "imputation system" under which a portion of the tax collected at the corporate level (known as The Advance Corporation Tax "Act") is refunded to a United Kingdom shareholder to satisfy his tax liability on a dividend distribution. Under the United Kingdom system which was enacted in 1973, nonresident shareholders do not receive this refund. We believe this represents discrimination against United States investors in the United Kingdom vis-a-vis United Kingdom investors.

The provisions of Article 10 of the draft treaty mitigate this discriminatory element in the British system. The British will, under the treaty, make payments to U.S. investors equivalent, in part or in whole, to the ACT credit allowed to United Kingdom investors. United States portfolio investors, defined as owning less than ten percent of the shares of the United Kingdom corporation, will receive, in addition to the dividend, a payment equal to the full credit allowed to United Kingdom investors. From the total amount paid (the dividend plus the credit payment) the United Kingdom will withhold 15 percent. For direct investors (corporations owning more than ten percent of the shares of the United Kingdom corporation), the payment will equal one-half of the credit allowed to United Kingdom [52] shareholders, and from the total amount paid, a tax of five percent will be withheld. This latter provision represents a substantial concession by the United Kingdom because under United Kingdom law, only individual domestic shareholders receive the ACT credit.

This provision is significant beyond the immediate context of the United Kingdom treaty, because it presently appears that an imputation system similar to that in the United Kingdom will be the approach adopted by the European Economic Community in harmonizing the income tax systems of the member countries. France already has such a system.

In order to clarify the United States tax treatment of the ACT, the treaty provides that the credit payments by the United Kingdom will be treated as dividend income to United States shareholders and that a foreign tax credit will be allowed for the portions of the ACT credit not refunded.

The United States will reduce its withholding rates to 15 percent on dividends to United Kingdom portfolio investors and to five percent on dividends to United Kingdom parent corporations. This reduction follows the pattern adopted in other United States treaties.

A second new provision is found in paragraph 4 of Article 9 (Associated Enterprises). This provision represents the first attempt to bind State and local taxing authorities by a substantive provision of the treaty (other than non-discrimination). Under the basic rules of our other tax conventions a Contracting State entering into such tax conventions is prohibited from taking into account, in determining the tax liability of an enterprise doing business in that Contracting State, the income, expenses, etc. of related enterprises of the other Contracting State or in other countries if those enterprises are not engaged in business in the Contracting State, except to the extent that inter-company transactions are not conducted on an arm's length basis. This treaty, for the first time, extends this limitation to State and local tax authorities with respect to enterprises conrolled by United Kingdom residents. This limitation is directed at the practice of a few States which are attempting to take into account the income on a consolidated basis of all related foreign enterprises in assessing the State income tax of a single member of the related group doing business in the State. This method of assessment, which includes the burden of producing worldwide records of all of the affiliated companies, has raised many objections by our treaty partners and we are now seeking to deal specifically with this problem in our treaties. This broadening of the scope of the treaty has been discussed informally with the Chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

The treaty provides for reciprocal exemption from withholding on interest and royalty payments from payers in one Contracting State received by residents of the other. Such exemption is provided in the existing treaty.

The treaty also clarifies the manner in which the United Kingdom may tax the United States source income of United States citizens residing in the United Kingdom and United Kingdom branches of United States corporations. The treaty generally allows the United Kingdom to tax such income, but in so doing, the United Kingdom must first allow a credit against its tax for any United States tax paid with respect to the same income. This rule is consistent with our [53] other recent treaties and the OECD Model Convention. The remaining provisions of the draft treaty, dealing with the taxation of business profits, personal service income and administrative matters are patterned largely after other recent United States income tax treaties.

The exchange of notes dated April 13, 1976, was entered into on the basis of information communicated to both governments since public release of the December 31, 1975, Convention. It was called to our attention that a number of corporations have been organized under the existing tax convention as dual residents of the United States and the United Kingdom on the assumption that certain benefits of the present treaty flow to such dual residents and their shareholders. Paragraph 2 of Article 1 of the convention signed on December 31 excluded all dual resident corporations from benefits under the new treaty. The proposed note modifies this provision by extending treaty benefits to residents of the United States and the United Kingdom who receive income from dual resident corporations and provides that the United Kingdom Petroleum Revenue tax will be a creditable income tax in the case of a dual resident corporation.

The April 13, 1976, exchanges of notes amended Article 8 (Shipping and Air Transport) to broaden the tax exemption for containers used in international traffic.

Paragraph 4 of Article 9 (Associated Enterprises) was restated to make it clear that the United States and States of the United States may not take into account the income or deductions of a related enterprise which is a resident of the other Contracting State unless such enterprise is engaged in business in the taxing jurisdiction or has had business transactions with a related enterprise and the adjustment is made on an arm's length basis. The rule has been restated to make it clear that this limitation on Federal and State tax rules applies only to corporations controlled by United Kingdom interests and eliminates any suggestions in the text of December 31 that United States based companies or third country companies might obtain coverage under this rule merely by establishing a United Kingdom affiliate.

Article 16 (Investment or Holding Companies) was liberalized in order to permit certain financing companies established in the United States to benefit from reduced treaty rates by the United Kingdom. Additional changes in the note are conforming amendments.

The Convention and exchange of notes will enter into force thirty days after the date of exchange of instruments of ratification and then have effect as provided in Article 28. This Convention and exchange of notes shall remain in force indefinitely subject to the right of either party to terminate it by giving notice of termination on or before June 30 in any year after the year 1980 pursuant to the procedure found in Article 29.

The Department of the Treasury, with the cooperation of the Department of State, was primarily responsible for the negotiation of this Convention. It has the approval of both Departments.

Respectfully submitted,

C. W. Robinson,
Acting Secretary.

Enclosure: Convention and exchange of notes.

[84] APPENDIX B

Compensation of Government Employees and DOD Personnel, Committee Memo, March 14, 1978

The treaty provides that compensation paid by the government of either country to an individual for services rendered in the other, is generally taxable only in the first country. However, there are two exceptions when such compensation is taxable in the country where the services are rendered:

1. if the recipient is a resident national of the country;
2. if the recipient did not become a resident of that country solely for purposes of performing the services (e.g., they were British residents before they began to work for the U.S. Government).

Questions have arisen over the tax treatment of DOD employees in the U.K. Britain's Inland Revenue has released a press release in which it explicitly states that civilian personnel and U.S. Forces employed by DOD "will not be subject to U.K. tax."

[85] APPENDICES

[1x] 7 February 1978

DOUBLE TAXATION: UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

It has come to the attention of the Inland Revenue that there are misunderstandings about the effect of a provision of the revised Double Taxation Convention with the United States of America, which was published on 14 April 1976 as a draft Order in Council, has been approved by Parliament and awaits approval by the United States Senate. The provision concerned is paragraph 1 of Article 19 (Government Service) and the question is what effect it would have in the case of remuneration paid by the United States Government to individuals resident in the United Kingdom in respect of services rendered to the United States. In particular misunderstandings have occurred among members of the United States forces and civilian personnel employed by the United States Department of Defense who are serving in the United Kingdom.

Under the Article the remuneration would be taxable only by the United States except where the individual:

i. is a national of the United Kingdom or

ii. did not become a resident of the United Kingdom solely for the purpose of performing the services to the United States.

In cases where these exceptions apply the United Kingdom would have the sole right to tax remuneration.

The Inland Revenue wish to make clear that in the case of the second exception, individuals who are United States nationals (without also being United Kingdom nationals) would not in fact be subject to United Kingdom tax in respect of the remuneration by reason of the special exemption provisions in Section 367, Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970 or, if that Section does not apply, in Section 373 of that Act.

There is a proviso in Section 373, Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970, that the special exemption does not apply where the remuneration is paid by a department or agency of a foreign state which carries on any trade, business or other undertaking for the purposes of profit. Broadly similar provisos also apply under both the existing Convention and the proposed new Convention. Cases subject to these provisos would, however, be exceptional.

[86] APPENDIX D

Prepared Statement of Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Laurence N. Woodworth, July 19, 1977*

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee: I am very pleased to appear before your Committee today in support of three income tax conventions currently pending before the Senate — treaties with the United Kingdom, Korea, and the Philippines. Two other treaties, with Israel and Egypt, are pending before the Committee but are not being considered at this time.

As tax treaties have not been before this Committee for several years, I would like to take this opportunity to review briefly the purpose and direction of our tax treaty program.

We have income tax treaties currently in force with 23 countries, as well as with a number of former or present British, Belgian, and Dutch colonies to which the treaties with this countries have been extended. In addition to the treaties before you today, and the two others that are still pending, new or revised treaties with a number of additional countries are currently the subject of negotiations.

Besides this rather extensive network of income tax treaties, we also have treaties in force with 13 countries dealing with estate taxes and death duties, and in a few cases with gift taxes as well. Several other estate tax treaties are now being prepared for signature.

We view tax treaties as an important element in the international economic policy of the United States. One of our fundamental objectives is to minimize impediments to free international flows of capital and technology, and this objective is fostered by having the broadest possible network of income tax treaties.

Among the major impediments to freer capital and technology flows are the rules of national tax systems and their interaction with the systems of other countries. Tax treaties seek to eliminate, or at least mitigate the impact of, these impediments.

Treaties accomplish this minimization of impediments by a variety of means, the principal ones being the elimination or reduction of double taxation and the elimination, to the extent possible, of discriminatory tax rules which distinguish unreasonably between domestic and foreign investment.

* Secretary Woodworth's statement concerned all three treaties which were the subject of the hearings: the proposed treaties with the United Kingdom, with the Republic of Korea, and with the Philippines. That portion of the statement which solely deals with the proposed treaties with Korea and the Philippines has been deleted where indicated by an ellipsis (. . .).

At the same time, tax treaties also serve other policy objectives—for example, the prevention of tax avoidance and evasion, and the fostering of international cooperation between the tax authorities of Contracting States.

[87] You will see, I believe, as I discuss the treaties currently under consideration, how their individual provisions bring about the harmonization of tax systems with resultant benefits for the United States.

Each of the treaties before you was negotiated by the Treasury Department in close consultation with the Department of State.

In the case of the United Kingdom, the proposed treaty would replace the existing treaty which was signed in 1945 and amended by four subsequent protocols, the most recent of which was signed in 1966. In the other two cases, the proposed treaties would be the first to be entered into by the United States with the treaty partner.

In their general form and many of their specific provisions, these three treaties are alike. However, each of them contains special and in some cases unique provisions, which I will discuss in detail in what of necessity is a rather lengthy statement.

Tax systems differ from country to country as do bilateral economic relations. Modifications in our standard treaty format are necessary in order to accommodate these differences. Although we enter each negotiation with the goal of achieving all of our objectives, we must sometimes accept the benefits of a good treaty when a perfect treaty is simply not attainable. Therefore despite the fact that our treaties retain a common structure and policy thrust, they invariably differ from one to another.

Let me deal first with a general overview of the treaties before you. The one with Korea was negotiated in 1973 and negotiations with the Philippines were begun at about that time. These treaties therefore reflect the model treaty which the United States was then using as a basis for discussions. In 1975 we revised our model treaty to bring it more closely into conformity with the Model Income Tax Treaty of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD). The revised U.S. model was used as a basis for our discussions with the United Kingdom, and, as a result, you will observe differences in form between the United Kingdom treaty and the others. We do not believe that these formal differences represent major differences in substance.

There are also differences among the three treaties reflecting differences among these countries in levels of economic development. Although we do not offer tax sparing, we do modify some treaty provisions, without altering our basic policies, to reflect the development, revenue, and foreign exchange needs of developing countries. These modifications are to be found principally in the permanent establishment, business visitor, and investment income withholding provisions.

The need of developing countries for revenue often leads them to enact statutory rules which are so burdensome as to inhibit investments. We try by treaty to bring both the levels and scope of such taxes within internationally accepted norms. We recognize, however, that developing countries have legitimate revenue needs, and we therefore seek reduction in withholding tax rates only to levels which would make these taxes creditable in the U.S. rather than to levels which would result in transfers of revenue from the foreign treasury to the U.S. Treasury.

[88] The treaties before you today have many features in common. Each of them, for example, includes the standard treaty rule stating that a resident of one State will not be subject to tax on business profits in the other State unless these profits are attributable to a permanent establishment which the resident maintains in the other State. By limiting taxation to situations where there is more than just a casual economic contact, we can remove a major irritant to the free flow of international commerce. Though this general rule is standard, there are some differences among the treaties in the definitions both of permanent establishment and business profits.

Each of these treaties also provides that residents of one country who temporarily visit the other for business or educational purposes will not be subject to tax in the host country on income derived there unless they have a significant economic contact, with that country, in terms of time spent or income earned. As in the case of permanent establishment rules, the degree of contact that we require with developing countries tends to be somewhat less than that required in treaties with developed countries.

As with almost every tax treaty, each of the treaties under consideration establishes maximum levels of withholding tax on dividends, interest, and royalties paid from the source country to residents of the other country. The aim here is to make taxation a relatively neutral factor in investment decisions. Dividend, interest, and royalty provisions probably affect more taxpayers than any other treaty provisions.

It is United States treaty policy, reflected in the treaties under consideration today, that each Contracting State may tax its residents and nationals as if a treaty had not come into effect. The only exceptions to this rule relate to provisions which are clearly intended to limit the authority of a Contracting State to apply its internal tax law to its citizens and/or residents. For example, the treaty foreign tax credit provisions give assurance that, irrespective of changes in internal law, a Contracting State will permit credit for taxes properly imposed by the other Contracting State.

We view an income tax treaty as more than a resolution by the Contracting States of specific substantive problems. There must also be a commitment not to discriminate in tax matters, and to attempt to solve problems not directly dealt with by the substantive provisions of the treaty. All of our recent treaties include a prohibition against discrimination, and all provide for consultation and administrative assistance between the tax authorities of the Contracting States. The importance and value of these provisions are, I believe, being increasingly recognized by both taxpayers and tax administrators.

The Treasury has prepared technical explanations describing in detail each of the three treaties. I would like to submit these for the record and to turn, at this time, to the highlights of each individual treaty.

U.K. TREATY

The proposed treaty with the United Kingdom was signed on December 31, 1975. In early 1976, however, several technical problems came to light. Amendments to the text to deal with these problems were agreed to in April 1976, and the proposed treaty was restated to incorporate these amendments before it was submitted to the Senate.

[89] A protocol was signed in August 1976 making further amendments, largely technical in nature, dealing with corporations resident in both countries, the treatment of shipping income, and the calculation of the U.S. foreign tax credit on dividends received from U.K. corporations. A second protocol was signed on March 31, 1977, principally to deal with a problem arising from a provision in U.K. internal law relating to the determination of British domicile. In my statement I will discuss the restated treaty as amended by the two protocols.

This treaty is, I believe, quite significant. Our economic relations with the U.K. are close and extensive. U.S. direct investment in the U.K. at the end of 1975 totalled $14 billion and U.K. direct investment in the U.S. was $7 billion. During 1975 U.S. investors received over $1 billion in dividends, interest, branch profits, and royalties from this investment. U.S. payments to U.K. investors totalled over $350 million.

Moreover, this treaty is important in principle because it breaks new ground in several fundamental respects.

DIVIDENDS

The dividend provision of the U.K. treaty reflects a major concession by the British. To understand this provision, it is necessary to outline the United Kingdom system for taxing corporations and their shareholders.

In 1973 the U.K. introduced a partially integrated system under which a portion of the tax collected at the corporate level is treated—with respect to distributed profits—as having been paid on behalf of resident individual shareholders.

Under the U.K. system, U.K. corporations are subject to an initial corporate tax liability of 52 percent. When a dividend is paid, a tax called the Advance Corporation Tax (or ACT) is levied. This ACT is equal to 35/65 of the net dividend and it is credited against the corporation's regular year-end tax liability.

An individual U.K. resident shareholder pays tax not only on the dividends but also on the ACT paid with respect to the dividend. However, he may claim a credit against his own income tax liability for the ACT. If he is a "standard rate" taxpayer subject to a 35 percent rate, the credit will exactly offset his tax on the dividend income. If he is subject to tax below the standard rate, he will receive a refund of the excess of the ACT credit over his tax due. Thus, for a U.K. resident, the ACT is clearly a prepayment at the corporate level of the shareholder's tax.

When the shareholder is a U.K. corporation, the general rule is that the ACT is paid and the recipient corporation is not subject to tax on the dividend income. When that corporation, in turn, pays a dividend to domestic individual shareholders out of this dividend income, there is no further ACT to be paid and the ACT paid on the original dividend passes through and attaches to the second dividend. Alternatively, the first corporation may elect not to pay the ACT in the case of dividends to a related domestic company, but in this case the second corporation becomes liable for payment of the ACT when it pays that income out as a dividend to individual shareholders.

However, when the shareholder is a nonresident alien, the situation is quite different. British law provides that the ACT must be paid [90] upon any distribution, but there is no credit or refund allowed to the nonresident shareholder—corporate or individual.

This treatment discriminates against U.S. investors in the U.K., since for U.K. shareholders the effective underlying corporate tax rate with respect to distributed profits is just over 26 percent (after allowance of the ACT credit) while, in the absence of this treaty, for nonresident shareholders the rate remains at 52 percent. This discrimination is potentially of significant dollar magnitude, and must be viewed as a serious problem. We concluded that an income tax treaty is probably the only appropriate vehicle for mitigating the discrimination.

The new U.K. system is not a unique or isolated phenomenon, but rather is likely to be the prototype for European tax systems generally. A June 1975 draft directive of the Commission of the European Economic Community calls for adoption of similar integrated corporate/shareholder tax systems by all Common Market countries. Such a system has been in place in France for some time, and the new tax law in West Germany follows a similar approach. It is therefore, apparent to us that a precedent must be established early if we are to deal effectively in subsequent negotiations with other countries employing integrated systems. This fact may have led to Britain's initial reluctance to deal with integration-caused discrimination at the present time, while EEC policies with respect to this issue are still in a formative stage.

Under the rules of Article 10 (Dividends) and Article 23 (Elimination of Double Taxation) of the proposed treaty, the discrimination is substantially reduced. For U.S. portfolio shareholders (defined as any shareholder except a corporation which owns at least 10 percent of the voting stock of the paying corporation), the treaty provides the same credit as that available to a U.K. shareholder. It envisions that the ACT part of the U.K. corporate tax will be refunded directly to the U.S. shareholder and, for U.S. tax purposes, be treated as part of the shareholder's dividend income. The total dividend is then subject to the withholding rate provided for in the treaty for portfolio dividends: 15 percent. Thus, on a cash dividend declared of $65.00 the shareholder is entitled to a gross refund of $35.00. From the total dividend of $100.00, the U.K. withholds 15 percent or $15.00, and the U.S. shareholder receives $85.00. For U.S. tax purposes, the shareholder includes the full $100.00 in income and receives a foreign tax credit against his U.S. tax for the $15.00 withheld by the U.K.

For portfolio shareholders the proposed system is essentially the same as the rule which has been in effect in our treaty with France since 1970. It is also the same as the provisions which the U.K. has included in a number of their recent treaties. It is provided in the proposed U.K. treaty that this system will be followed as long as the ACT credit is allowed domestically in the U.K.

The proposed treaty, for the first time in any income tax treaty, also provides a rule for mitigating the integration-related discrimination against direct investors—i.e., those U.S. corporations which own at least 10 percent of the voting stock of a U.K. corporation. The treaty provides that when a dividend is paid by a U.K. corporation to a U.S. direct investor, a refund equal to one-half of the credit allowable to a U.K. domestic shareholder, i.e., one-half of the ACT, is paid to the U.S. investor. From the gross dividend (the cash dividend paid plus [91] the ACT refund) an amount equal to 5 percent is withheld by the U.K. On a cash dividend of $65.00 paid to a U.S. direct investor, the refund from Inland Revenue would be $17.50. The amount withheld on the total dividend of $82.50 would be $4.12. The net refund therefore would be $13.38, and the parent corporation would receive $78.38.

I would like to explain why the refund paid to direct investors differs from that paid to portfolio investors. The basic premise of an imputation system is that corporate and individual income taxes are integrated. As long as profits remain in corporate solution there is no reason to allow a credit. This is reflected in the U.K. internal tax system, under which the ACT credit is not allowed to corporate recipients of dividends. However, under that internal tax system, the credit passes through a U.K. parent corporation and is allowed to U.K. individual shareholders when the profits leave corporate solution. A U.S. shareholder investing in the U.K. through the intermediary of a U.S. parent corporation would enjoy none of the benefits provided for in the U.K. statute. Using a rule of thumb that about one-half of U.S. corporate profits are paid out in dividends, agreement was reached by treaty to extend one-half of the credit to U.S. direct investors on the assumption that this credit relates to that portion of the U.K. dividend which on a average will eventually be passed through to U.S. shareholders. This resolution provides a measure of fairness for U.S. investors and does no violence to the concept of an integrated system.

The table which follows illustrates the operation of these treaty provisions for both U.S. direct and portfolio investors.

[92] On U.S. source dividends paid to residents of the United Kingdom, there is, of course, no U.S. refund. In general, the U.S. withholding rate is reduced to 15 percent, except that when a dividend is paid to a direct investor in the U.K., the U.S. tax is limited to 5 percent. These are the same withholding rates applied by the U.K. If, while the treaty is in force, the U.K. should abandon its domestic dividend credit mechanism, the U.K. withholding rates will remain at 15 and 5 percent but the provisions dealing with the refund and credit would not be applicable.

UNITARY APPORTIONMENT TAXATION

One provision of the pending treaty with the United Kingdom—paragraph 4 of Article 9—has generated a great deal of controversy and has been the subject of some misunderstanding. That provision seeks, under certain restricted circumstances, to limit the application of unitary apportionment

DESCRIPTION OF THE UNITARY APPORTIONMENT SYSTEM

There are just a few states which employ the unitary apportionment system—principally California, Oregon, and Alaska—though the laws of certain other states provide for selective application of some elements of unitary apportionment. The specific details of the system may differ somewhat from state to state. Since California is the most significant of these states in terms of international business activities, my description today is based on the California system.

When a single enterprise is doing business both inside and outside California, income is apportioned to California under the traditional three-factor formula (payroll, property, and sales). However, when an enterprise doing business in California controls other corporations, is itself controlled by another corporation, or is related to other corporations by virtue of common ownership, and when the degree of common ownership or control is over 50 percent, California requires the controlled group to file a combined report of the group's worldwide income. A combined report is required regardless of whether the parent company or brother-sister companies do business in California, as long as the group constitutes a "unitary business" under California's rules. A unitary business generally exists when there is (1) a unity of ownership (common ownership; (2) a unity of operations as evidenced, for example, by central purchasing, advertising, accounting, and management, and (3) a unity of the use of a centralized executive force and general system of operation. Alternatively, a business will be treated as unitary if the operation of that part of the business carried on in the State is dependent on, or contributes to, the part which is carried on outside the state.

California tax authorities appear to construe the definition of a unitary business very broadly, so that related entities which appear to be independently engaged in very different kinds of activities are aggregated into a unitary business and must be included in a combined report to the tax authorities.

The combined report is, in effect, a consolidated return of the controlled group's worldwide income, although separate returns may be [93] made for each member of the group. California apportions income to the state on the basis of the proportions which the California assets, sales, and payroll bear to the worldwide assets, sales, and payroll of all the related companies.

In the context of multinational business operations, California does not limit its requirements of a combined report to enterprises which are California or United States controlled. For several years now, affiliated groups of corporations having a foreign parent and a California subsidiary have been required to file a combined report if the business has a "unitary" character.

BACKGROUND OF THE TREATY PROVISION

Over the past several years, a number of our treaty partners have raised the question of state application of unitary apportionment systems to multinational corporate groups based in their countries. They have made essentially two points. First, they note that our income tax treaties clearly provide that one Contracting State may not tax the business profits of an enterprise which is a resident of the other State unless those profits are attributable to a permanent establishment in the first Contracting State. They perceive the California system as taxing profits which are earned outside California and not attributable to a permanent establishment located in California. Our treaty partners recognize, of course, that this California practice does not violate the business profits provisions of our existing treaties, because existing treaty provisions apply only with respect to the Federal income tax. Nevertheless, they maintain that state unitary apportionment systems, as applied to foreign corporations, do violate the spirit of our agreements.

Secondly, foreign governments have noted the severe administrative burdens which unitary apportionment systems impose on their corporations. A substantial amount of financial and operating data from each affiliate (in effect the data necessary for a full tax return) must be included in the combined report of the group. When members of the group, and particularly the parent corporation, are located abroad, much of this information is either difficult or impossible for the taxpayer to obtain. Foreign parent corporations find it extremely burdensome to submit all of their books and records concerning all of their worldwide activities in a form satisfactory to the taxing state. This is especially true when only one of a large number of their affiliates does business in the state and the books and records are kept in different languages, different currencies, and according to different sets of accounting rules.

REASONS FOR ACCOUNTING PROVISIONS

There are several reasons, both substantive and administrative, why the Treasury believes that the application of the unitary system should be limited as it applies to foreign corporations.

Those states which employ the unitary system see it as a logical extension of the standard use of the three factor formula. It is also viewed as a means of dealing with efforts by groups of related corporations to manipulate income and expenses to the detriment of the state [94] treasury. This is a legitimate concern of both Federal and state governments. The treaty, however, deals explicitly with this issue. Paragraph 1 of Article 9 provides for the adjustment of accounts between related persons to reflect the income and expenses which would be recorded if the related persons were dealing at arm's-length.

And Paragraph 4 of Article 9 is very clear that it does not prevent Federal or state governments from making the arm's-length adjustments provided for in paragraph 1.

In this connection I would note that the arm's-length standard is the internationally accepted norm for apportioning income between related taxpayers. It is confusing to other countries and disconcerting to international relations when our states use a different standard. Furthermore, the use of a different method by one jurisdiction will often lead to double taxation. We recognize that the purpose of the unitary system is not to tax the income of the foreign corporation included in the group, but the effect, nevertheless, is often extra-territorial taxation.

Though the administrative resources available to state governments may not permit them to make the same kind of intensive transfer price investigations that the Federal tax authorities are able to make, individual states have access to materials developed by the Internal Revenue Service in its investigations of cases where related companies may not be pricing according to an arm's-length standard.

Moreover, the unitary apportionment system as a means for determining the state taxation base of a multinational corporation is highly imperfect and a poor substitute for the arm's-length standard. Implicit in the unitary system is the assumption that profit rates in different units of a corporate family, engaged in different activities and in different locations, are always the same. This is clearly not the case. And when it is not the case, the unitary system will misallocate income. Whenever profit rates are higher in foreign affiliates than in domestic activities, the unitary system allocates too much income to the domestic member or members of the group. The result is tantamount to taxation by a state government of the foreign income of a foreign corporation.

The misallocation of the tax base under the application of unitary apportionment to foreign corporations can occur for several reasons. For example, labor costs vary substantially among countries—very much more so than among regions in the U.S. If two affiliates, one in California and one in, say, Hong Kong, are engaged in essentially the same activities, the Hong Kong labor cost element in the formula will probably be lower than the California labor cost. A disproportionate amount of income will be apportioned to California. Changes in exchange rates can have a similar effect.

Some state governments have suggested that the treaty provision will result in a large revenue cost to unitary taxation states. If, in fact, there is a substantial revenue loss when an arm's-length pricing standard replaces unitary apportionment, this may be an indication that unitary apportionment does, in fact, result in unjustifiable extra-territorial taxation.

We also perceive a major problem in the extensive information required by the tax authorities applying unitary apportionment systems. If the necessary information is not provided by the taxpayer, the state [95] authorities reconstruct accounts on the basis of whatever information they can obtain from public sources, such as reports to shareholders. Tax liability calculated on the basis of such reconstructed accounts is, at best, arbitrary, and may very well be unfair. If the parent corporation operates in the taxing state, it is of course possible for the taxpayer to provide accurate information and avoid an arbitrary result. But if the taxpayer is a subsidiary of a foreign parent corporation, or stands in a brother-sister relationship to a foreign affiliate, the submission of accurate data may not be within the taxpayer's power.

The Administration is not alone in considering the issues raised by the unitary system. Legislation, known as the Jones Amendment, was proposed in the House during this past Congress, and would exclude all foreign corporations from states' unitary tax bases. The Jones Amendment was referred to a special task force of the Ways and Means Committee on foreign source income. The task force, chaired by Congressman Rostenkowski of Illinois, has recommended that "States be precluded from taking into account, under the unitary method or under any other method, the income of foreign affiliates of corporation doing business within the States until such time as that income is subject to Federal income tax."

DESCRIPTION OF THE U.K. TREATY PROVISION

The treaty will affect the tax jurisdictions of states to only a limited extent. It provides that a state, say California, in assessing the income of an enterprise doing business there, may not take into account any income or expenses of a related foreign company which is related to a U.K. enterprise. The state may, however, take into account income and expenses of any related U.S. companies, income of all branches of U.S. companies, and income of U.K. companies doing business in California.

The treaty rule will apply if the following conditions are met:

1. The enterprise doing business in California must be either a resident of the U.K. or be controlled, directly or indirectly, by a U.K. resident.
2. Where the U.K. resident is a corporation, such corporation must be neither controlled by a U.S. corporation nor by a corporation which is a resident of a third state.
3. No U.K. or third country enterprise which is related to a U.S. subsidiary doing business in California would be excluded from California unitary apportionment calculations under the treaty of that enterprise is controlled by the U.S. subsidiary.

A few examples may clarify how the rule would operate:

If a subsidiary of a U.K. corporation is doing business in California, and that U.K. parent corporation has subsidiaries in France and Germany, California would be prohibited from including in its unitary apportionment base the income or expense of the U.K. parent or of its subsidiary corporations in France or Germany.

However, if the U.K. corporation is itself controlled by, say, a New York corporation, or by a Dutch corporation, California may take into account the income and expense of the entire group—the U.K. corporation, the French and German subsidiaries, and the Dutch or New York parent.

[96] If the California subsidiary of the U.K. corporation has a subsidiary of its own in, say, Belgium, the U.K. parent and the French and German sister corporations may not be included in the unitary apportionment calculations by California, but the Belgian subsidiary, even though it is related to the U.K. corporation, may be taken into account.

OTHER PROVISIONS

There are several other issues raised by this treaty which I would like to touch on briefly.

U.S. CITIZENS RESIDENT IN U.K.

A combination of provisions in our existing treaty with the United Kingdom led the British courts to conclude, in what has come to be known as the Lady Strathalmond decision, that the United Kingdom was precluded from taxing U.K. residents who are U.S. citizens on dividend and interest income from U.S. sources. This wholly unintended benefit for U.S. citizens resident in the U.K. stood to cost the United Kingdom substantial amounts of revenue.

In addition, the Strathalmond decision introduced as asymmetry into the taxation rights granted by the treaty. U.S. residents who are U.K. nationals are subject to U.S. tax on their global income. However, U.K. residents who are U.S. citizens who receive investment income from the U.S. were not, by virtue of Strathalmond, subject to U.K. tax on their global income. The treaty before you today corrects this asymmetry.

U.K. WIVES PROBLEMS

The correction of the problem raised by the Strathalmond decision brought to light another issue, arising out of the U.K.'s internal law provisions for determining domicile. Although this is not a traditional tax treaty issue, the British agreed to deal with it, and this was the principal purpose of the second protocol, signed on March 31, 1977.

Under British law in effect prior to 1974, an individual who became a U.K. resident could easily retain a foreign domicile. The principal exception was that a married woman automatically acquired her husband's domicile. Thus, a woman who was a U.S. citizen and who could, under normal U.K. standards, be considered to have a foreign domicile would, if she was married to a U.K. domiciliary, automatically be considered as having a U.K. domicile. This rule was changed in 1974, but the change applied only for women married after 1973.

A British domiciliary is subject to higher U.K. taxes on foreign source income than a foreign domiciliary. Under the Strathalmond decision this distinction had no serious effects because a U.S. wife of a U.K. domiciliary would not be subject to U.K. tax on her U.S. source investment income even though she was domiciled in the U.K. Under the proposed treaty, however, she would be subject to U.K. tax, and the distinction between U.K. domiciliaries and non-domiciliaries becomes important. A number of women in this position complained that the U.K. rule on domicile discriminated against women and that the proposed treaty condoned this discrimination.

[97] The discrimination is eliminated now by a provision that, for purposes of determining domicile, the marriage of a woman who is a national of the United States shall be treated as having taken place on 1 January 1974. Under this provision, she would be able, if the facts warrant, to establish a non-British domicile independent of her husband's domicile.

DUAL-RESIDENCE COMPANIES

In general, our treaties seek to assign a unique residence, in one or the other country, to all persons subject to the treaty. In the proposed treaty with the United Kingdom we were not able to agree on such a rule for corporations which each country considers resident of that country. Under British law a corporation is resident where it is managed and controlled. Under U.S. law a corporation is resident where it is incorporated. A corporation organized in the United States but managed and controlled in the United Kingdom would, therefore, be a dual resident. Neither side was willing to make its test of residence subsidiary to the other, and an entity which has dual residence under the treaty could combine the benefits of residence in both countries so as to receive unjustified advantage. We agree, therefore, that with the exception of certain provisions, dual resident corporations would be denied the benefits of the treaty. While this appears to be a harsh result, we must bear in mind that, given the nature of the two tests of residence, a dual resident corporation may extract itself from the situation.

PETROLEUM REVENUE TAX

The British recently introduced a tax, called the Petroleum Revenue Tax (PRT), on petroleum production activities on its continental shelf. The British asked that we specifically cover this tax in the treaty so that U.S. companies will be assured of a foreign tax credit in the United States for the PRT. Article 2(2)(b) (Taxes Covered) specifies that the PRT is included in taxes covered. Article 23 (Elimination of Double Taxation) notes in paragraph (1)(a) that the taxes covered in Article 2(2)(b) are to be treated as income taxes for purposes of the U.S. foreign tax credit.

The special limitations in section 907 of the Internal Revenue Code relating to foreign oil and gas income apply with respect to the PRT.

ENTERTAINERS

Article 17 (Artistes and Athletes) provides, in paragraph 1, that an entertainer or athlete may be taxed by the Contracting State in which his services are performed unless the remuneration for those services, including expenses reimbursed to him or borne on his behalf, does not exceed $15,000 in the year concerned.

Paragraph 2 of Article 17 is designed to deal with an entertainer or athlete arranging for a part or all of the income for his services to be paid to another person, including a corporation or trust, so as to avoid tax in the host country. If that other person is a foreign corporation which does not have a permanent establishment in the host country, the income would, under normal treaty rules, be completely free of tax in the host country. Paragraph 2 prevents this abuse of the treaty by [98] providing that when the income from an entertainer's or an athlete's activities does not accrue directly to him, but to another person, that person will be subject to tax despite the limitations which would otherwise be applicable under the business profits or personal services articles of the treaty.

If the entertainer does not participate in any way in the profits earned by the other person, such as by the receipt of deferred remuneration, dividends, or partnership distributions, then the provisions of paragraph 2 will not apply.

Article 17 reflects the view, widely held among both developed and developing nations, that the taxation of entertainers and athletes presents special problems. Although the Treasury does not agree that such persons are wholly different from others performing personal services, we do recognize that the cricumstances under which their income is earned can often be extraordinary: it is not uncommon, for example, for entertainers and athletes to earn large sums in a very brief period of time spent in the country of source.

Our views on this issue, and in specific regard to Article 17, are set forth in detail in a letter dated March 1, 1977 which I addressed to Senator Javits. I would like to submit this letter for the record at this time.

INTEREST AND ROYALTIES

In addition to the maximum withholding rates prescribed in Article 10 for dividends, which I have already described, Articles 11 and 12 of the treaty provide for exemption from withholding in the source country on interest and royalties, respectively, paid to resident of the other Contracting State.

CONCLUSION

I believe that the addition of the two new treaties—with Korea and the Philippines—to our growing network of income tax treaties and the modernization of our treaty with the United Kingdom, to permit it to better serve our current needs, will strengthen our economic relations with these three countries.

The United Kingdom is one of our major trading partners with whom we have shared close economic ties for many years. We are pleased to have this opportunity to update and revitalize our tax treaty arrangements.

The United States today has only two treaties in force with developing countries—treaties with Pakistan and Trinidad and Tobago. We attach importance, therefore, to the expansion of our treaty network to include Korea and the Philippines.

This Committee has the opportunity now, by approving these three treaties, to make a clear and strong statement in support of the policies which they reflect—as well as our general policy of seeking a broadening network of income tax treaties.

I urge your approval of these three treaties.

THIRD PROTOCOL TO THE 1975 INCOME TAX CONVENTION WITH THE UNITED KINGDOM OF GREAT BRITAIN AND NORTHERN IRELAND, AS AMENDED

JUNE 15, 1979

Mr. CHURCH, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, submitted the following report to accompany Ex. Q, 96th Cong., 1st sess.

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred the Third Protocol to the 1975 Tax Treaty with the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland [1] for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income and capital gains (Executive Q) (referred to as the proposed protocol), having considered the same, reports favorably thereon without reservation and recommends that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification thereof.

I. PURPOSE

The proposed third protocol to the proposed income tax treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom deals with issues which arose during the previous consideration of the treaty by the United States Senate and with other matters raised during discussion of those issues between the United States and the United Kingdom.

[2] II. BACKGROUND

The proposed protocol was signed on March 15, 1979. The protocol was transmitted to the Senate on April 12, 1979.

The proposed protocol amends the pending tax treaty, as amended by an Exchange of Notes and two Protocols, which was considered by the Foreign Relations Committee and the Senate during the Ninety-Fifth Congress. The Foreign Relations Committee reported the treaty favorably on April 25, 1978, without reservation.

Senator Church had proposed in committee a reservation which would have had the effect of deleting from the proposed treaty a provision (Article 9(4)) to the extent that it would have placed limitations on the worldwide combination/unitary method of apportionment used by several states of the United States to determine the taxable income of British multinational corporations subject to tax by those states. The reservation was defeated in committee by a vote of 5 yeas, 10 nays. Senator Church again proposed the reservation on the Senate floor, where it lost by a vote of 34 yeas, 44 nays. However, on June 23, 1978, the Senate by a vote of 49 yeas, 32 nays, failed to concur in the proposed treaty (containing the state taxation provision) by the required two-thirds vote. On June 27, 1978, after the Treasury Department had announced that it would accept the treaty with the Church reservation, the Senate reconsidered the treaty and gave its advice and consent to ratification of the treaty, subject to the Church reservation, by a vote of 82 yeas, 5 nays.

In the course of the Senate's consideration of the pending treaty, a second reservation was introduced by Senator Kennedy to limit a treaty provision (Article 23(1)(a)) which would make the U.K. Petroleum Revenue Tax (PRT) eligible for the U.S. foreign tax credit. This reservation was withdrawn because the United Kingdom and the Treasury Department agreed to go forward with discussions to include the provisions of the reservation in a protocol.

Both of these issues are among those dealt with in the proposed protocol.

[3] III. SUMMARY OF PROTOCOL

The proposed protocol contains the following modifications to the proposed tax treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom.

---

(1) State taxation.—In conformity with the Church reservation, the protocol makes Article 9(4) of the proposed treaty, which restricts the use of the worldwide combination/unitary method of apportioning income, inapplicable to states or local governments. Its provisions would continue to apply, however, to taxation at the national level by the United States and United Kingdom governments.

(2) U.K. Petroleum Revenue Tax (PRT).—In conformity with the proposed Kennedy reservation, the proposed protocol limits the amount of the British PRT which is allowable under the treaty as a tax credit so that the PRT imposed on extraction income from U.K. sources may only offset U.S. tax on that income. In addition, the PRT which is imposed on certain oil transportation, treatment, and storage income may only offset U.S. tax on that income. Under the proposed treaty, the PRT might also have been used to offset U.S. tax on extraction income from operations in other foreign countries.

(3) Offshore drilling operations.—Under the proposed protocol, each country will be allowed to tax under its domestic laws persons engaged in activities in connection with the exploration for or exploitation of, for more than 30 days in a 12-month period, seabed mineral resources situated in that country. This provision will primarily affect U.S. independent drilling contractors who are using movable drilling rigs to undertake exploratory drilling for oil in the U.K. sector of the North Sea and other service companies carrying on ancillary services in connection with drilling.

(4) U.S. insurance excise tax.—The proposed protocol expressly provides that premiums paid to British insurers will not be subject to the U.S. insurance excise tax even if the British insurers have a U.S. permanent establishment.

(5) Dividends from dual-resident corporations.—The protocol allows the United States to impose its withholding tax at source on dividends paid by corporations which, under the treaty, are residents of both the United Kingdom and the United States. This provision allows the United States to continue to impose its withholding taxes on dividends paid to nonresident aliens and foreign corporations by a corporation organized under U.S. law, even if that corporation is managed, and therefore resident, in the United Kingdom.

(6) Exemption for government employees.—The proposed protocol eliminates a provision of the proposed treaty which would have allowed the United Kingdom to tax the compensation of a U.S. citizen resident in the United Kingdom who performed services in that country for the U.S. Government if that individual did not become a U.K. resident solely to perform the services.

(7) Override of statutes of limitations.—The proposed protocol overrides U.S. and U.K. statutes of limitations to allow refunds to be made on the basis of the treaty provisions if claims are made within 3 years after the end of the year in which the treaty enters into force.

[4] IV. DATE OF ENTRY INTO FORCE AND TERMINATION

Entry into force

The proposed protocol will enter into force on the thirty-first day following the date on which the instruments of ratification are exchanged. Once in force, the proposed protocol generally applies retroactively, in accordance with Article 28 (Entry into force) of the proposed treaty. However, the provisions of Article VI (Offshore activities) of the protocol apply only after the protocol has entered into force.

Termination

The protocol will remain in force as long as the proposed treaty remains in force.

V. COMMITTEE ACTION

The Committee on Foreign Relations held public hearings on the proposed protocol and other tax treaties on June 6, 1979. The Committee considered the proposed protocol on June 12, 1979 and ordered it favorably reported by a vote of 13 yeas, no nays, with the recommendation that the Senate give its advice and consent to ratification of the treaty.

VI. BUDGET IMPACT

The Committee estimates that the effect of the proposed treaty on budget receipts will be negligible.

In accordance with the objectives of section 403 of the Budget Act, the Committee advises that the Director of the Congressional Budget Office has examined the Committee's budget estimate and agrees that the effect on budget receipts will be negligible. In keeping with section 308(a) of the Budget Act, and after consultation with the Director of the Congressional Budget Office, the Committee states that the treaty does not provide any new budget authority or any new or increased tax expenditures.

[5] VII. EXPLANATION OF PROTOCOL PROVISIONS

A comprehensive article-by-article explanation of the proposed protocol to the proposed income tax treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom is set forth below.

Article 1. Use of worldwide combination/unitary method of apportionment

In conformity with the Church reservation, the proposed protocol makes Article 9(4) of the proposed treaty, which restricts the use of the worldwide combination/unitary method of apportioning income, inapplicable to state or local governments. The provisions of Article 9(4) would continue to apply, however, to the United States and United Kingdom governments.

Under the protocol, political subdivisions and local authorities of either country are free to use formula methods to apportion income, deductions and other items among related enterprises in determining income subject to their taxes, so long as such methods do not violate the proposed treaty's nondiscrimination provisions (Article 24).

Article 9(4) of the proposed treaty would have limited the methods by which the United States, the United Kingdom, and political subdivisions and local authorities of each country could tax enterprises of the other country (or enterprises which are directly or indirectly controlled by enterprises of the other country). (This provision is not found in other U.S. tax treaties.) The proposed treaty would have provided that, in determining the tax liability of such an enterprise doing business within their respective jurisdictions, the United States, the United Kingdom and their political subdivisions and local authorities could not take into account the income, deductions, receipts or outgoings of a related enterprise of the other country, or of any third country. This provision of the proposed treaty was intended to apply to those states of the United States (principally California, Oregon, and Alaska) which, in determining the amount of income of a business operating within the state which is to be apportioned to that state for income tax purposes, require combined reporting of all related business operations (including related business operations of affiliated U.S. and foreign corporations, whether or not doing business within the state). The national governments of the United Kingdom and the United States do not apportion income between jurisdictions under this method but rather allocate income between related enterprises under arm's-length principles. In addition, the political subdivisions and local authorities of the United Kingdom do not impose income taxes.

The proposed protocol modifies this provision by eliminating its applicability to political subdivisions and local authorities of the United States and the United Kingdom. This is in conformity with the reservation proposed by Senator Church and adopted by the [6] Senate as part of its resolution of ratification of the proposed treaty. The provision would, however, continue to apply to the two national governments. (Conforming changes are made in Article 2 of the proposed treaty (Taxes covered) to reflect this narrowed scope.)

Moreover, the proposed treaty, like most other U.S. tax treaties, contains a provision (Article 9(1)) similar to that contained in the Internal Revenue Code (sec. 482) which recognizes the right of each country to make an allocation of income in the case of transactions between related persons, if an allocation is necessary to reflect the conditions and arrangements which would have been made between unrelated persons. The limitation in Article 9(4) applies only to cases where an allocation is made without regard to any application of the arm's-length standard. Of course, both countries may apply apportionment formulas, including formulas that take into account attributes of related entities, as a method of achieving an arm's-length price for a transaction between related entities. Moreover, apportionment formulas may be used as a method of apportioning income of related entities to the extent that it is established that they are not dealing on an arm's-length basis. The proposed treaty does not affect U.S. tax rules for allocating and apportioning income, deductions, and other items among related enterprises (Code sec. 482), nor is it applicable to the U.S. tax rules concerning the source of income and the deductions attributable thereto (Treas. Reg. § 1.861-8).

During last year's debate both in the Foreign Relations Committee and on the Senate floor, opponents of Article 9(4) argued that any prohibition of the right of states to use worldwide combination under the unitary tax system should be addressed legislatively rather than through the treaty process. Even some supporters of Article 9(4), while not questioning the propriety of the Article, indicated their preference for Congressional consideration through the legislative process of the issue. The Foreign Relations Committee notes that Section 303 of S. 983, the Interstate Taxation bill introduced by Senator Mathias, would accomplish for all nations what Article 9(4) of the U.S.-U.K. Tax Treaty sought to accomplish for the U.K.

The Committee urges the tax-writing Committees of the Congress—the Finance and the Ways and Means Committees—to hold hearings in the very near future on S. 983 in order to permit all sides of the issue to have their views known for the record. In addition, such legislation will give the Congress, which has the responsibility to resolve on the federal level inconsistent state taxation policies, the opportunity to take a position on the merits of the issue.

The Committee also notes both Senator Mathias' statement before the Committee in support of the Treaty and the Third Protocol and his view that the British "Parliament will ratify the U.S.-U.K. Treaty only if they perceive that we are serious about making progress on the Interstate Taxation bill. . ." The Committee wishes to make clear that it considers expeditious treatment of the Treaty by both the U.S. Senate and the U.K. Parliament to be critical in order to permit the benefits of the Treaty to flow to both sides.

Article 11. Excise tax on premiums paid to foreign insurers

The proposed protocol amends the proposed treaty so that it expressly provides that insurance premiums paid to a British insurer [7] will not be subject to the U.S. insurance excise tax even if it has a U.S. permanent establishment. The Treasury Department intended this to be a clarification of the provision of the proposed treaty which generally exempts U.K. insurance companies from the U.S. insurance excise tax.

Under the Code, premiums from insuring U.S. risks which are received by a foreign insurer having no U.S. trade or business are not subject to U.S. income tax but are subject to the U.S. insurance excise tax (secs. 4371-4374). However, the proposed treaty includes the insurance excise tax among the taxes covered and thus, under the business profits article and Article 22 (Other income), income of a British enterprise derived from the insurance of U.S. risks is subject neither to U.S. income tax nor to the insurance excise tax if that insurance income is not attributable to a U.S. permanent establishment maintained by the British insurer.

Those U.K. insurers which continue to maintain a U.S. permanent establishment after the proposed treaty enters into force will remain subject to the U.S. income tax on their net U.S. insurance income attributable to the permanent establishment. However, under the proposed protocol, the U.S. excise tax is not to be imposed on insurance or reinsurance premiums which are the receipts of a business of insurance carried on by a U.K. enterprise even if that business is carried on through a U.S. permanent establishment.

The statutory rules governing the taxation of foreign insurance companies insuring U.S. casualty risks have been modified through interpretations of the nondiscrimination provisions of the existing treaty contained in certain closing agreements which have been entered into between the IRS and a number of British insurers.[1] The closing agreements are intended to provide relief in certain limited situations involving casualty insurance where there is the potential liability for both income tax and excise tax because the foreign insurer is subject to the income tax (because it has a U.S. trade or business), but the premium paid is not exempt from the excise tax (because the insurer is not licensed by a state to write insurance). It is understood that U.K. insurers agree in the closing agreements to subject themselves to the U.S. income tax by treating their U.S. operations (frequently an unrelated agent) as a permanent establishment, and the IRS agrees to waive the excise tax with respect to those premiums effectively connected with the U.S. trade or business under the nondiscrimination clause of the present treaty.

The pending treaty, in a departure from the existing tax treaty and other existing U.S. tax treaties, covers the insurance excise tax.[2] As a result, British insurers which do not have U.S. permanent establishments are exempt on income from insuring U.S. risks from the U.S. insurance excise tax as well as the U.S. income tax. It had been assumed that, as a result of this exemption in the proposed treaty for [8] British insurers which did not have U.S. permanent establishments, all British insurers would be exempt from the excise tax because it had been assumed that those others which did have U.S. permanent establishments would continue to be exempt from the excise tax (but not the income tax) under the nondiscrimination clause. (It would no longer be necessary to enter into a closing agreement and agree to be subject to the U.S. income tax in lieu of the excise tax because the exemption from the excise tax would be available under the proposed treaty even if the British insurer had no U.S. permanent establishment.) However, questions have been raised as to whether the imposition of the excise tax on British insurance companies with U.S. permanent establishments does in fact constitute discrimination under the treaty and whether the exemption, which had been provided in the closing agreements pursuant to the nondiscrimination clause to the British insurers, was appropriate. In order to eliminate this doubt as to whether British insurers with U.S. permanent establishments are in fact entitled to an exemption from the insurance excise tax, the proposed protocol states expressly that British insurers are exempt from the U.S. insurance excise tax whether or not they have a U.S. permanent establishment.

The insurance excise tax will continue to be collected in situations where a U.K. enterprise with a U.S. trade or business reinsures a policy it has written on a U.S. risk with a foreign reinsurer other than a U.S. resident or a resident of a country which has a similar provision in its treaty with the U.S. (such as is provided in the proposed protocol to the U.S.-France income tax treaty and in the proposed U.S.-Hungary income tax treaty). The tax is imposed on the U.K. insurer which, in this situation, is viewed as a U.S. resident person paying a premium to a foreign insurer (Code sec. 4372(d)). The excise tax will apply to this reinsurance even where the U.K. insurance company has a U.S. trade or business but no U.S. permanent establishment and will not be subject to U.S. income tax on the net income it derives on the portion of the risk it retains. However, no U.S. excise tax will be collected if the U.K. insurer has no U.S. trade or business, regardless of whether or not it reinsures the risk.

Article III. Dividends

The proposed protocol amends the proposed treaty so that it would not prevent the United States from applying its withholding tax on dividends paid by U.S. corporations to foreign shareholders in those situations where the U.S. corporation is also considered to be a resident of the U.K. for purposes of the treaty (i.e., dual residence). This modification corrects a drafting oversight in the proposed treaty.

Under the proposed treaty, a corporation which is organized under U.S. law, but whose business is managed and controlled in the United Kingdom, is a "resident" of both the United States and the United Kingdom. Under U.S. domestic law, the United States generally imposes a withholding tax on dividends paid by a U.S. corporation to nonresident aliens and foreign corporations unless the dividends are effectively connected with a U.S. trade or business of the recipient or less than 20 percent of the U.S. corporation's gross income is from [9] U.S. sources. The provisions of the proposed treaty as approved by the Senate, however, would generally have prevented the imposition of this withholding tax if the U.S. corporation was managed in the U.K. and thus qualified as a U.K. resident.

This would have resulted because, as in the case of most U.S. tax treaties and the OECD model tax treaty, the proposed treaty contains a general limitation on the taxation by one country of dividends paid by corporations which are residents of the other country. Under this provision, the United States could not impose any tax on dividends paid by a corporation which was a "resident" of the U.K. (even if organized under U.S. law) except where the dividends were paid to a resident or citizen of the United States or where the dividends were effectively connected with a permanent establishment or fixed base of the recipient which was situated in the United States. This exemption from tax applied even if the dividends consisted wholly or partly of profits or income arising in the United States.

[1] A similar but less detailed closing agreement with a German insurer is set forth in Letter Ruling 7846060 (Aug. 18, 1979).

[2] The pending income tax treaty with Hungary and the pending protocol to the existing income tax treaty with France both cover the excise tax, and it is covered by the U.S. model income tax treaty. In the case of the pending French protocol, however, the exemption only applies to the extent that the risk is retained by insurers who would also be eligible for the exemption under one of the treaties: to the extent it is reinsured with an insurer not so eligible, the exemption under the pending French protocol does not apply.

The proposed protocol prevents this result by making the treaty provision inapplicable to "dual status" corporations. Accordingly, dividends paid by these corporations would continue to be subject to withholding taxes to the extent provided by U.S. domestic law, except as otherwise provided in applicable treaties.

Article IV. Government service

The proposed protocol eliminates a rule in the proposed treaty which would have allowed the U.K. to tax the compensation of certain U.K. residents working for the U.S. government who did not become U.K. residents solely for the purpose of performing those services. In general, neither the United States nor the United Kingdom currently taxes income of employees of the other country's government. However, substantial concern over the treaty provision was voiced to the Foreign Relations Committee by employees of the U.S. Defense Department in the United Kingdom. The protocol will amend the treaty to allay this concern.

Under the proposed treaty as approved by the Senate, compensation, other than a pension, paid by the government of either country to an individual for services rendered to that country is generally taxable only in that country. However, such compensation is taxable in the country in which the services are being performed if the recipient (i) is a resident and national of that country or (ii) did not become a resident solely for the purpose of performing the services. (The provision does not apply to compensation received for services performed in connection with a business carried on by or on behalf of one of the countries or to services performed for political subdivisions and local authorities.) The provision generally follows the OECD and U.S. model tax treaties.

The proposed protocol changes this rule so that compensation for services performed for the government of one country may be taxed by the other country only if performed by a resident of the second country who is also a national of that country. The purpose for which he became a resident is no longer relevant. This is similar to the rule in the existing treaty between the United States and the United Kingdom.

[10] Article V. Petroleum Revenue Tax

The proposed protocol limits the extent to which the United States is required under the proposed treaty to allow a foreign tax credit for the U.K. Petroleum Revenue Tax (PRT). The pending treaty as approved by the Senate would in general have required the PRT to be treated as a creditable income tax, subject to the limitations on the foreign tax credit of U.S. statutory law. The proposed protocol would in general prevent excess PRT from offsetting U.S. tax on oil income from other countries.

The proposed treaty as approved by the Senate contains the general rule contained in many U.S. tax treaties under which the United States agrees that it will continue to allow its U.S. citizens and residents to claim a foreign tax credit (Code secs. 901 and 902) against the U.S. tax for the appropriate amount of income taxes paid to the United Kingdom. The credit (direct or indirect) allowed under the proposed treaty is subject to the limitations and in accordance with the provisions of U.S. law (as it may be amended from time to time without changing the general principle of allowing a foreign tax credit) applicable to the year in question.

The proposed treaty also provides that the PRT is to be treated as a creditable income tax for U.S. foreign tax credit purposes. It is the position of the Internal Revenue Service that the PRT is not an income tax in the United States sense and that therefore it would not be eligible for the U.S. foreign tax credit in the absence of the proposed treaty. In the view of the IRS, the PRT is more in the nature of a production or severance tax. Rev. 78-424, 1978-2 C.B. 197.

The PRT presently is imposed at a 45-percent rate on assessable profits from oil and gas extraction activities in the U.K. (including the North Sea) on a field-by-field basis. It is in addition to, and separate from, the regular U.K. corporate tax (and a 12.5-percent royalty payable on North Sea production). The amount of PRT paid is allowed as a deduction for purposes of computing the regular U.K. corporate income tax. Operating and capital losses from nonextraction activities are not allowed as deductions in computing the PRT. In addition, no deduction is allowed for interest or other financing costs. However, a special additional deduction based on the amount of capital investment is provided to compensate for the disallowance of interest expenses in computing profits for purposes of the PRT. The aggregate amount payable to the U.K. Government in taxes and royalties on oil and gas extraction income is roughly 60 to 70 percent.

During the Senate's consideration of the proposed treaty, Senator Kennedy introduced a reservation which would have allowed a credit for the PRT only to the extent that U.S. tax attributable to U.K. oil and gas extraction income exceeded other U.K. taxes (such as the regular U.K. corporate income tax) on that income.[3] The intent of [11] this reservation was to prevent U.S. oil companies from using the PRT as a credit against their U.S. tax liability on extraction income from other countries, such as OPEC nations. Senator Kennedy withdrew the reservation on the basis of assurances from the Treasury Department and the British Government that the issue would be dealt with in a protocol.[4] [3] The text of the reservation, which was reprinted at 124 Cong. Rec. S9559 (daily ed. June 27, 1978), was as follows:

"Before the period at the end of the resolution of ratification insert a comma and the following: 'subject to the reservation that, for purposes of the tax laws of the United States, the United States shall allow a credit against tax for any Petroleum Revenue Tax attributable to oil and gas extraction income from sources within the United Kingdom and paid to the United Kingdom by any resident or national of the United States, or by any United States corporation owning at least 10 percent of the voting stock of a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom, only to the extent that the United States tax attributable to such income for which such resident or national or such corporation is otherwise liable exceeds any credit allowable by the United States for other United Kingdom tax on such income'."

The proposed protocol incorporates the substance of the Kennedy reservation and also applies a number of rules which are similar to provisions of U.S. domestic law limiting the foreign tax credit for foreign oil and gas income (Code sec. 907). To determine the extent to which a credit for the PRT will be allowed, the taxpayer first multiplies its U.K. income from the extraction of minerals from oil and gas wells for the taxable year by the maximum statutory U.S. tax rate applicable to a corporation (currently 46 percent). Any credits for the PRT for the taxable year cannot exceed the difference (if any) between this product and other U.K. tax (such as the regular U.K. corporate tax) on that income.

If less than the full amount of the PRT is creditable under this provision, the protocol allows a 2-percent limited carryback or carryover of the excess. This is similar to provisions of U.S. law.

In addition to the limits on creditability of the PRT imposed with respect to the taxpayer's U.K. oil and gas extraction income, the protocol imposes comparable limitations on the creditability of the PRT on income from the initial transportation, initial treatment and initial storage of minerals from oil and gas wells in the U.K. This concept is similar to the limitations of U.S. domestic law relating to the foreign tax credit on foreign oil related income. It applies to a narrower group of activities, however, because the PRT is not imposed on other oil-related activities. Moreover, gains from the sale or exchange of assets used in connection with these activities is not included because the PRT is not imposed on those gains.

Article V of the proposed protocol will not reduce the foreign tax credit which may be claimed for the PRT under U.S. statutory law if it is ultimately held that the PRT is a creditable income tax under that law. Article V of the protocol only imposes a limitation on the amount of the PRT which qualifies as a creditable foreign tax, as opposed to a royalty or non-creditable tax, if the taxpayer must resort to the provisions of the proposed treaty to obtain the credit. However, the taxpayer does not avoid the limitations of U.S. statutory law by claiming the PRT under the treaty. Under paragraph (1) of Article 23 of the proposed treaty, the other limitations on creditability imposed by U.S. domestic law (in particular, those in Code secs. 904 and 907), as they are now in force or as they may be changed without changing the [12] general principle of the foreign tax credit, will continue to apply in determining the amount of the foreign tax credit the taxpayer will ultimately receive as a result of payment of the PRT and other foreign taxes.

Article VI. Offshore activities

The proposed protocol adds a new Article 27A to the proposed treaty covering offshore activities. This provision is intended to deal primarily with the activities of certain U.S. independent drilling contractors in the U.K. sector of the North Sea. As a practical matter, this provision makes it clear that the proposed treaty does not prevent the United Kingdom from taxing the activities of these drilling contractors under its domestic laws. Although the contractors would be allowed a credit against U.S. tax liability for U.K. income taxes, the credit may be less than the full U.K. tax paid. Also, the benefits to the drilling contractors of the investment tax credit may be reduced. While the protocol provisions were added primarily to deal with activities of U.S. persons in the North Sea, they also make it clear that British activities in connection with activities on the U.S. continental shelf are subject to U.S. tax.

Under the treaty, the terms "United Kingdom" and "United States" are defined to include the seabed and subsoil and their natural resources over which the countries exercise rights. Oil companies have entered into contracts with U.S. drilling companies and service and supply companies with respect to mineral exploration and exploitation in the North Sea through the use of movable drilling rigs. It is understood that a number of these drilling and service companies intended to take the position that their income was not subject to U.K. tax because of the absence of a permanent establishment which would allow the U.K. to tax them under the business profits article (Article 7) of the proposed treaty. The term "permanent establishment" includes "a building or construction or installation project which exists for more than 12 months" (Article 5(2)(f)), but it is not clear whether this language would encompass these drilling rigs. The activities of these independent drilling contractors with respect to any one project generally have been completed in less than 12 months. In addition, individuals who were performing independent services in the North Sea who could establish that they did not themselves have a fixed base in the U.K., might under certain circumstances be exempt from U.K. tax on their income from the performance of services (Article 14). It is also understood that some U.S. independent drilling contractors intended to take the position that their activities constituted the operation of ships which, under certain circumstances, would be taxable only in the U.S. under Article 8 (Shipping and air transport) of the proposed treaty.

The proposed protocol provides that a person who is a resident of one country and carries on activities for more than 30 days in a year in the other country in connection with the exploration or exploitation of the seabed and sub-soil and their natural resources situated in that other country is deemed to be carrying on in respect of those activities a business in that other country through a permanent establishment or fixed base situated therein. This rule would [13] permit this income, whether business profits or income from independent personal services, to be taxed by the other country under its domestic laws. (The treaty and protocol do not themselves impose a tax.) At present the United Kingdom would not, under its domestic law, tax the North Sea income of the U.S. drilling companies.

[4] The assurances were contained in a letter from the Treasury Department to Senator Pell, reprinted id., the text of which was as follows:

"The Treasury very recently discussed with the British Senator Kennedy's suggestion that the creditability of the U.K. Petroleum Revenue Tax (PRT) under the proposed income tax treaty be limited to income from the United Kingdom.

In those discussions, the British indicated that, unlike the provisions of Article 9(4) in the treaty, they have little concern over the specific mechanics which the United States applies to the PRT credit. Thus, the British have agreed to go forward with discussions of a protocol to the proposed treaty which will accomplish the objective suggested by Senator Kennedy.

The Treasury also stands ready to go forward with such a protocol and we hope that in this manner the proposed treaty can be ratified in its present form.

Sincerely,

DONALD C. LUBICK,
Assistant Secretary-Designate for Tax Policy.

This provision does not apply where the activities are carried on for a period not exceeding 30 days in aggregate in any 12-month period. However, for purposes of this 30-day threshold, activities carried on by an enterprise related to another enterprise are to be regarded as carried on by the enterprise to which it is related if the activities in question are substantially the same as those carried on by the other enterprise.

The proposed protocol also provides that the provisions of Article 8 (Shipping and air transport) of the proposed treaty do not apply to a drilling rig or any vessel the principal function of which is the performance of activities other than the transportation of goods or passengers.

Unlike the other provisions of the proposed protocol, this provision takes effect only after the protocol enters into force and is not retroactive.

Article VII. Statutes of limitations

Certain provisions of the proposed treaty are retroactive as far back as 1973. The statute of limitations (under the domestic laws of the United States and the United Kingdom) may already have run on some of the years involved. For example, a claim for refund of U.S. tax, whether based on a treaty benefit or otherwise, must ordinarily be made within 3 years after a return for the year in question is filed. The proposed protocol overrides these domestic law provisions to allow refunds to be made on the basis of the treaty provisions if claims are made within 3 years after the end of the year in which the treaty enters into force. This rule does not open the statute of limitations for other items on the return except insofar as they are affected, directly or indirectly, by application of the provisions of the treaty.

Article VIII. Entry into force

The proposed protocol will enter into force on the thirty-first day following the date on which the instruments of ratification are exchanged. Once in force, the proposed protocol generally applies retroactively, in accordance with Article 28 (Entry into force) of the proposed treaty. For example, Article III of the protocol will generally apply to dividends paid on or after January 1, 1975. However, the provisions of Article VI (Offshore activities) of the protocol apply only after the protocol has entered into force.

RESOLUTION OF RATIFICATION

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the 1979 Tax Protocol with the United Kingdom, done at London on March 15, 1979 (Ex. Q, Ninety-sixth Congress, first session).

[21] LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL

THE WHITE HOUSE,
April 12, 1979.

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit herewith, for Senate advice and consent to ratification, a Third Protocol further amending the Convention between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income and capital gains signed at London on December 31, 1975, as amended by an exchange of notes dated April 13, 1976, and by Protocols signed at London on August 26, 1976 and March 31, 1977. For the information of the Senate, I also transmit the report of the Department of State on the Third Protocol.

The Third Protocol will enter into force immediately after the expiration of 30 days following the date on which instruments of ratification are exchanged.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to the Third Protocol and give advice and consent to its ratification.

JIMMY CARTER.

[23] LETTER OF SUBMITTAL

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, April 3, 1979.

THE PRESIDENT,
The White House.

THE PRESIDENT: I have the honor to submit to you, with a view to its transmission to the Senate for advice and consent to ratification, the Third Protocol further amending the Convention between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the avoidance of double taxation and the prevention of fiscal evasion with respect to taxes on income and capital gains, signed at London on December 31, 1975, as amended by an exchange of notes dated April 13, 1976, and by Protocols signed at London on August 26, 1976 and March 31, 1977. The Third Protocol was signed at London on March 15, 1979.

The Senate gave advice and consent to ratification to the Convention, as amended, on June 27, 1978, with a reservation as to Article 9(4). Article 9(4) would have restricted the power of states of the United States to apply the unitary method of taxation to British multinational companies. The Senate's reservation stipulates that the provisions of Article 9(4) will not apply to any political subdivision or local authority of the United States.

The Third Protocol makes a number of changes to conform the language of the Convention to the Senate's reservation on Article 9(4). Execution of the Third Protocol by the United Kingdom and approval by the British House of Commons would confirm acceptance by the United Kingdom of the Senate's reservation with respect to Article 9(4) of the Convention.

The Third Protocol also modifies the definition of a "permanent establishment" in the case of activities carried on offshore in connection with the exploration and exploitation of the seabed and subsoil and their natural resources. Such activities are deemed to create a "permanent establishment" in a Contracting State if such activities were carried on in the State for at least 31 days in a 12 month period.

In addition, the Third Protocol provides a special limitation on the creditability by United States citizens or residents of the United Kingdom petroleum revenue tax paid or accrued by them. This provision was included in the Third Protocol because of concern expressed during the Senate debate that the petroleum revenue tax (PRT) might be used by oil companies with North Sea operations to shelter oil related income from other countries. Under the provisions of the Third Protocol, the creditability of the PRT is limited by an amount determined with reference to United Kingdom source oil income.

[24] The Third Protocol also makes a number of technical and clarifying changes to the provisions of the Convention dealing with the United States excise tax on insurance premiums, the taxation of remuneration for government service, dividends from dual resident corporations, and the period of time during which refunds relating to taxes paid in previous periods may be applied for.

A technical memorandum explaining in detail the provisions of the Third Protocol is being prepared by the Department of the Treasury and will be submitted to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

The Department of the Treasury, with the cooperation of the Department of State, was primarily responsible for the negotiation of the Third Protocol. It has the approval of both Departments.

Respectfully submitted.

Cyrus Vance.

[43] APPENDIX C

WRITTEN RESPONSES BY WITNESSES TO QUESTIONS BY SENATORS AND COMMITTEE STAFF

Department of the Treasury,
Washington, D.C.,
June 8, 1979.

Hon. Frank Church,
Chairman,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
U.S. Senate
Washington, D.C.

Dear Mr. Chairman: To follow-up my testimony at the June 6 hearings concerning the six tax conventions or protocols involving the United Kingdom, France, Hungary and Korea, I want to assure you that Article I of the Third Protocol of the proposed US-UK Income Tax Treaty gives full effect to the Senate's reservation on Article 9(4) of that treaty. Let me also assure you that there is no similar state tax issue in any of the other five treaties which were considered by the Committee yesterday.

Again let me emphasize our view that each of these treaties is important to the United States and that their prompt approval is desirable.

I am also enclosing answers to the written questions submitted to me by your staff at the hearings as well as copies of my answers to questions from Senator Helms and Senator Javits.

Sincerely,

Donald C. Lubick,
Assistant Secretary
(Tax Policy).

Questions for Assistant Secretary for Tax Policy Donald C. Lubick [1]

* * * * *

[45] Questions 6 and 7. In the third protocol proposed to the U.S.-U.K. Income Tax Treaty, the definition of permanent establishment has been changed. Please explain the basis of this change. Were the affected U.S. drilling companies contacted concerning the proposed change? If they were contacted, please give the details of when, by whom, and what resulted from such contact. Why was the permanent establishment definition selected as the item to be changed in the tax area?

Answer. In our discussions with the British subsequent to the Senate reservation on Article 9(4) of the proposed treaty, the United Kingdom specifically requested the inclusion in the protocol of a provision clarifying their taxing rights with respect to exploration and exploitation connected activities. This requested clarification was not unusual in light of the original negotiations in 1975 over the perma[46]nent establishment definition. In those negotiations, the United States agreed to delete from the twelve month permanent establishment exclusion contained in subparagraph (2)(f) of the proposed treaty any reference to "an installation or drilling rig or ship used for the exploration or development of natural resources" as a result of the British insistence that there be no limitation on their right to tax such activities. This deletion left the application of the permanent establishment definition to these activities somewhat uncertain, although as the United Kingdom authorities believe, a strong argument exists that these activities could be taxed even without the clarification of the new protocol.

We agreed to the inclusion of this provision in the Third Protocol because it was reasonable to expect the British to request some additional concession for the loss of the benefits of Article 9(4); because the terms of the provision were reasonable in light of our own statutory tax policy (we would generally tax these kinds of activities conducted in the United States, even if they were of a shorter duration than 30 days); and because it could be viewed as little more than a clarification of a reasonable interpretation taken by the British of their taxing rights under the proposed treaty without the protocol provision.

[1] General questions and answers 1-5 may be found in Senate Executive Report 96-6, 1980-4 I.R.B. 28. The questions and answers relating specifically to the other protocols and treaties considered at the June 6, 1979 hearings are set forth in the committee reports relating to those treaties.

The drilling industry was clearly aware of the precise terms of the protocol provision at least one month prior to the signing of the Protocol on March 15, 1979. On February 16, 1979, Mr. Arnold W. Bramlett, Chairman of the Accounting and Taxation Committee of the International Association of Drilling Contractors (IADC), wrote to the International Tax Counsel, Mr. H. David Rosenbloom, expressing general concern over the provision. Subsequently, there were telephone conversations between Mr. Rosenbloom and Mr. Bramlett in which the Treasury sought specific information as to the nature of the activities and the harm which was alleged would occur. These requests were confirmed in a letter from Mr. Rosenbloom to Mr. Bramlett on March 5, 1979, still 10 days before the Protocol was signed. To date, the Treasury has not received from the IADC, or any of its members, specific information detailing any specific adverse effects of the protocol provision.

THIRD PROTOCOL TO THE U.S.-U.K. INCOME TAX TREATY

Question 1. Would you please summarize the British reaction to the reservation included in the Senate advice and consent to ratification last June 27, 1978, concerning Article 9(4).

Answer. The British tax authorities were unhappy with the Senate reservation concerning Article 9(4). They hoped that a modified version of Article 9(4) might be included in the treaty. When it became clear that there was no possibility of a modification which would be acceptable to all parties, they reluctantly agreed to seek Parliamentary approval of the treaty with the deletion of Article 9(4) but only after the Third Protocol is approved by the Senate. The British authorities view some of the provisions of the Third Protocol (particularly the North Sea permanent establishment rules) as a concession for the deletion of Article 9(4). We recently reconfirmed with the British their willingness to go forward with the treaty if the protocol is approved by the Senate.

[47] Very strong objection has been raised by the United Kingdom business community to the deletion of Article 9(4). Many business and industrial groups in the United Kingdom have urged Parliament not to reapprove the treaty in the absence of the Article 9(4) provision.

The strength of these objections was confirmed by testimony at the June 6 hearings to the effect that there is a view among some Conservative Members of Parliament that the treaty should not be approved unless some solution can be found to the state taxation problem, albeit outside the treaty framework.

Question 2. Would any reservations added at this date jeopardize the Third Protocol and/or the US/UK Income Tax Treaty? If yes, please explain.

Answer. In our judgment any reservation on the Third Protocol, or any substantial delay in approval of the Protocol will seriously jeopardize the chances that the proposed US/UK Income Tax Treaty, with its very substantial benefits for U.S. taxpayers, will ever come into effect.

While we cannot speak for the United Kingdom, or predict with absolute certainty the actions which might be taken by the British Parliament, certain facts are clear. There is strong business opposition in the United Kingdom to the treaty reservation on Article 9(4) and as time passes there is also likely concern over the growing cost of the retroactive refund to U.S. investors of the British Advance Corporation Tax (it will be over $500 million through 1979). Despite this, the British have agreed to go forward to Parliament with the treaty as long as the U.S. Senate approves the Third Protocol containing what we, and they, view as a reasonable and justifiable provision clarifying the United Kingdom's taxing rights over certain offshore activities.

Should the United States again reserve on a treaty provision important to the British, particularly one which is reasonable in light of both the domestic tax law of the United States and the history of the basic treaty, it may well provide sufficient impetus for those in the United Kingdom opposed to the treaty to secure its defeat. Prolonged delay could have a similar effect.

Question 3. Why was the definition of a "permanent establishment" in the case of activities carried on offshore in connection with the exploration and exploitation of the seabed and subsoil modified? Will this modification result in a loss of revenues to the U.S.? If yes, how much? If no, why not?

Answer. The reasons for modification of the definition of the term "permanent establishment" are set forth in the answer to questions 6 and 7 under the General Questions heading above.

Since there is a good argument, and it is the British view, that the activities dealt with in the protocol provision may be taxed in the United Kingdom under the proposed treaty without the protocol, it is likely that the protocol provision will result in no additional loss of revenues to the United States. As a general matter, United Kingdom taxation of the income from exploration and exploitation connected activities of U.S. taxpayers will give rise to foreign tax credits which are available to offset the U.S. tax liability of U.S. taxpayers on this income. To that extent, the U.S. Treasury will lose revenue [48] and the British Treasury will gain revenue. The magnitude of this revenue transfer, however, is not likely to be substantial. The information we have indicates that only a few U.S. drilling companies are actively operating in the British sector of the North Sea.

It is important to note that other provisions of the Third Protocol will raise U.S. revenues (e.g., the limitation on the credit for the British Petroleum Revenue Tax) and thus, the next revenue impact of the protocol will be insignificant.

Question 4. How will the U.S. determine the United Kingdom source oil income for oil companies operating in the North Sea? Won't the oil companies be able to shelter oil-related income from other countries under the petroleum revenue tax (PRT) established by this convention?

Answer. The procedures for determining the treaty limitation on the credit for the U.K. Petroleum Revenue Tax (PRT) are described in the Treasury's technical explanation of the Third Protocol. For example, for purposes of this limitation, the taxable income from the extraction of minerals from oil or gas wells in the United Kingdom will be determined by applying principles similar to those under section 907(c)(1)(A) and section 907(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code.

As limited by the provisions in the Third Protocol, excess PRT should not spill over to offset U.S. tax on income from other countries.

Question 5. Will the Third Protocol, if ratified, result in a loss of revenues to the U.S.? If yes, how much? If no, why not? What was the policy reason for accepting the loss or gain?

Answer. We do not believe that the Third Protocol will, on balance, have a significant impact on U.S. revenues, either positive or negative.

[49] DEPARTMENT OF
THE TREASURY,
Washington, D.C.,

Hon. JACOB JAVITS,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JAVITS: Enclosed are answers to the questions you posed to me at the Foreign Relations Committee's Tax treaty hearings on June 6. Since the staff of the Committee asked for copies of these answers in order to facilitate their work, I have taken the liberty of sending the Chairman a copy of my reply to you.

Assistant Secretary
(Tax Policy).

QUESTIONS OF SENATOR JAVITS ON THE THIRD PROTOCOL TO THE U.S.-U.K. INCOME TAX TREATY

Question 1. Article VI of the Third Protocol to the U.S.-U.K. income tax treaty contains a provision which permits the taxation of activities connected with the exploration or exploitation of the seabed and subsoil and their natural resources after a period of 30 days in any twelve month period. Is this unusual?

Answer. As a matter of United States tax policy there is nothing particularly unusual or unjustifiable about a provision which preserves a country's right to tax exploration or exploitation connected activities after a 30-day period.

Congress, in the Tax Reform Act of 1969, enacted section 638 of the Internal Revenue Code specifically to assure that the United States would be able to tax natural resource exploration and exploitation activities conducted in the continental shelf areas of the United States.

Under domestic tax law, the United States' right to tax the income from such activities is not limited by any time requirement. Generally, a foreign company is taxable in the United States on its income effectively connected with the conduct of a trade or business in the United States even if that trade or business lasts no more than one day. It seems to us difficult to argue that the United Kingdom should not have a similar right to tax.

In addition, preservation of a right to tax the income derived from business activities without any time threshold is not an unusual provision as a matter of treaty policy. Both the United States model income tax treaty and that of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) provide, as a general rule, for the taxation of business profits attributable to a permanent establishment without specifying any time requirement before which there can be no permanent establishment.

Question 2. Will Article VI of the Third Protocol adversely affect U.S. taxpayers in a significant way?

[50] Answer. This provision in large, if not full measure, represents merely a Treasury-to-Treasury transfer of revenue which should not have a material impact on U.S. taxpayers.

Under this provision, the income from these exploration or exploitation connected activities in the United Kingdom could be taxed by the United Kingdom. Under both the proposed treaty and our tax law, a United States company subject to this United Kingdom tax would be entitled to claim a foreign tax credit against its U.S. tax liability for the U.K. tax which may be imposed. There should be no double taxation in these circumstances. Tax on the income is paid only once, to the U.K. treasury. While it is true that the statutory corporate tax rate in the U.K. is higher than that in the U.S.—52 percent vs. 46 percent, it should be noted that at most there is only a potential excess foreign tax credit of 6 percent. But even this potential excess credit is mitigated further by other factors. By virtue of a variety of provisions of U.K. tax law, the U.K. effective tax rate may well be less than 52 percent and our overall foreign tax credit limitation would permit the U.S. company to offset any excess foreign tax credit on this income against the U.S. tax liability on any other lower-tax income from other foreign countries which the U.S. company may have. On balance, we do not believe this provision will adversely affect U.S. taxpayers in any material way.

Moreover, we have repeatedly asked the drilling industry representatives to explain specifically why they would be adversely affected and we have not received any hard evidence from any company of specific harm. Indeed, our impression is that the concern expressed over this provision is not an industry-wide one, but rather that of only a few companies.

[51] DEPARTMENT OF
THE TREASURY,

Hon. JESSE A. HELMS,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HELMS: Enclosed are answers to the questions you posed to me at the Foreign Relations Committee's tax treaty hearings on June 6. Since the staff of the Committee asked for copies of these answers in order to facilitate their work, I have taken the liberty of sending the Chairman a copy of my reply to you.

QUESTIONS OF SENATOR HELMS FOR DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY WITNESS/STAFF OF JOINT COMMITTEE ON TAXATION

Question 1. What is the U.S. Model

Tax Treaty recommended language concerning the length of time before a construction activity is considered sufficient for the "permanent establishment" test?

Answer. Paragraph 3 of Article 5 (Permanent Establishment) of the U.S. model income tax treaty published on May 17, 1977 provides that:

"3. A building site or construction or installation project, or an installation or drilling rig or ship used for the exploration or development of natural resources, constitutes a permanent establishment only if it lasts more than 24 months."

The provision in the proposed income tax treaty with the United Kingdom which was approved by the Senate last year states that:

"(2) The term 'permanent establishment' shall include especially:

"(f) a building or construction or installation project which exists for more than 12 months."

Several important conclusions can be drawn from a comparison of these provisions.

First, the U.S. model treaty only sets out the preferred United States negotiating position. We fully recognize that in negotiating a treaty we must be willing to compromise and modify at least some of our preferred negotiating positions. We cannot expect to reach agreements with any country if our demand is and remains that they sign our model treaty without change on the dotted line.

Second, in the proposed U.K. treaty this particular provision of our model was modified in two important ways—the time threshold for exclusion from the definition of permanent establishment was reduced from 24 to 12 months and the specific exclusion deleted coverage of "an installation or drilling rig or ship used for exploration or development of natural resources."

[52] Third, we note that the deletion of a reference to drilling rigs, etc. was prompted during the original negotiations of the proposed treaty in 1975 because the United Kingdom insisted on their right to tax these activities without any limitation. The British view that they may tax under the proposed treaty even without this protocol seems clear. Moreover, since the United States under its statutory tax law would, in general, subject to U.S. tax the income derived by a foreign person from exploration or exploitation connected activities carried on in the U.S. (even if those activities were of very short duration), it is very difficult to argue that the United Kingdom should not have a similar right to tax.

Question 2. Do any tax treaties of the U.S. specifically name a single industry or activity for less favorable treatment in the manner that Article VI of the Third Protocol of the U.S.-U.K. Tax Treaty does for offshore exploration and development of natural resources?

Answer. The question assumes a conclusion which is not warranted. Neither Article VI of the Protocol, nor any other provision of the proposed treaty, singles out any taxpayer for less favorable tax treatment than they would have if there were no treaty at all. In general, tax treaties only benefit taxpayers. It is true that any particular treaty may benefit some more than others, but this necessarily follows from the nature of a negotiated agreement between two countries.

Generally, our tax treaties are replete with instances where particular industries, activities or type of income receive different measures of benefit. Looking to the U.S. model, for example, one discovers that the income of a resident of the United States from most business activities which are conducted through any fixed place of business in the other country may be taxed in the other country without any limitation. (Articles 5 and 7). Under Article 8, however, income of a resident of the United States from the operation of ships or aircraft in international traffic would be exempt from tax in the other country. United States Government employees are exempt from tax on their salaries in the other country (Article 19), while U.S. citizen employees of private employers may be taxed in the other country on their income from services there unless they are present in the other country for less than 183 days and other conditions are met (Article 15). Still different rules and different levels of benefits apply to U.S. citizens rendering independent personal services (Article 14) and those who are entertainers and athletes (Article 17). United States residents would be permitted to receive interest and royalties from the other country exempt from tax (Articles 11 and 12) but would receive dividends subject to tax of up to 15 percent (Article 10).

Question 3. Does the Department of Treasury expect what appears to me to be discriminatory treatment of offshore exploration and development activities to be part of other future treaty negotiations?

Answer. In future treaty negotiations, the Treasury will continue to seek the agreement of other countries to those provisions of our model income tax treaty which provide the greatest benefits to United States taxpayers. We cannot, however, realistically expect that each of our taxpayers will under any negotiated agreement obtain the same level of benefits as every other U.S. taxpayer.

[53] The provision in the Third Protocol which permits both the United States and the United Kingdom to tax exploration and exploitation connected activities is, in our view, a reasonable one which conforms to our domestic tax law. As such, we remain prepared to consider its inclusion in future treaties where it is strongly requested by the other country as a condition for agreement to a treaty and where such a treaty is generally favorable to the United States. It must be remembered that this provision at worst only preserves a taxing right which the other country has without a treaty.

Question 4. Why was this industry singled out? Why was it not consulted before the announcement of agreement with the British? What economic impact studies were made to ascertain the effect of our country's capability to compete in the world market if this provision is adopted?

Answer. We are surprised at the assertion that the oil drilling companies were unaware of either the substance of the question or the specific terms of the protocol provision prior to the signing of the Third Protocol on March 15, 1979.

The drilling industry was clearly aware of the precise terms of the protocol provision at least one month prior to the signing of the protocol on March 15, 1979. On February 16, 1979, Mr. David W. Bramlett, Chairman of the Accounting and Taxation Committee of the International Association of Drilling Contractors (IADC), wrote to the International Tax Counsel, Mr. H. David Rosenbloom, expressing general concern over the provision. Subsequently, there were telephone conversations between Mr. Rosenbloom and Mr. Bramlett in which the Treasury sought specific information as to the nature of the activities and the harm which was alleged would occur. These requests were confirmed in a letter from Mr. Rosenbloom to Mr. Bramlett on March 5, 1979, still 10 days before the protocol was signed. To date, the Treasury has not received from the IADC, or any of its members, specific information detailing any specific adverse effects of the protocol provision.

More surprising yet is that the drilling companies did not raise any objections either when hearings were held on the proposed treaty in July 1977, or before the treaty was approved in June 1978. They surely were aware of the possibility that the United Kingdom could tax their activities under the proposed treaty. This awareness is evidenced in a letter to the Treasury's International Tax Counsel dated October 17, 1975 from the law firm of Miller & Chevalier on behalf of its client, Santa Fe International Corporation—the very company for which Mr. Bramlett of the IADC works.

While not directly addressing the basic question of British taxation, the letter and accompanying memorandum provide ample evidence of a concern that without specific treaty language the drilling activities of Santa Fe could be taxed in the United Kingdom. Since the proposed treaty as approved by the Senate does not contain such specific language, one would think concern should have arisen much earlier.

The effect of this provision in the protocol on our country's capability to compete in world markets is judged to be small if indeed there [54] is any impact at all. The provision in large, if not full measure, represents merely a Treasury-to-Treasury transfer of revenue which should not materially impact U.S. taxpayers.

Under this provision, the income from these exploration or exploitation connected activities in the United Kingdom could be taxed by the United Kingdom. Under both the proposed treaty and our tax law, a United States company subject to this United Kingdom tax would be entitled to claim a foreign tax credit against its U.S. tax liability for the U.K. tax which may be imposed. There should be no double taxation in these circumstances. Tax on the income is paid only once, to the U.K. treasury. While it is true that the statutory corporate tax rate in the U.K. is higher than that in the U.S.—52 percent vs. 46 percent, it should be noted that at most there is only a potential excess foreign tax credit of 6 percent. But even this potential excess credit is mitigated further by other factors. By virtue of a variety of provisions of U.K. tax law, the U.K. effective tax rate may well be less than 52 percent and our overall foreign tax credit limitation would permit the U.S. company to offset any excess foreign tax credit on this income against the U.S. tax liability on any other lower-tax income from other foreign countries which the U.S. company may have. On balance, we do not believe this provision will adversely affect U.S. taxpayers in any material way.

Finally, it should be reiterated that we have not received any hard evidence from any company of specific harm. Indeed, our impression is that the concern expressed over this provision is not an industry-wide one, but rather that of only a few companies.

Question 5. Are drilling rigs owned by American companies which are temporarily operating in the U.K. waters now taxed by the U.S. or some taxing authority?

Answer. We cannot answer this question. We have repeatedly asked that the drilling companies concerned over this provision provide us with specific information detailing the precise nature of their activities and the adverse tax effects they would suffer. We have never been provided with this information.

Question 6. Have you measured the degree of involvement that U.K. companies currently have on the American Outer Continental Shelf to determine the relative benefit which this country could expect to derive from the enactment of this provision?

Answer. We do not know the degree of involvement of U.K. companies on the U.S. Continental shelf. It is important to recognize, however, that in any tax treaty it is not possible to weigh relative benefits on a provision-by-provision basis. Tax treaties, by their very nature, deal with a wide variety of economic transactions and income flows. The benefitted transactions or income dealt with under one provision of a treaty may favor one country and those benefitted under another provision may favor the other country. Thus, in assessing the balance of a tax treaty it is necessary to look at all the effects and all the provisions in the aggregate. In this context, the proposed treaty taken as a whole provides many substantial benefits to U.S. taxpayers, principal among them is the British government's refund to U.S. taxpayers of a portion of the British Advance Corporation Tax. This amounts to a retroactive refund of over $500 million through 1979 and $100 million a year thereafter.

[55] CONGRESS OF THE
UNITED STATES,
JOINT COMMITTEE ON TAXATION,
Washington, D.C.,
June 12, 1979.

Hon. JESSE HELMS,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HELMS: This is in response to the questions you submitted to me at the hearings last Wednesday, June 6, on the proposed Third Protocol to the pending income tax treaty with the United Kingdom. The questions concern the provision (Offshore activities) in the proposed protocol which is intended to make it clear that the United Kingdom can tax U.S. independent oil drilling contractors operating in the United Kingdom sector of the North Sea on a temporary basis. You submitted the same questions to the Treasury Department witnesses. Since questions three and four go to the Treasury's intentions in negotiating the offshore activities provision, I shall not attempt to answer those questions.

Question 1. What is the U.S. Model Tax Treaty recommended language concerning the length of time before a construction activity is considered sufficient for the "permanent establishment" test?

Answer. Article 5(3) (Permanent establishment) of the Treasury Department's model income tax treaty of May 17, 1977, provides as follows:

A building site or construction or installation project, or an installation or drilling rig or ship used for the exploration or development of natural resources, constitutes a permanent establishment only if it lasts more than 24 months.

Question 2. Do any tax treaties of the U.S. specifically name a single industry or activity for less favorable treatment in the manner that Article VI of the Third Protocol of the U.S.-U.K. Tax Treaty does for offshore exploration and development of natural resources?

Answer. In a number of U.S. tax treaties, entertainers and athletes are singled out and treated differently from other individuals receiving compensation for performing services in the other country. Treaties typically require that individuals resident in either treaty country who perform services in the other country are not taxed in that other country unless they are present there for more than 6 months during the year or they are performing services in an independent capacity through a fixed base. In those treaties where entertainers and athletes are singled out, however, there is usually no requirement that the entertainer or athlete spend a minimum period of time in the other country or have a fixed base there; all that is required is that a certain amount of income (e.g., $3,000) is derived from that country that year. Examples of such provisions are contained in the pending income tax treaties with the United Kingdom and the Philippines as well as the existing income tax treaties with Trinidad and Tobago (1970), Belgium (1972), Iceland (1975), and Romania (1976). [56] An entertainers and athletes provision of this type is found in the Treasury Department's model income tax treaty with a $15,000 minimum income level, and in the OECD model income tax treaty with no minimum income requirement.

A precedent more analogous to the offshore activities provision of the proposed U.K. protocol can be found in the existing income taxy treaty with Canada. The permanent establishment article of that treaty was amended in 1950 by a protocol to provide that the use of substantial equipment or machinery in one country at any time in any taxable year by a resident of the other country constitutes a permanent establishment for that year. The report of the State Department accompanying the protocol indicated that this modification was intended only as a clarification of the existing treaty, and stated further that "[t]he importance of this clarification arises mainly from the fact that American enterprises are engaged regularly in Canada in building roads, installing public utility projects, and carrying on other projects, and that much of this work extends over only portions of the year, such as work of a seasonal character." This provision and the offshore activities provision of the proposed protocol would appear to have essentially the same purpose and effect. It would appear, however, that this provision in the Canadian treaty would apply to offshore drilling rigs and that U.S. companies operating with substantial equipment (which presumably would encompass an offshore drilling rig) on the Canadian continental shelf at any time during the year would be treated as having a Canadian permanent establishment, and vice versa.

Question 5. Are drilling rigs owned by American companies which are temporarily operating in the U.K. waters now taxed by the U.S. or some taxing authority?

Answer. The income earned by American companies from the operation of drilling rigs on a temporary basis in U.K. waters is subject to U.S. tax if the operations are conducted through a branch of the U.S. company or through a subsidiary incorporated under U.S. law. Where, however, the operations are conducted through a foreign subsidiary of the U.S. company, the income would not be subject to U.S. tax unless and until it is distributed as dividends to the U.S. parent. Where the foreign subsidiary is incorporated in a tax haven such as Panama, as typically would be the case, there would be no foreign tax imposed on the income other than the U.K. tax.

It is not known how many U.S. companies operate drilling rigs in foreign waters using U.S. corporations which are subject to U.S. tax and how many use foreign subsidiaries which are not. Although some of the information is conflicting, industry sources indicate that the rigs are typically operated through foreign subsidiaries. Sedco, the one U.S. company presently operating in the U.K. sector of the North Sea, is operating through U.S. corporations. The reasons for using a U.S. corporation taxable by the United States rather than a nontaxed foreign subsidiary appear to be: (1) U.S. corporations operating in the U.K. sector of the North Sea claim exemptions from U.K. taxes under the existing treaty with the United Kingdom, and (2) the U.S. investment tax credit (equal to 10 percent of the cost of the drilling rig), which can be used to offset up to 60 percent (increasing [57] to 90 percent in 1982) of the U.S. company's U.S. tax liability from all activities, would not be available if the rig were owned by a foreign subsidiary.

It should be noted that the pending treaty, even as modified by the proposed protocol, would afford U.S. drilling contractors the opportunity to reduce their U.K. taxes on operations in U.K. waters significantly below the levels which would be imposed in the absence of the treaty. Under the pending treaty, income derived by U.S. companies from the rental of personal property (including floating drilling rigs) is exempt from U.K. tax as long at the U.S. company does not have a permanent establishment in the United Kingdom. Consequently, it would be possible for the U.S. corporation owning the drilling rig to lease it on a bareboat basis to an affiliated corporation which would operate the drilling rig (this, apparently, is a typical arrangement in any event). In that situation, the income derived by the affiliate operating the rig would be taxable by the United Kingdom, but the rental income received by the U.S. corporation would be exempt from U.K. tax under the proposed treaty and protocol. In the absence of a treaty, both the operating income and the rental income would be taxable by the United Kingdom.

Question 6. Have you measured the degree of involvement that U.K. companies currently have on the American Outer Continental Shelf to determine the relative benefit which this country could expect to derive from the enactment of this provision?

Answer. We have been unable to obtain adequate information to determine with any degree of accuracy the relative benefits the two countries may expect to obtain under the offshore activities provision of the protocol. It is understood, however, that U.S. drilling contractors and other U.S. service and supply companies have much more significant foreign operations than do their foreign competitors. Therefore, it is probable that the provision will be of much greater benefit at present to the United Kingdom than to the United States.

Industry sources indicate that at the present time Sedco is the only U.S. company operating in U.K. waters and thus it is the only U.S. company that might immediately be affected by the protocol. It is understood, however, that four or five other U.S. drilling contractors have operated in the U.K. sector of the North Sea in recent years and thus it may be assumed that several U.S. drilling contractors would be affected by the offshore activities provision in the next few years.

It is not known whether any U.K. contractors are operating in U.S. waters through U.K. corporations. Other provisions of U.S. law make it very difficult for foreign corporations to operate directly on the U.S. continental shelf; foreign companies generally must operate through U.S. subsidiaries if they are to operate on the U.S. continental shelf. Consequently, foreign contractors will be subject to U.S. tax in any event and thus would not be additionally affected by the offshore activities provision of the protocol.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID H. BROCKAWAY,
International Tax Counsel.

[58] TELEGRAM

INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF DRILLING CONTRACTORS,
Houston, Tex., June 12, 1979

PATRICK SHEA,
Committee on Foreign Relations,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: The International Association of Drilling Contractors withdraws its objection to article VI of the Third Protocol to the United States/United Kingdom Income Tax Treaty.

IADC believes that the importance of early ratification of the Third Protocol for American interests outweighs the negative impact which is directed at the offshore contract drilling industry by the language of article VI. This discriminatory provision, however, should be strongly resisted in any future treaties.

Sincerely,

ED MCGHEE,
Executive vice president.

[59] APPENDIX D

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESS BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, D.C., June 13, 1979

Hon. FRANK CHURCH,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In accordance with the Budget Act, the Congressional Budget Office has examined the proposed Third Protocol to the 1975 Income Tax Convention with the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland.

The proposed protocol would not provide any new budget authority or any new or increased tax expenditures.

In accordance with Section 403 of the Budget Act, the Congressional Budget Office has reviewed the Committee's budget estimates and agrees that the effect of the proposed protocol on revenues will be negligible during fiscal years 1980 through 1984.

Sincerely,

ALICE M. RIVLIN, Director.

Technical Explanation[1] of the Convention Between the Government of the United States of America and the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland for the Avoidance of Double Taxation and the Prevention of Fiscal Evasion With Respect to Taxes on Income and Capital Gains Signed at London, on December 31, 1975, as Amended by the Notes Exchanged at London on April 13, 1976, the Protocol Signed at London on August 26, 1976, and the Second Protocol [on March 31, 1977][2]

ARTICLE 1. PERSONAL SCOPE

This Article delineates the persons who come within the scope of the Convention. Paragraph (1) states the general rule that the Convention is applicable to residents of one or both of the Contracting States. The term "resident" of a Contracting State is defined in Article 4 (Fiscal Residence). In several cases, the Convention is also applicable to residents of third states because of their relationship with a resident of a Contracting State. For example, Articles 9 (Associated Enterprises), 25 (Mutual Agreement Procedure) or 26 (Exchange of Information and Administrative Assistance), may apply with respect to persons who are residents of neither Contracting State, and paragraph 5 of Article 10 (Dividends) and paragraph 6 of Article 11 (Interest) apply to dividends and interest derived by residents of third countries.

[1] It is the practice of the Treasury Department to prepare for the use of the Senate and other interested persons a Technical Explanation of the tax conventions and protocols, which are submitted to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratification.

An Income Tax Convention with the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland was signed December 31, 1975 and an Exchange of Notes was signed April 13, 1976, and submitted by the President to the Senate on June 24, 1976. Two Income Tax Protocols to the Convention were signed August 26, 1976 and March 31, 1977. On July 19 and 20, 1977 the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations held hearings, and this Technical Explanation was presented. The Senate voted its advice and consent on June 27, 1978 and instruments of ratification were exchanged on March 25, 1980.

[2] Page 5. Senate Executive Report No. 95-18, page 21. Senate Executive's J and Q are not published.

This paragraph is similar to Article 1 of the Draft Double Taxation Convention on Income and Capital developed by the Fiscal Committee of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development as published in 1963 and as thereafter revised (hereinafter referred to as the "OECD Model Convention").

Paragraph (2) deals with the treatment of a corporation which is a resident of both the United Kingdom within the meaning of paragraph (1)(a)(ii) of Article 4 (Fiscal Residence) and the United States (under paragraph (1)(b)(ii) of Article 4). Under those paragraphs, a corporation which is a United States corporation as defined by paragraph (1)(b) of Article 3 (General Definitions) and is managed and controlled in the United Kingdom would be a resident of both states. This Article clarifies the status of such corporations (hereinafter referred to as "dual-resident" corporations) for purposes of the Convention by providing that dual-resident corporations may not claim the benefits of this Convention which are otherwise available to residents of a Contracting State, including the benefits of Articles 7 (Business Profits), 10 (Dividends), 11 (Interest), 12 (Royalties), 22 (Other Income) or 23 (Elimination of Double Taxation). However, a dual-resident corporation may claim the benefits of paragraph (2) of Article 8 (Shipping and Air Transport) with respect to profits derived from operating ships or aircraft, and of Article 23 (Elimination of Double Taxation) with respect to paragraph 1(c) thereof and with respect to payments of the United Kingdom petroleum revenue tax. A dual-resident corporation may also claim the benefits of Articles 24 (Non-discrimination), and 28 (Entry Into Force), and the provisions of paragraph (7) of Article 11 (Interest) relating to the character of certain interest payments will apply to it. Thus, for example, a dual-resident corporation may not claim the exemption from tax with respect to interest derived from the United States under Article 11 (Interest) or claim a refund of advance corporation tax with respect to a dividend received from a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom. In these cases, the dual-resident corporation is treated as a resident of neither Contracting State for purposes of the Convention.

On the other hand, interest, royalties, and dividends derived by a resident of a Contracting State from a dual-resident corporation will qualify for the exemptions or reductions in tax allowed by the Convention. For example, dividends received by a resident of the United Kingdom from a dual-resident corporation will qualify for the reductions in United States tax withholding under paragraph (1) of Article 10 (Dividends) and, a United States resident receiving dividends from a dual-resident corporation which, under the internal law of the United Kingdom, is a resident of the United Kingdom, will qualify for the refunds or credits of advance corporation tax under paragraph (2) of that Article.

Paragraph (3) contains the traditional "saving clause" under which each Contracting State reserves the right to tax its nationals (as defined by paragraph (1)(k) of Article 3 (General Definitions)) and residents (as determined under Article 4 (Fiscal Residence)) as if the Convention had not come into effect. A similar provision exists in Article XIII of the Convention now in effect (hereinafter referred to as the "1945 Convention"). The saving clause is of principal importance to the United States because the United States taxes its citizens, residents, and corporations on a worldwide basis, regardless of where they reside or derive income.

Paragraph (4) sets forth certain exceptions to the application of the saving clause where other provisions of the Convention reflect overriding policies. Thus, the saving clause does not affect the provisions dealing with the determination of domicile for United Kingdom tax purposes (paragraph (4) of Article 4), the exemption from United Kingdom tax of profits derived by United States nationals and corporations from operating ships or aircraft (paragraph (2) of Article 8), associated enterprises (Article 9), the elimination of double taxation (Article 23), non-discrimination (Article 24) or the mutual agreement procedure (Article 25). Moreover, the saving clause does not affect benefits of the Convention which are extended to an individual performing functions as an employee of a government of a Contracting State, as a teacher, as a student or trainee, or as diplomatic and consular official, who is neither a national (as defined in Article 3) of, nor has immigrant status in, the Contracting State imposing the tax. See Articles 19 (Government Service), 20 (Teachers), 21 (Students and Trainees), and 27 (Effect on Diplomatic and Consular Officials and Domestic Laws). In the case of the United States, "immigrant status" means the individual has been admitted to the United States for permanent residence.

Although Article 1 is entitled "Personal Scope", the Convention is applicable to corporations and other persons as well as to individuals.

ARTICLE 2. TAXES COVERED

Paragraph (1) of this Article states the general rule that the Convention applies to taxes on income imposed by the governments of the Contracting States. The Convention also applies to taxes on income imposed by political subdivisions or local authorities of a Contracting State (as defined in paragraph (1)(i) of Article 3 (General Definitions)) where paragraph (4) of Article 9 (Associated Enterprises) applies. This Article is important because the relief from double taxation (i.e., tax credits) accorded by Article 23 (Elimination of Double Taxation) only extends to taxes covered by this Convention. Thus, credits for taxes paid to a Contracting State may be claimed under this Convention only with respect to the taxes specified in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this Article.

Paragraph (2) designates the existing taxes on income which are the subject of the Convention. In the case of the United States, the taxes on income included (referred to as "United States tax") are the Federal income taxes imposed by the Internal Revenue Code ("Code") and the tax under Code section 4371 on insurance company premiums paid to foreign insurers. The tax under Code section 4371 is not covered by the 1945 Convention. The Convention also applies to taxes imposed under section 1401 (tax on self-employment income) and under sections 3101 and 3111 (Federal Insurance Contributions Act taxes) with respect to the employee's share of the tax. The employer's share of the tax is not regarded as an income tax and, accordingly, it is not covered by this paragraph. The Convention only applies to taxes on income contained in the Internal Revenue Code. Thus, the Convention does not, for example, apply to the excise tax under Code section 1491.

The Convention also does not apply to the taxes imposed under Code sections 531 (Accumulated Earnings Tax) or 541 (Personal Holding Company Tax), except as specified by paragraph (6) of Article 10 (Dividends). Under paragraph (6) of Article 10, a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom shall be exempt from the accumulated earnings or personal holding company tax if individuals (other than nationals of the United States) who are residents of the United Kingdom control, directly or indirectly, more than 50 percent of the voting power of such corporation.

In the case of the United Kingdom, paragraph (2) provides that the existing taxes on income covered by the Convention (referred to as "United Kingdom tax") are the income tax, the capital gains tax, the corporation tax, and the petroleum revenue tax.

For purposes of paragraph (4) of Article 9 (Associated Enterprises), this Convention also applies to taxes imposed on income by political subdivisions or local authorities of a Contracting State. For this purpose, the income taxes referred to include any franchise taxes measured by income which are imposed by a political subdivision or local authority of a Contracting State.

Under paragraph (3), the Convention will also apply to taxes substantially similar to those covered by paragraph (2), which are imposed in addition to, or in place of, the taxes referred to in paragraph (2) after the date of signature of the Convention (December 31, 1975).

The competent authorities of the Contracting States are to notify each other of any amendments of the laws imposing the existing taxes and of the adoption of any taxes which are imposed subsequent to the date of signature of the Convention.

For purposes of Article 24 (Nondiscrimination), the Convention will also apply to taxes of every kind and description (whether or not the taxes are on income) imposed by the Contracting States, political subdivisions or local authorities thereof.

ARTICLE 3. GENERAL DEFINITIONS

Paragraph (1) defines the principal terms used throughout the Convention. Unless the context otherwise requires, the terms defined in this paragraph shall have a uniform meaning throughout the Convention. It should be noted that a number of important terms are defined elsewhere in the Convention. For example, the term "resident" of a Contracting State and "permanent establishment" are defined in Articles 4 (Fiscal Residence) and 5 (Permanent Establishment), respectively. Moreover, certain terms which appear in Articles dealing with special categories of income, e.g., "Immovable Property" (Article 6), "Dividends" (Article 10), "Interest" (Article 11), and "Royalties" (Article 12), are defined within those Articles.

The Article defines the term "corporation" in subparagraph (a) as a United States corporation (defined in subparagraph (b)(i)) or a United Kingdom corporation (defined in subparagraph (b)(ii)), or any body corporate or entity of a third state which is treated as a body corporate for tax purposes by both Contracting States. Whether an entity is a corporation is relevant for purposes of paragraph (6) of Article 5 (Permanent Establishment), Article 10 (Dividends), Article 16 (Investment or holding companies), and Article 23 (Elimination of Double Taxation).

The term "United States corporation" means a corporation (or any unincorporated entity which is treated as a United States corporation for United States tax purposes) which is created or organized under the laws of the United States, any state thereof, or the District of Columbia.

A "United Kingdom corporation" is defined as any body corporate or unincorporated association created or organized under the laws of the United Kingdom, excluding for this purpose a partnership, a local authority, or a local authority association.

Whether a United States or United Kingdom corporation or any other corporation is a resident of a Contracting State for purposes of this Convention, or neither of them, or both of them, is to be determined in accordance with Article 4 (Fiscal Residence).

The term "person" includes an individual, a corporation, a partnership, an estate, a trust, or any other body of persons.

The term "enterprise of a Contracting State" means an industrial or commercial undertaking carried on by a resident of a Contracting State (as defined by Article 4).

The term "international traffic" is defined as any transport by a ship or aircraft operated by an enterprise of one of the Contracting States, except when the ship or aircraft is operated solely between places within a Contracting State. Thus, for example, coastal shipping along the Atlantic coast of the United States is not international traffic. However, if a ship operated by an enterprise of the United Kingdom transports goods from Canada to the United States, leaving some of the goods in New York and the remainder in Norfolk, the portion of the transport between New York and Norfolk is international traffic. The definition of this term is relevant for purposes of Article 8

(Shipping and Air Transport) which provides that profits derived by an enterprise of a Contracting State from the operation in international traffic of ships or aicraft shall be taxable only in that State.

With respect to the United States, the term "competent authority" means the Secretary of the Treasury or his delegate. With respect to the United Kingdom, the term "competent authority" refers to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue or their authorized representatives.

The term "United States" means the United States of America. When used in the geographical sense, the term means the states thereof and the District of Columbia. Thus, the Convention does not apply to possessions of the United States or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. The term "United States" also includes the territorial sea and, in general accord with the principles of section 638 of the Code, the continental shelf of the United States.

The term "United Kingdom" means Great Britain and Northern Ireland, including the area of the continental shelf which has or may be designated by the United Kingdom, in accordance with international law, as an area within which the rights of the United Kingdom relating to the seabed and subsoil and their natural resources may be exercised. The Convention does not apply to the Channel Islands or the Isle of Man.

The 1945 Convention does not include the continental shelf areas in the definition of the terms United States or United Kingdom. It is understood that when compared to the 1945 Convention, the United Kingdom regards the reference to its continental shelf in this Convention as an expansion of the scope of the Convention with respect to operations in these areas.

The term "Contracting State" means the United States or the United Kingdom, as the context of the Convention requires.

The term "third State" means any State or territory other than the United States or the United Kingdom and the term "enterprise of a third State" is to be construed accordingly.

In relation to the United States, the term "national" means an individual who is a citizen of the United States. In relation to the United Kingdom, the term "national" means all citizens of the United Kingdom and colonies, British subjects under sections 2, 13(1) or 16 of the British Nationality Act of 1948, and British subjects by virtue of section 1 of the British Nationality Act of 1965, provided they are patrial within the meaning of the Immigration Act of 1971, so far as these provisions are in force on the date of entry into force of this Convention or have been modified in minor respects so as not to affect their general character.

Paragraph (2) provides that any terms used in the Convention which is not defined therein shall, unless the context otherwise requires or unless the competent authorities agree to a definition of the term pursuant to Article 25 (Mutual Agreement Procedure), have the meaning which it has under the laws of the Contracting State where a tax is being determined. Under Article 25, where a term which is not defined in the Convention has a different meaning under the laws of the United Kingdom and the United States or where the meaning under the laws of one of the Contracting States is not readily determinable, the competent authorities may, for purposes of the Convention, establish a common meaning of the term in order to prevent double taxation or to further any other purpose of the Convention.

ARTICLE 4. FISCAL RESIDENCE

This Article sets forth rules for determining the residence of individuals, corporations, and other persons for purposes of the Convention. Residence is important because, except as otherwise provided in the Convention, only a resident may claim the benefits of the Convention.

The term "resident of the United Kingdom" is defined as a corporation (as defined in paragraph 1(a) of Article 3 (General Definitions)) whose business is managed and controlled in the United Kingdom, and any other person (except a corporation as defined in paragraph (1)(a) of Article 3), resident in the United Kingdom for purposes of its tax.

Similarly, the term "resident of the United States" is defined as a person (except a corporation as defined in paragraph (1)(a) of Article 3) who is resident in the United States for purposes of its tax. This includes a resident alien individual who is subject to tax in the United States on his worldwide income and a resident citizen. The term also includes a corporation (as defined in paragraph (1)(b)(i) of Article 3). A foreign corporation, regardless of the extent to which its income is effectively connected with the conduct of a United States trade or business, is not a resident of the United States.

It should especially be noted that an individual is not automatically a resident of the United States or the United Kingdom for the purposes of this Convention if he is a citizen of either country. To be a resident of a Contracting State, he must be subject to tax in that State on account of his residence therein. In the case of the United States, an individual will be considered to be a resident if, without regard to his citizenship, he would be taxable in the United States on his worldwide income as a resident. Residence for this purpose is to be determined in accordance with the principles of Treasury regulations under section 871 of the Internal Revenue Code.

The definition of a resident of a Contracting State in the Convention differs from the definition of a resident in the 1945 Convention. Under paragraph (1)(g) of Article II of the 1945 Convention, a resident of the United Kingdom is defined, in pertinent part, as "any person (other than a citizen of the United States or a United States corporation) who is resident in the United Kingdom for purposes of United Kingdom tax . . ." and under paragraph (1)(h) of Article II a resident of the United States is defined, in pertinent part, as "any individual who is resident in the United States for the purposes of United States tax and not resident in the United Kingdom for the purposes of United Kingdom tax . . ." In the case of Strathalmond (Lord) v. Inland Revenue (Ch. D. June 23, 1972), a British court interpreted this definition, in applying Article XV of the 1945 Convention, to prevent the United Kingdom from taxing the United States source dividend income of a United States citizen residing in the United Kingdom. This result is inconsistent with the principles of the OECD Model Convention. Accordingly, under this Article, a United States citizen who resides in the United Kingdom for purposes of its tax will be taxable therein as a resident and, subject to the provisions of United Kingdom law, the United Kingdom will be permitted to tax those citizens on their dividend and interest income regardless of the source of that income. However, where the income of the United States citizen has a source in the United States (as determined under the laws of the United Kingdom) the United Kingdom will allow a credit against the United Kingdom tax for any United States tax payable (on the basis of that person's United States citizenship) with respect to that income. See the discussion of paragraph (3) of Article 23 (Elimination of Double Taxation).

A corporation which is a resident of both Contracting States under this Article (i.e., a United States corporation whose business is managed or controlled in the United Kingdom), is dealt with by paragraph (2) of Article 1 (Personal Scope), and such a corporation may not claim any benefit under this Convention except as provided therein.

Paragraph (1) of this Article also provides that a partnership, estate, or trust is a resident of a Contracting State only to the extent that the income derived by such person is subject to tax in such Contracting State as the income of a resident. For example, under United States law, a partnership is never, and an estate or trust is often not, taxed as such. Under the Convention, income received by a partnership, estate, or trust will be treated for purposes of the Convention as income received by a resident of the United States only to the extent such income is subject to tax in the United States as the income of a resident. Thus, for United States tax purposes, the question of whether income received by a partnership is received by a resident will be determined by the residence of its partners rather than by whether the partnership is resident in the United States by reason of engaging in a trade or business here. To the extent the partners are subject to United States tax as residents of the United States, the income received by a partnership will be treated as income received by a resident of the United States. Similarly, the treatment of income received by a trust or estate will be determined by the residence and taxation of the person subject to tax on such income, which may be the grantor, the beneficiaries or the trust or estate itself, as the case may be.

The fact that a charitable organization or pension fund is exempt from tax in the country in which it is otherwise resident is not to be construed to deny such organization or fund resident status under this Convention.

Paragaraph (2) provides that an individual who is a resident of both Contracting States under paragraph (1) will, for purposes of the Convention, be deemed to be a resident of the Contracting State in which he has a permanent home available to him (e.g., where an individual dwells with his family), his center of vital interests (e.g., close economic and personal relations), an habitual abode, or the State of which he is a national, in that order. If the issue cannot be settled by the application of these tests, the competent authorities shall decide by mutual agreement the one Contracting State of which he will be considered to be a resident. Thus, for purposes of the Convention, including paragraph 3 of Article 1 (Personal Scope) (the saving clause) an individual may be a resident of the United States or the United Kingdom, but not both.

Paragraph (3) provides that if an estate or trust (taxable as such) is a resident of both Contracting States under the provisions of paragraph (1), the competent authorities may settle the issue by mutual agreement.

Since the definitions of residence in this Article apply for purposes of the entire Convention, an individual who is deemed to be a resident of one Contracting State and not a resident of the other Contracting State by reason of paragraph (2) will be deemed to be a resident of the first-mentioned Contracting State for all purposes of the Convention. For example, if an individual is determined to be a resident of the United Kingdom under paragraph (2) but would apart from that paragraph also be considered a resident of the United States under the laws of the United States, such individual would continue to receive the exemptions and special benefits granted by the Convention to residents of the United Kingdom, unless the individual is a citizen of the United States (see the saving clause of paragraph (3) of Article 1 (Personal Scope)).

Paragraph (4) provides that for United Kingdom tax purposes the domicile, on or after April, 1976, of a woman who is a United States national and who was married before January 1, 1974 to a man domiciled in the United Kingdom will be determined as though such marriage had taken place on January 1, 1974. The foreign source income of a United Kingdom resident is subject to taxation in the United Kingdom to a different extent depending on the domicile of the resident. Thus, a United Kingdom resident domiciled in the United Kingdom is subject to full United Kingdom taxation on all income, whereas a United Kingdom resident domiciled outside the United Kingdom is generally subject to tax on foreign source income only to the extent that it is remitted to the United Kingdom.

Under United Kingdom law prior to January 1, 1974, the domicile of a woman was the same as the domicile of her husband. This rule has been repealed for future years. However, as a transitional rule, United Kingdom law treats a woman married before 1974 as retaining her husband's domicile unless and until she changes her domicile by acquisition or revival of another domicile after 1973.

As a consequence, under United Kingdom law a United States citizen woman married to a man domiciled in the United Kingdom prior to January 1, 1974 does not have the same opportunity to prove a domicile outside the United Kingdom as does a United States citizen man married to a woman domiciled in the United Kingdom. Paragraph (4) of the Convention puts the United States citizen woman in the same position as the United States citizen man.

Paragraph (5) provides a special rule for cases where income dealt with by this Convention (e.g., under Articles 7 (Business Profits), 8 (Shipping and Air Transport), 10 (Dividends), 11 (Interest), 12 (Royalties), and 22 (Other Income)), is taxable to a resident of a Contracting State only if, and to the extent, it is remitted to or received by that person. In certain cases, individuals who are residents of the United Kingdom are not taxable on foreign source investment income, unless it is remitted to or received by them in the United Kingdom. If such income is received outside of the United Kingdom, or accumulated by the payer, a United Kingdom resident may not be subject to tax on that income. If the reductions in rates or exemptions from tax were to apply to those items of income, the United States would be foregoing tax where double taxation does not in fact occur. Thus, this paragraph provides that if under the law in the other Contracting State income would only be taxed on a remittance basis, then any reduced rates of tax (e.g., as provided by Articles 10 (Dividends)), or relief from taxation (e.g., Articles 7 (Business Profits) and 8 (Shipping and Air Transport), 11 (Interest), or 12 (Royalties)) provided by this Convention shall apply only to the extent such income is remitted to or received by the person in the year in which it accrues to the benefit of that taxpayer. This rule applies to all persons, including individuals, corporations, partnerships and trusts or estates taxable as such.

This provision is similar to paragraph (4) of Article II of the 1945 Convention.

ARTICLE 5. PERMANENT ESTABLISHMENT

This Article defines the term "permanent establishment." The existence of a permanent establishment is relevant under Article 7 (Business Profits) where it is provided that the business profits of an enterprise of a Contracting State shall be taxable only in that State unless it carries on business in the other Contracting State through a permanent establishment situated therein.

Under paragraph (1), the term "permanent establishment" means a fixed place of business through which an enterprise of one of the Contracting States wholly or partly carries on business. Illustrations in paragraph (2) of a permanent establishment include a branch; an office; a factory; a workshop; a mine, oil or gas well, quarry or other place of extraction of natural resources; and a building site, or construction or installation project which exists for more than twelve months. Under the construction or installation project rule the twelve month period begins only when work physically commences in the other Contracting State. A series of contracts or projects which are interdependent both commercially and geographically is to be treated as a single project for the purpose of applying the twelve months test. As a general rule, any fixed facility or premises through which a resident carries on business for an indefinite or substantial period of time will be treated as a permanent establishment unless it is used only for one or more of the activities described in paragraph (3) of this Article.

Paragraph (3) specifically provides that a permanent establishment does not include a fixed place of business if it is used solely for one or more of the following activities:

"(a) the storage, display, or delivery of goods or merchandise belonging to the enterprise;

"(b) the maintenance of a stock of goods or merchandise belonging to the enterprise for the purpose of storage, display or delivery;

"(c) the maintenance of a stock of goods or merchandise belonging to the enterprise for the purpose of processing by another person;

"(d) the maintenance of a fixed place of business for the purpose of purchasing goods or merchandise, or for collecting information, for the enterprise;

"(e) the maintenance of a fixed place of business for the purpose of advertising, for the supply of information, for scientific research, or for similar activities which have a preparatory or auxiliary character, for the enterprise; or

"(f) a building or construction or installation project which does not exist for more than 12 months."

As noted, these exceptions are cumulative and a fixed place of business used only for one or more of these purposes will not be considered a permanent establishment under the Convention.

Under paragraph (4), a person acting in one Contracting State on behalf of a resident of the other Contracting State, other than an agent of an independent status to whom paragraph (5) applies, will be deemed to constitute a permanent establishment if such person has, and habitually exercises in that first-mentioned Contracting State, an authority to conclude contracts in the name of the resident, unless the contracts are limited to the activities described in paragraph (3) of this Article.

On the other hand, paragraph (5) provides that an enterprise of one Contracting State will not be deemed to have a permanent establishment in the other Contracting State merely because such enterprise carries on business in such other Contracting State through a broker, general commission agent, or any other agent of an independent status, where such broker or agent is acting in the ordinary course of his business.

Under paragraph (6), the fact that a corporation which is a resident of a Contracting State controls or is controlled by a corporation of the other Contracting State, or which carries on business in the other Contracting State, through a permanent establishment or otherwise shall not of itself constitute either corporation a permanent establishment of the other.

ARTICLE 6. INCOME FROM IMMOVABLE PROPERTY (REAL PROPERTY)

Paragraph (1) provides that income from immovable property including income from agriculture or forestry, may be taxed in the Contracting State where the property is situated. This rule does not confer an exclusive right of taxation to the State where the property is located, but only confirms that the situs State has the primary right to tax such income regardless of whether the income is derived through a permanent establishment in that State.

Paragraph (2) provides that the term "immovable property" is to be defined under the laws of the Contracting State where the property is located. Generally, the term "immovable property" refers to real property for purposes of United States and United Kingdom law. Moreover, paragraph (2) also defines the term "immovable property" to include usufruct of immovable property and rights to variable or fixed payments (e.g., royalties) as consideration for the working of, or the right to work, mineral deposits, sources, and other natural resources (e.g., oil or gas wells). Ships, boats and aircraft shall not be regarded as immovable property.

This Article shall apply to income derived from the use in any form of immovable property, including income from leases of immovable property, but it does not include interest on indebtedness secured by real property (e.g., mortgages).

Where income is derived from immovable property through a permanent establishment in a Contracting State, such income may be taxed in accordance with Article 7 (Business Profits).

Income from immovable property does not include gains from the sale of immovable property. Where those gains are capital gains within the meaning of Article 13 (Capital Gains), that Article shall apply.

This Article differs from the provisions of Article IX of the 1945 Convention. During the years since that Convention was ratified both the United States and the United Kingdom have enacted statutes permitting the taxpayer to elect to treat income in respect of real property, wells, mines and other natural resources, as income from a trade or business. In these cases, the taxpayer is taxed only on net income rather on the gross income derived from such operations. Thus, it was determined that this Convention need not continue the terms of the 1945 Convention.

ARTICLE 7. BUSINESS PROFITS

Paragraph (1) provides that business profits (as defined in paragraph (7) of this Article) of an enterprise of one Contracting State shall be taxable only in that State unless the enterprise carries on business in the other Contracting State through a permanent establishment situated therein, except where the enterprise is a national of that other Contracting State. (See the saving clause in paragraph (3) of Article 1 (Personal Scope)). The term "permanent establishment" is defined in Article 5 (Permanent Establishment). Where business is carried on through a permanent establishment in the other Contracting State, the business profits attributable to the permanent establishment can be taxed by that other Contracting Sate.

Business profis may be attributable to a permanent establishment which an enterprise of one Contracting State has in the other Contracting State, whether from sources within or without a Contracting State. Thus, items of income described in section 864 (c)(4)(B) of the Code which are attributable to a permanent establishment situated in the United States will be subject to tax by the United States.

In determining the proper attribution of business profits under the Convention to a permanent establishment, paragraph (2) provides that both Contracting States will attribute to the permanent establishment such profits as it would reasonably be expected to derive if it were an independent entity engaged in the same or similar activities under the same or similar conditions and dealing wholly independently with the enterprise of which it is a permanent establishment.

Under paragraph (3), expenses, wherever incurred, which are reasonably connected with profits attributable to the permanent establishment, including a reasonable allocation of executive and general administrative expenses, research and development expenses, interest, and other expenses incurred for the enterprise as a whole (or the part which includes the permanent establishment), will be allowed as deductions in determining the business profits of the permanent establishment. However, in determining the amount of the deduction under paragraph (3) for expenses incurred by the head office, the deduction generally will be limited to the expense incurred without including a profit element for the head office.

Under paragraph (4) profits will not be attributed to a permanent establishment merely because of the purchase of goods or merchandise by that permanent establishment for the account of the enterprise. Paragraph (2) of the Article does not override paragraph (4). Thus, for example, where a permanent establishment purchases goods for its head office, the business profits attributed under paragraph (2) to the permanent establishment with respect to its other activities will not be increased by adding a notional figure for profits from purchasing.

For purposes of this Article, paragraph (5) provides that the profits attributed to a permanent establishment shall be determined by the same method every year unless there is a good reason to change such method. The purpose of this provision is to give assurance of continuous and consistent tax treatment.

Paragraph (6) provides that, where the profits of a permanent establishment include items of income which are dealt with separately in other Articles of the Convention, the provisions of those Articles will not be affected by the provisions of this Article. Thus, for example, the taxation of interest income will be controlled by Article 11 (Interest) and not by this Article unless, as provided by paragraph (4) of Article 11, the interest is effectively connected with a permanent establishment which the recipient, being a resident of one of the Contracting States, has in the other State. This same exception applies with respect to items of income dealt with in Article 8 (Shipping and Air Transport), dividends under paragraph (4) of Article 10 (Dividends), royalties under paragraph (4) of Article 12 (Royalties) or other income under paragraph (2) of Article 22 (Other Income).

Under paragraph (7), the term "business profits" includes, but is not limited to, income derived from manufacturing, mercantile, banking, insurance (or reinsurance), agricultural, fishing or mining activities, the operation of ships or aircraft, the furnishing of services, the rental of tangible personal (movable) property, and the rental or licensing of motion picture films or films or tapes used for radio or television broadcasting or from copyrights thereof. Thus, for example, income derived by a resident of the United States from the rental of tangible personal property to a person in the United Kingdom shall not be subject to tax in the United Kingdom unless that lessor has a permanent establishment in the United Kingdom to which such income is attributable. The term "business profits" also includes any other income which is effectively connected with a permanent establishment which the recipient, being a resident of one of the Contracting States, has in the other Contracting State. The term "business profits" does not include income from the performance of personal services derived by an individual either as an employee or in an independent capacity. Income from such activities is dealt with under Articles 14 (Independent Personal Services), 15 (Dependent Personal Services) and 17 (Artistes and Athletes), as the case may be.

This Article is substantially similar to Article III of the 1945 Convention and is also based on Article 7 (Business Profits) of the OECD Model Convention.

ARTICLE 8. SHIPPING AND AIR TRANSPORT

Paragraph (1) provides that profits of an enterprise of a Contracting State from the operation of ships or aircraft in international traffic shall be taxable only in that Contracting State.

Paragraph (2) confirms that the United Kingdom grants to nationals of the United States and United States corporations the equivalent shipping and aircraft exemption required for application of Code sections 872(b) and 883. It should be noted that the exemption provided under this paragraph is available only with respect to the profits derived from operating ships documented or aircraft registered under the laws of the United States.

Under paragraph (3), this Article applies to profits derived from the rental of ships or aircraft under a bareboat charter if the lessor is engaged in the operation of ships or aircraft in international traffic and the rental income is incidental to operations of the lessor described in paragraph (1). In these cases the lessee of the property need not be a resident of a Contracting State. For example, if an airline which is a resident of one Contracting State has excess equipment in the winter months and leases several of its aircraft which are not required by it during that period to another airline, the rental profits of the lessor are not subject to tax by that other Contracting State, regardless of the state of residence of the lessee.

Paragraph (4) provides that profits derived by an enterprise of a Contracting State from the use, maintenance, or rental of containers (including trailers and related equipment for the transport of containers), used to transport goods or merchandise shall be taxable only in that State except to the extent that those goods or merchandise are transported solely between places within a Contracting State. The income covered by this provision need not be incidental to the operation of ships or aircraft. Thus, this Article applies to lessors of containers who do not own or operate the ships or aircraft upon which the containers are carried. This paragraph also applies to income derived by an enterprise from the use, maintenance, and lease of containers and other related equipment in connection with the operation of ships or aircraft described in paragraph (1).

Paragraph (5) provides that this Article shall also apply to profits derived by an enterprise of a Contracting State from participation in a pool, a joint business or an international operating agency.

Paragraph (6) provides that gains of an enterprise of a Contracting State from the alienation of ships, aircraft or containers owned and operated by the enterprise shall be taxable only in that State if the income from such ships, aircraft or containers is taxable only in that State.

Except for paragraph (2), this Article is subject to the saving clause of paragraph (3) of Article 1 (Personal Scope). Therefore, a Contracting State may tax income from shipping or air transport, or from the use or rental of containers, derived by a resident of the other Contracting State without regard to this Article if such resident is a national of the first-mentioned Contracting State.

ARTICLE 9. ASSOCIATED ENTERPRISES

Article 9 confirms the authority of the United States under section 482 of the Code. Thus, where an enterprise of a Contracting State is related to another enterprise and conditions are made or imposed between them in their commercial or financial relations which are different from those which would be made between independent enterprises, under paragraph (1) any income, deductions, receipts or outgoings which would, but for those conditions, have been attributed to one of the enterprises, but by reason of those conditions have not been so attributed, may be taken into account in computing the profits and losses of that enterprise and taxed accordingly.

Paragraph (2) sets forth an explicit formulation of the consequence of a redetermination made in accordance with paragraph (1) by a Contracting State. In such event, the other Contracting State shall make such corresponding adjustment as may be appropriate to the amount of tax charged to the related enterprise by the other Contracting State. In the case of the United States, assuming application within a reasonable time after notice of such adjustment, any refunds of tax in respect of such an adjustment shall be made notwithstanding the statute of limitations.

Under paragraph (3), if a Contracting State disagrees with a redetermination of tax by the other Contracting State, the two Contracting States will endeavor to resolve the matter in accordance with the mutual agreement procedure in Article 25 (Mutual Agreement Procedure).

Paragraph (4) deals with the methods by which a Contracting State or a political subdivision or local authority thereof may tax an enterprise which is controlled by an enterprise of the other Contracting State. Where an enterprise doing business in one Contracting State is a resident (as defined in Article 4 (Fiscal Residence) of the other Contracting State, or is controlled, directly or indirectly, by an enterprise which is a resident of the other Contracting State, the first-mentioned Contracting State, or political subdivision or local authority thereof, in determining the tax liability of the enterprise doing business therein, may not take into account the income, deductions, receipts, or outgoings of a related enterprise which is a resident of the other Contracting State or of an enterprise of any third State which is related to the enterprise of the other Contracting State. The taxing jurisdiction may, however, attribute income to the enterprise under the arm's-length principles contained in the other paragraphs of this Article. In addition, where the enterprise which is a resident of the other Contracting State is a corporation, the provisions of paragraph (4) of this Article will apply only if such corporation: (1) is not a controlled foreign corporation within the meaning of Code section 957; (2) is not created or organized under the laws of the first-mentioned Contracting State or any third State; and (3) is not controlled, directly or indirectly, by a corporation which is a resident of any third State.

Finally, the prohibition contained in paragraph (4) will not apply where the enterprise doing business in a Contracting State is a resident of that State to the extent that it owns, directly or indirectly, the capital of a related enterprise. Thus, this provision does not affect the application of the United States "subpart F" rules of Code sections 951-964.

The following is an illustration of the operation of this paragraph: Corporation M, organized under the laws of the United Kingdom, is a resident of the United Kingdom, and all of its stock is owned by individuals residing in the United Kingdom who are not United States nationals. Corporation M controls subsidiaries A, B, and C, which are incorporated in, and do business in, respectively, France, Germany, and Belgium. Corporation M also controls a United States subsidiary, Z, which is incorporated in and conducts its business in X, a state of the United States. In determining the tax liability of Z, to X or to the United States, neither X nor the United States, are permitted to allocate to, apportion to, or otherwise include in Z's tax base income earned by M, A, B, or C, except to the extent the dealings between Z and those persons require the application of the arm's-length principles of the other paragraphs of this Article. Thus, in these circumstances, the United States or the states will be required to determine Z's tax liability solely on the basis of its income. The determination of Z's tax liability under any unitary or combined reporting basis is, therefore, prohibited by this Article.

The broad standard of tax jurisdiction embodied in United States tax treaties provides that one Contracting State will not tax the business profits of an enterprise of the other Contracting State unless that enterprise does business in the first-mentioned Contracting State through a permanent establishment located there. The purpose of this provision is to harmonize the tax jurisdiction under this Convention at the national, state and local levels by equating the tax base of an enterprise doing business in a state or political subdivision of the United States with the enterprise's Federal income tax base.

Paragraph (5) provides that for purposes of the Convention an enterprise is related to another enterprise if either owns or controls directly or indirectly the other, or if a third person or persons (related to each other or acting together) own or control, directly or indirectly, both. The term "control" is not limited to the ownership of the capital of an enterprise, and includes any kind of control, whether or not legally enforceable, and however exercised or exercisable.

ARTICLE 10. DIVIDENDS

Article 10 deals with the taxation of dividends derived from a corporation which is a resident of a Contracting State. Under Article VI of the 1945 Convention, the rate of tax on dividends derived by residents of one Contracting State from a corporation of the other Contracting State is limited to 15 percent of the gross amount of the dividends. In 1973 the United Kingdom introduced a system of integrating corporate and shareholder taxation. Under the system adopted by the United Kingdom, a special "Advance Corporation Tax" ("ACT" hereafter), is collected at the corporate level on a distribuiton of dividends by the corporation. This tax is treated both as an advance payment of a portion of the corporate income tax, and also as a payment by an individual United Kingdom resident shareholder in satisfaction of his personal tax liabilities on the dividend. The introduction of this system rendered inapplicable the current provisions of the Convention relating to United Kingdom dividends. Accordingly, the proposed Article provides a mechanism by which United States shareholders of a United Kingdom corporation will receive the benefits of the shareholder credits which have heretofore not been granted to United States residents.

This Article contains two alternatives for the taxation of dividends, depending on whether the United Kingdom continues to allow a tax credit to individual shareholders in respect of dividends derived from a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom. Paragraph (1) will apply only if the United Kingdom modifies its current system of shareholder credits. This paragraph limits the tax on dividends paid by a corporation which is a resident of one Contracting State to a resident (who derives and beneficially owns the dividend) of the other Contracting State to 15 percent of the gross amount of the dividends. As noted above, this is the rule contained in the 1945 Convention.

Paragraph (2) applies where, as at the present time, an individual resident in the United Kingdom is entitled to a credit in respect of dividends paid by a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom. So long as this system remains in force, only paragraph (2), and not paragraph (1), shall apply. With respect to dividends paid by a corporation resident in the United Kingdom to a United States corporation which either alone or together with one or more associated corporations (defined below) controls, directly or indirectly, at least 10 percent of the voting stock of the United Kingdom resident corporation which is paying the dividend, the shareholder will be entitled to payment from the United Kingdom of a tax credit (hereinafter referred to as a refund) equal to one-half of the tax credit to which an individual resident in the United Kingdom would be entitled, less 5 percent of the aggregate amount of the cash dividend and the United Kingdom refund.

For United States tax purposes, the gross amount of the refund (without reduction for the tax withheld) will be considered as a dividend (see discussion under Article 23 (Elimination of Double Taxation)) and the 5 percent tax withheld will be considered as a tax on the shareholder receiving the dividend (see paragraph (1)(b) of Article 23 (Elimination of Double Taxation)). The unrefunded portion of the ACT paid in respect of the dividend will be regarded as an income tax imposed on the distributing corporation (see paragraph (1)(c) of Article 23).

In the case of United States shareholders other than corporations which control at least 10 percent of the voting stock of the United Kingdom resident corporation, the United Kingdom refund will equal the full credit payable to an individual resident in the United Kingdom, less 15 percent of the aggregate amount of the dividend and the U.K. refund. For United States tax purposes, the U.K. refund shall be treated as additional gross income and the 15 percent withholding shall be considered as a tax on the shareholder. In the case of a $65 dividend, the result is as follows:

Dividend for U.S. Tax Purposes
Dividend	$ 65.00
U.K. refund	35.00
Gross Dividend	100.00
United Kingdom Withholding Tax	$15.00
Foreign Tax Credit	$15.00

With respect to dividends paid by a United States corporation to a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom, and which controls, directly or indirectly, at least 10 percent of the voting stock of the United States corporation paying the dividend, the United States tax shall not exceed 5 percent of the gross dividend.

In all other cases of dividends paid by a United States corporation to any other resident of the United Kingdom, the rate of tax imposed by the United States shall not exceed 15 percent.

For purposes of paragraph (2), two corporations are associated if one controls directly or indirectly more than 50 percent of the voting power in the other corporation, or a third corporation controls more than 50 percent of the voting power in both of them.

As noted above, a resident of a Contracting State may benefit from this Article only if he derives and beneficially owns the dividend paid by a corporation of one of the Contracting States. A nominee or agent which is a resident of a Contracting State may not claim the benefits of this Article if the dividend is received on behalf of a person who is not a resident of that Contracting State. Similarly, dividends received by a nominee for the benefit of a resident, as, for example, with respect to a depositary receipt, would qualify for the benefits of this Article. This is generally the case with respect to all income tax conventions of the United States.

Paragraph (3) defines the term "dividends" to include any item which is treated as a distribution under the laws of the United Kingdom for United Kingdom tax purposes or, as a distribution out of earnings and profits for United States tax purposes. Distributions which are not within this definition of "dividends," or covered by any other provision of this Convention, shall be treated as "other income" under Article 22 (Other Income) of this Convention.

Paragraph (4) provides that paragraphs (1) and (2) of this Article shall not apply if the person deriving the dividends, being a resident of a Contracting State, has a permanent establishment in the other Contracting State or performs personal services from a fixed base situated therein, and the holding in respect of which the dividends are paid is effectively connected with the permanent establishment or fixed base. In such a case, the dividends will be treated as business profits subject to the provision of Article 7 (Business Profits) or taxable in accordance with Articles 14 (Independent Personal Services) or 17 (Artistes and Athletes), as the case may be.

Paragraph (5) provides that dividends paid by a corporation which is a resident of a Contracting State, regardless of where it derives its income, to a person other than a resident of the other Contracting State (and in the case of dividends paid by a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom, to a person other than a United States citizen), shall be exempt from tax by the other Contracting State unless the holding with respect to which such dividends are paid is effectively connected with a permanent establishment or a fixed base which the person deriving the dividends has in that other State. For example, if a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom and is doing business in the United States pays dividends to a resident of the United Kingdom, or to a resident of a third State, those dividends shall be exempt from United States tax unless they are paid to a citizen or resident of the United States, or unless the holding in respect of which the dividends are paid is effectively connected with a permanent establishment or fixed base which the United Kingdom resident or resident of a third State maintains in the United States. This rule is contained in Article XV of the 1945 Convention. A dual-resident corporation which derives dividends from a resident of a Contracting State may not claim the benefits of this provision, although dividends received from a dual-resident corpuoration will qualify for the benefits of this Article.

Paragraph (6) continues the provisions of Article XVI of the 1945 Convention, and provides that a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom shall be exempt from the United States tax on accumulated or undistributed earnings (as provided by Code sections 531 (the accumulated earnings tax) and 541 (the personal holding company tax)), if individuals, other than citizens of the United States, who are residents of the United Kingdom control, directly or indirectly, more than 50 percent of the entire voting power in such corporation.

Paragraph (7) prevents the application of paragraphs (1) and (2) of this Article in two circumstances where tax avoidance may occur. First, under subparagraph (a), where a resident of a Contracting State owns 10 percent or more of the shares of a corporation with respect to which dividends are paid, paragraphs (1) or (2) of this Article shall not apply to the extent that the dividends are paid out of profits which the corporation earned or other income which it received in a period ending 12 months or more before the date on which the shareholder became the owner of 10 percent or more of the corporation's stock. This rule is designed to prevent transactions where a 10 percent stock interest is acquired in order to obtain a distribution of the past earnings of a corporation at reduced rates of tax.

A second rule contained in subparagraph (b) is designed to deny the benefits of the Convention to tax exempt organizations if the recipient of a dividend is exempt from tax in the United States and the dividends are received in circumstances where if received by an exempt organization of the United Kingdom such interest or dividends would not be so exempt. Under United Kingdom law, if a resident of the United Kingdom sells securities to an exempt organization immediately before the payment of dividends, the organization will be taxable on the dividends paid in respect of the securities if the transaction was designed to accord the initial seller a preferential rate of tax on his sale. This rule is contained in Article VII A of the 1945 Convention.

The rules of paragraph (7), stated above, shall not apply if the beneficial owner of the shares satisfies the competent authorities of the respective States that the shares were acquired for bona fide commercial purposes and not to secure the benefits of the Convention.

This Article is subject to the saving clause of paragraph (3) of Article 1 (Personal Scope). Thus, dividends derived by a citizen of a Contracting State may be taxed by that Contracting State without regard to this Article.

Article 11. Interest

Paragraphs (1) and (2) provide that interest derived and beneficially owned by a resident of one Contracting State shall be exempt from tax by the other Contracting State. In these cases, interest is taxable only in the taxpayer's State of residence. The exemption only applies where the person deriving the interest is a resident of a Contracting State (as defined in Article 4 (Fiscal Residence)) and is the beneficial owner of the interest. Thus, the exemption does not apply where an intermediary, which is a resident of a Contracting State, such as an agent or nominee, collects or receives the interest on behalf of a person who is not a resident of that Contracting State.

Paragraph (3) defines the term interest for purposes of this Article as income from Government securities, bonds or debentures, whether or not secured by mortgage or whether or not carrying a right to participate in profits, and debt claims of every kind, as well as all other income (such as original issue discount) which, under the taxation law of the Contracting State in which the income has its source, is assimilated to income from money lent. Paragraphs (1) and (2) apply to all "interest," from whatever source derived. Penalty charges and late payment penalties shall not be regarded as interest. Such payments shall be regarded as "other income" dealt with by Article 22 (Other Income).

Paragraph (4) provides that the exemption from tax provided by paragraphs (1) and (2) shall not apply if the person deriving the interest, being a resident of a Contracting State, has a permanent establishment in the other Contracting State or performs personal services from a fixed base situated therein, and the indebtedness giving rise to the interest is effectively connected with the permanent establishment or fixed base. In such a case, the interest will be treated as business profits subject to the provisions of Article 7 (Business Profits) or will be taxable in accordance with Articles 14 (Independent Personal Services) or 17 (Artistes and Athletes), as the case may be.

If excessive interest is paid pursuant to a special relationship between the payer and the person deriving the interest or between both of them and a third person, under paragraph (5) the provisions of Article 11 shall not apply to the excess portion of the payment. For this purpose, those persons need not be "related" within the meaning of paragraph (5) of Article 9 (Related Enterprises). The excessive portion may be taxed by each Contracting State, in accordance with its own law, including the Convention where applicable. In the case of the United States, the excessive portion may, for example, be taxed as a dividend, in which case the provisions of Article 10 (Dividends) will apply.

Paragraph (6) provides that interest paid by a resident of a Contracting State, regardless of where it derives its income, to a person other than a resident of the other Contracting State (and in the case of interest paid by a resident of the United Kingdom, to a person other than a United States citizen), shall be exempt from tax by the other Contracting State unless the debt claim in respect of which such interest is paid is effectively connected with a permanent establishment or a fixed base which the person deriving the interest has in that other State. For example, if a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom and is doing business in the United States pays interest to a resident of the United Kingdom, or to a resident of a third State, that interest shall be exempt from United States tax unless it is paid to a citizen or resident of the United States, or unless the debt obligation is effectively connected with a permanent establishment or a fixed base which the United Kingdom resident or resident of a third State maintains in the United States. A dual-resident corporation may not claim the benefits of this provision. A debt obligation is effectively connected with a permanent establishment in the United States when interest on that obligation is effectively connected with a trade or business in the United States within the meaning of Code section 864(c)(2) or 864(c)(4)(B)(ii), depending on the source of the interest under United States law.

Paragraph (7) is carried over from paragraph (5) of Article VII of the 1945 Convention. Under United Kingdom domestic law, interest payments by United Kingdom corporations to non-United Kingdom corporations which have 75 percent or more control, directly or indirectly, of the United Kingdom corporation are treated as distributions (dividends) rather than as deductible interest. This paragraph provides, in reciprocal terms, that this rule shall not apply where the payment is to a resident of the other Contracting State. By virtue of paragraph (2) of Article 1 (Personal Scope), a dual-resident corporation may claim the benefits of this provision with respect to interest payments it makes. However, this paragraph also provides that where the interest is paid to a corporation which is a resident of a Contracting State of which more than 50 percent of the voting power is directly or indirectly controlled by persons who are residents of the other Contracting State, the exemption shall not apply.

Paragraph (8) provides that the exemption from United Kingdom tax under paragraph (2) of this Article will not apply if the recipient of the interest is exempt from tax on such income in the United States and the recipient sells or makes a contract to sell the holding from which such interest is derived within three months after the date the recipient acquired such holding.

The provisions of this Article are subject to the saving clause of paragraph (3) of Article 1 (Personal Scope). Thus, interest derived by a citizen of a Contracting State may be taxed by that Contracting State without regard to this Article.

ARTICLE 12. ROYALTIES

Paragraphs (1) and (2) provide that royalties derived and beneficially owned by a resident of a Contracting State shall be exempt from tax by the other Contracting State. Such income, therefore, is taxable only in the State of residence. As in Article 10 (Dividends) and 11 (Interest), this exemption applies only where the person deriving the royalties is a resident of a Contracting State and is the beneficial owner of the royalty. Thus, the exemption does not apply where an intermediary, such as an agent or nominee, who is a resident of a Contracting State collects or receives the royalties on behalf of a nonresident of that Contracting State. This Article deals with royalties from sources within a Contracting State or from sources within any third State, except as described below.

Paragraph (3) defines the term "royalties" as payment of any kind made as consideration for the use of, or the right to use, copyrights of literary, artistic, or scientific works (but not including copyrights of motion picture films or films or tapes used for radio or television broadcasting (which are treated as business profits under paragraph (7) of Article 7 (Business Profits)), patents, trade mark, design or model, plan, secret formula or process, or other like right or property, or for information concerning industrial, commercial or scientific experience. This term includes "know-how" and similar experience or skill, including the supply of assistance of an ancillary and subsidiary nature furnished as a means of enabling the application or enjoyment of any such right or property. The term also includes gains derived from the alienation (e.g.; the sale, exchange, or other disposition) of any such right or property to the extent the amounts realized on such alienation are contingent on the productivity, use, or disposition of the right or property. If the amounts realized are not so contingent, the provisions of Article 13 (Capital Gains) may apply. The article does not apply to amounts which are characterized as interest pursuant to section 483 of the Code.

Paragraph (4) provides that paragraphs (1) and (2) will not apply if the royalty recipient, being a resident of one Contracting State, carries on business in the other Contracting State through a permanent establishment situated therein or performs in that other Contracting State personal services from a fixed base situated therein, and the right or property giving rise to the royalty is effectively connected with such permanent establishment or fixed base. In such a case, the royalty will be treated as business profits subject to Article 7 (Business Profits) or will be taxable in accordance with Articles 14 (Independent Personal Services) or 17 (Artistes and Athletes) as the case may be.

If excessive royalties are paid pursuant to a special relationship between the payer and the person deriving the royalty or between both of them and a third person, paragraph (5) provides that the provisions of this Article shall not apply to the excessive portion of the payment. For this purpose, the persons covered by this paragraph need not be "related" within the meaning of paragraph (5) of Article 9 (Related Enterprises). The excessive portion may be taxed in each Contracting State, in accordance with its own law, including the Convention where applicable. In the case of the United States, the excessive portion may, for example, be taxed as a dividend, in which case the provisions of Article 10 (Dividends) will apply.

This Article is subject to the saving clause of paragraph (3) of Article 1 (Personal Scope). Therefore, royalties derived by a citizen of a Contracting State may be taxed by the Contracting State without regard to this Article.

ARTICLE 13. CAPITAL GAINS

This Article provides that, except as provided in Article 8 (Shipping and Air Transport) capital gains are taxable in accordance with the domestic laws of the Contracting States. This rule applies to the existing laws of a Contracting State respecting the taxation of capital gains and revisions of those laws subsequent to the effective date of this Convention. Thus, for example, capital gains in respect of the sale of immovable property described by Article 6 (Immovable Property) or the sale of a right or property giving rise to royalties described by Article 12 (Royalties) (which are not contingent on productivity, etc.), may be taxed in accordance with the respective domestic laws of the Contracting States. The provisions of Article 7 (Business Profits) shall apply to gains attributable to a permanent establishment. Article 22 (Other Income) does not apply to capital gains.

Under current United States law, contained in Code sections 871 and 872, nonresident alien individuals are generally not taxable in the U.S. on their United States source capital gains unless they are present in the United States for 183 days or more during a taxable year, or if the gains are effectively connected with the conduct of a U.S. trade or business. Under Code sections 881 and 882 foreign corporations generally are taxable in the U.S. only on capital gains which are effectively connected with the conduct of a U.S. trade or business.

Notwithstanding the foregoing rules, under paragraph (6) of Article 8 (Shipping and Air Transport) gains which an enterprise of a Contracting State derives from the sale, exchange or other disposition of ships, aircraft or containers which the enterprise owns or operates (dealt with by Article 8 (Shipping and Air Transport)), shall be taxable only in the State in which the income from the ships, aircraft or containers was taxable.

Under paragraph (2) of Article 3 (General Definitions), whether an item of income constitutes capital gains shall be determined under the laws of the Contracting State seeking to tax those gains.

The representatives of the Contracting States will consult with each other upon the enactment or proposed enactment by either State of any laws which substantially change the manner in which capital gains derived by nonresidents are taxed by the respective States.

ARTICLE 14. INDEPENDENT PERSONAL SERVICES

In dealing with the taxation of income from personal services, the Convention distinguishes between "independent" and "dependent" personal services. The Convention also provides special treatment for individuals who are "artistes or athletes" and for amounts received in certain circumstances in respect of the services of an artiste or athlete.

Personal services performed in an independent capacity, that is, independent personal services, are services performed by an individual for his own account where he receives the income and bears the losses arising from such services. If an individual is an independent contractor he is considered as rendering independent personal services. Income from services in which capital is a material income-producing factor, however, will generally be governed by the provisions of Article 7 (Business Profits). Generally, services rendered as a director of a corporation, or rendered by physicians, lawyers, engineers, architects, dentists, consultants, and accountants, performing personal services as sole proprietors or partners, are independent personal services, whereas the income earned by the employees of such persons, or as an officer of a corporation, is considered to be income from dependent personal services.

Under this Article income derived by an individual who is a resident of one Contracting State from the performance of personal services in an independent capacity may be taxed by that Contracting State. Except as permitted by subparagraphs (a) and (b) of this Article, such income will be exempt from tax by the other Contracting State.

Subparagraph (a) provides that income derived from services performed in the other Contracting State may also be subject to tax in that other Contracting State if the individual is present therein for a period or periods exceeding 183 days in the tax year, but only to the extent such income is attributable to services performed in that State. In addition, subparagraph (b) provides that income from personal services may be taxed in the other Contracting State if the individual has a fixed base regularly available to him for the purpose of performing his activities, but only to the extent such income is attributable to services performed in that State. The term fixed base is synonymous with the term "permanent establishment" as described in Article 5 (Permanent Establishment).

ARTICLE 15. DEPENDENT PERSONAL SERVICES

This Article deals with the taxation of income in respect of dependent personal services. The Article is based on Article 15 (Dependent Personal Services) of the OECD Model Convention. Under paragraph (1), subject to Articles 18 (Pensions) and 19 (Government Service), salaries, wages and other similar remuneration derived by an individual who is a resident of one Contracting State from labor or personal services performed as an employee (of any person) shall be taxed only by that Contracting State unless that employment is exercised in the other Contracting State. Except as provided by paragraph (2), remuneration derived with respect to services performed within the other Contracting State may also be taxed by that other Contracting State. It is intended that for purposes of the Convention the term "salaries, wages and other similar remuneration" includes income from services performed as an officer of a corporation.

Under paragraph (2), remuneration derived by an individual who is a resident of one Contracting State in respect of an employment exercised in the other Contracting State will be exempt from tax by the other Contracting State if: (a) the individual is present in that other Contracting State for a period or periods aggregating less than 183 days in the taxable year; (b) the employee's remuneration is paid by or on behalf of an employer who is not a resident of that other Contracting State; and (c) the remuneration is not borne as such by a permanent establishment or fixed base which the employer has in that other Contracting State. Such income may nevertheless be taxed by that other Contracting State if the individual is a citizen or resident of that Contracting State, pursuant to the saving clause of paragraph (3) of Article 1 (Personal Scope).

In the United States, remuneration from the performance of dependent services will be viewed as not having been borne by the permanent establishment or fixed base maintained in the United States if the employee is performing stewardship or overseeing functions for the benefit of a resident of or a permanent establishment maintained in the United Kingdom. However, the remuneration will be considered to be borne by the permanent establishment or fixed base maintained in the United States if the remuneration is paid for activities other than stewardship or overseeing functions and the permanent establishment or fixed base is entitled to claim the employee's remuneration as a deduction in computing taxable income for United States purposes because the renumeration is definitely related and allocable to its gross income or a class of its gross income pursuant to Code section 861 and the regulations thereunder.

Paragraph (3) provides that, notwithstanding paragraphs (1) and (2) of this Article, remuneration derived by an individual employee in respect of an employment as a member of the regular complement of a ship or aircraft in international traffic may be taxed by the Contracting State of which the employer operating the ship or aircraft is a resident.

ARTICLE 16. INVESTMENT OR HOLDING COMPANIES

This Article provides that a corporation which is a resident of one Contracting State and which derives dividends, interest or royalties arising within the other Contracting State shall not be entitled to claim the benefits of Articles 10 (Dividends), 11 (Interest), or 12 (Royalties), if the tax imposed by the first-mentioned Contracting State with respect to such dividends, interest or royalties is substantially less than the tax generally imposed by that State on corporate profits; and 25 percent or more of the capital of such corporation is owned directly or indirectly by persons who are not individual residents of the first-mentioned Contracting State and are not nationals of the United States.

This Article also provides that a corporation which is a resident of the United States and which derives dividends, interest or royalties arising in the United Kingdom shall not be entitled to the benefits of Articles 10 (Dividends), 11 (Interest), or 12 (Royalties) where more than 80 percent of its gross income (including such dividends, interest, or royalties) is derived from sources outside of the United States as determined by and for the purposes of Code Sections 861(a)(1)(B) and 861(a)(2)(A), and as they may be amended from time to time without changing their general principles. This limitation applies only if 25 percent or more of the capital of the corporation is owned directly or indirectly by persons who are not individual residents of the United States or nationals of the United States.

Paragraph (2) provides that nothing in this Article will prevent a claim under the provisions of Articles 10 (Dividends), 11 (Interest) or 12 (Royalties) by a United States corporation, if 75 percent or more of the capital of that corporation is directly or indirectly owned: (a) by another United States corporation which receives 20 percent or more of its gross income from sources within the United States as determined by and for the period described in sections 861(a)(1)(B) and (a)(2)(A) of the Code, as they may be amended from time to time so as not to affect their general principle; or (b) by a corporation other than a United States corporation which would not be treated as a close company under section 283 of the United Kingdom Income and Corporation Taxes Act of 1970 (as may be amended without changing the general principal thereof); or (c) by a corporation, resident in the United Kingdom, more than 50 percent of the voting power of which is controlled directly or indirectly by individuals who are residents of the United Kingdom.

The purposes of this Article are, first, to prevent the potential abuse of the Convention which would occur if residents of a third country could take advantage of the reduced rates of withholding provided by this treaty in situations where one of the Contracting States provided preferential rates of tax for investment or holding companies deriving foreign source income. In the absence of this Article, residents of a third country could organize a corporation in the Contracting State extending the preferential rates for the purpose of making investments in the other Contracting State. The combination of low tax rates in the first Contracting State and the reduced rates or exemptions in the other Contracting State would enable the third country residents to realize unintended benefits.

The Article is also intended to prevent the use of United States corporations by residents of third countries to take advantage of the reduced rates of tax or exemptions from tax granted by the United Kingdom on dividends, interest and royalties paid to residents (including corporations) of the United States. Generally, under sections 861(a)(1)(B) and 861(a)(2)(A) of the Code, interest and dividends paid by U.S. corporations to nonresidents of the United States are not subject to tax by the United States if more than 80 percent of the corporation's gross income is from sources outside the United States. Accordingly, were it not for this provision, a resident of a third country could establish a United States corporation solely to derive interest or dividends from the United Kingdom subject to the reduced rates and refunds allowed by the Convention. While such income would be subject to normal corporate taxes in the United States, the corporation's dividends or interest to the third country residents would be exempt from U.S. withholding taxes if the conditions of Code sections 861 (a)(1)(B) and (a)(2)(A) are met. The Article prevents this abuse where the above mentioned share-ownership requirements apply. Since the purpose of this provision is only to prevent the use of United States corporations in cases where their income would otherwise qualify for reduced withholding rates in the United Kingdom and their distributions to third country residents would not attract United States withholding taxes, exceptions to the rule are given where that corporation is owned by another United States corporation whose distributions would attract United States withholding taxes; where that corporation is owned by a corporation which is not a close company under United Kingdom law; and where that corporation is owned by a corporation resident in the United Kingdom 50 percent or more of the voting power of which is controlled by United Kingdom resident individuals.

ARTICLE 17. ARTISTES AND ATHLETES

This Article deals with the taxation of income derived by entertainers, musicians, and athletes (sometimes referred to hereinafter as "artistes and athletes") in respect of the performance of services in a Contracting State. The Article applies in cases where an artiste or athlete performs services on his own behalf and in cases where services are performed on behalf of another person, as an employee or pursuant to any other arrangement.

Paragraph (1) states the general rule that notwithstanding the provisions of Article 14 (Independent Personal Services) and Article 15 (Dependent Personal Services), income derived by entertainers such as theatre, motion picture, radio, or television artistes, and musicians or athletes, for their personal activities as such, may be taxed in the Contracting State where those services are exercised. Such income, however, is taxable under this Article only where the gross receipts derived by the artiste or athlete, including expenses reimbursed to him or borne on his behalf, in respect of such activities, exceed $15,000 or its equivalent in pounds sterling for the tax year concerned. In computing the $15,000 limitation, expenses borne on behalf of the entertainer include any expenditures for travel, meals and lodging, payments to persons such as band members or agents, and other amounts which are generally related to the activities of the artiste or athlete. This rule includes expenses borne by persons in the Contracting State where services are performed or borne by persons in the other or any third State if borne on behalf of the artiste or athlete. If the total of these expenses, including the amounts paid to the artiste or athlete, exceed $15,000, the entire amount is taxable in the State where the activities are performed. For example, where an entertainer's gross income, including reimbursed expenses and expenses borne on his behalf, totals $20,000, the full $20,000 is subject to tax in the State where the services are performed.

Also, in computing the $15,000 limitation, amounts paid in taxable years prior or subsequent to the year in which the services were performed shall be included in the determination of the amount of income attributable to the year in which the services were performed.

As noted above, this paragraph overrides the provisions of Articles 14 and 15, so that an artiste or athlete may be taxed in the State where his activities take place regardless of the period of time he is present in that State. Generally, however, income derived from services rendered by producers, directors, technicians and others who are not artistes and athletes is taxable in accordance with the provisions of Article 14 (Independent Personal Services), or Article 15 (Dependent Personal Services), as the case may be.

Paragraph (2) deals with cases where income in respect of the activities of an entertainer or athlete accrues to a person other than, or in addition to, the entertainer or athlete. A common method employed by foreign entertainers is to perform services in the United States as an employee of, or a contractor for, a corporation or other person. That person may act as the nominal recipient of the income in respect of the entertainer's services and the entertainer may act as its "employee" or "contractor." In such cases, the corporation may escape taxation in respect of those services under the provisions of Article 7 (Business Profits) because it does not have a permanent establishment in the United States described in Article 5 (Permanent Establishment). The entertainer may also escape taxation by being paid a small salary while in the United States and by receiving payment in a later year when the income is subject to reduced rates of tax or no tax at all, or by liquidating the corporation after the services are performed.

Paragraph (2) is designed to deal with these situations by providing that where income in respect of the personal activities of an artiste or athlete accrues to the benefit of another person (including a corporation, trust, or partnership of either Contracting State or any third State), that income may, notwithstanding the provisions of Article 7 (Business Profits), 14 (Independent Personal Services), and 15 (Dependent Personal Services), be taxed in the Contracting State in which the activities of the entertainer or athlete take place. Thus, for example, such other person could not claim the permanent establishment protection provided by Articles 5 (Permanent Establishment) and 7 (Business Profits).

For purposes of paragraph (2), income is considered to accrue to the benefit of another person where that person has control over or the right to gross income derived in respect of an entertainer or athlete's services as such. This rule applies regardless of whether the other person is a "sham" corporation or conduit. Income will not, however, be deemed to accrue to the benefit of another person where it is established to the satisfaction of the competent authority of the Contracting State in which the services are performed that neither the entertainer or athlete, nor persons related thereto, participate directly or indirectly in the profits of such other person, in any manner, including the receipt of deferred compensation, bonuses, fees, dividends, partnership distributions or other distributions. Persons may be considered to be related to the artiste or athlete regardless of whether the persons are considered to be related under the provisions of paragraph (5) of Article 9 (Related Enterprises). For this purpose, a person may be considered to be related to the artiste or athlete if he is an employee or agent of the artiste or athlete, or if he is regularly employed by the artiste or athlete in an advisory capacity, such as his attorney, accountant, or investment advisor.

This section is similar to provisions in other recent Conventions of the United States with Japan, Trinidad and Tobago, and Iceland, and follows Article 17 (Artistes and Athletes) of the OECD Model Convention. It differs from the 1945 Convention, which under Article I exempts an entertainer or athlete from United States tax where he: (a) is present in the United States for a period or periods not exceeding 183 days of a taxable year and (b) services are performed for or on behalf of a person who is a resident of the United Kingdom. The application of this section and Article III, regarding the industrial or commercial profits of an enterprise furnishing the services of an entertainer, was discussed in detail in Revenue Rulings 74-330 and 74-331. Both rulings considered cases where the services of foreign entertainers were "loaned" to United Kingdom corporations in order to benefit from the provisions of the 1945 Convention and to thereby avoid any taxation of the income derived in respect of their activities in the United States.

Article 18. Pensions

Paragraph (1) provides that, subject to the provisions of paragraph (2) of Article 19 (Government Service), pension payments received in consideration of past employment and annuity payments paid to an individual who is a resident of a Contracting State shall be taxable only in that State. The term "pension" includes payments from qualified retirement plans as well as other forms of retirement benefits paid for services rendered, or by way of compensation for injuries or sickness incurred in connection with past employment. A pension does not include payments in respect of the cancellation or premature termination of employment contracts (e.g., "golden handshakes" or severance pay). Such payments are taxable under the provisions of Articles 14 (Independent Personal Services), 15 (Dependent Personal Services), or 17 (Artistes and Athletes), as the case may be.

Payments which are not covered by any other Article of this Convention (e.g., Article 14 (Independent Personal Services), 15 (Dependent Personal Services), 17 (Artistes and Athletes), or 19 (Government Service)), are taxable in accordance with Article 22 (Other Income) in the recipient's State of residence.

For purposes of this Article, the term "pension" does not include social security payments and other public pensions, e.g., railroad retirement benefits. Such items are taxable pursuant to Article 22 (Other Income).

Paragraph (2) provides that alimony paid to an individual who is a resident of a Contracting State is taxable only in that State. The term "alimony" is not defined, but with respect to the United States, means periodic payments made pursuant to a decree of divorce, separate maintenance agreement, or support or separation agreement which is taxable to the recipient under the internal laws of the United States. Thus, for the United States, the term "alimony" would not include a payment which would not be taxable to the recipient even though such payment is made pursuant to a decree of divorce or of separate maintenance agreement. Payments for child support within the meaning of the Code are not covered by this Article and are, accordingly, taxable in the State where the recipient resides under Article 22 (Other Income). In the case of the United States, under present law, a recipient of child support is not taxable on such payments.

Paragraph (3) defines the term "annuity" to mean a stated sum payable periodically at stated times, during life or during a specified or ascertainable period of time, under an obligation to make the payments in return for adequate and full consideration in money or money's worth.

This Article is subject to the saving clause of paragraph (3) of Article 1 (Personal Scope). Thus, individuals who are nationals of a Contracting State may be taxed by that Contracting State without regard to this Article.

Article 19. Government Service

This Article generally follows Article 19 (Government Service) of the OECD Model Convention and is similar to Article X of the 1945 Convention.

Paragraph (1)(a) provides that remuneration, other than a pension, paid by a Contracting State to an individual for services rendered to that State will be taxable only in that State. This paragraph only applies to individuals who are employees of a Contracting State, and not to employees of a political subdivision or local authority of a Contracting State. Under paragraph (1)(b), such remuneration will be taxable only in the State in which the services are being performed if the recipient is a resident of that State and either is a national of that State or did not become a resident of that State solely for the purpose of performing the services.

Under paragraph (2)(a), any pension paid by a Contracting State or a political subdivision or a local authority thereof to any individual in respect of services rendered to that State or subdivision or local authority thereof will be taxable only in that State. An exception similar to the one contained in paragraph (1)(b) is incorporated in paragraph (2)(b) with respect to pensions. That paragraph provides that a pension described in paragraph (2)(a) will be taxable only in the other Contracting State if the recipient is both a national of and a resident of that State.

Paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply if the services are rendered in connection with any business carried on by or on behalf of one of the Contracting States or one of its political subdivisions, or local authorities paying the remuneration. In such cases, the provisions of Articles 14 (Independent Personal Services), 15 (Dependent Personal Services), 17 (Artistes and Athletes), and 18 (Pensions), as the case may be, shall apply.

If an individual acquires immigrant status in the State in which he performs the services or receives the pension, that Contracting State may tax the individual without regard to this Article. See paragraphs (3) and (4)(b) of Article 1 (Personal Scope).

Article 20. Teachers

Paragraph (1) provides that a professor or teacher who visits one of the Contracting States for a period not exceeding two years, for the purpose of teaching or engaging in research at a university, college, or other recognized educational institution in that Contracting State, and who was immediately before that visit a resident of that other Contracting State, will be exempted from tax by the first-mentioned Contracting State on any remuneration for such teaching or research for a period not exceeding two years from the date he first visits that State for the purpose of teaching or engaging in research. Since this two year period is determined from the date he first visits the Contracting State, periodic vacations outside the first-mentioned Contracting State, or a brief return to the other Contracting State will not toll the running of the two year period. Unlike the existing Convention, if the two-year period beginning from the date of his arrival is exceeded, the exemption will be lost retroactively. Thus, if a person comes to a Contracting State for the purpose of teaching and stays for a period in excess of two years, the exemption will not apply for the first two years. A person who meets the qualifications of this provision may again claim its benefits if he first reestablishes his residence in the other Contracting State. In such case, the person claiming these benefits on a subsequent occasion must first satisfy the competent authority of the first-mentioned Contracting State that he had become a bona fide resident of the other State for a substantial period of time (normally at least one year).

Under paragraph (2), the Contracting State in which the teaching or research is performed may apply this exemption either to current payments to a professor or teacher in anticipation of fulfillment of the requirements of paragraph (1) or by way of withholding and refund. Thus, the recipient may be required to report and pay taxes on such income on a current basis and seek a refund of taxes paid upon fulfillment of the requirements of paragraph (1).

If an individual becomes a national of, or acquires immigrant status in, the State where he is visiting, that other Contracting State may tax the individual without regard to this Article. See paragraphs (3) and (4)(b) of Article 1 (Personal Scope).

Pursuant to paragraph (3), this Article only applies to income from research undertaken in the public interest which is not primarily for the benefit of a private person or persons. For example, research projects which are undertaken to discover or perfect product processes, designs, etc., which are expected to be commercially exploited by the researcher or his present (or former) employer do not qualify under this Article.

ARTICLE 21. STUDENTS AND TRAINEES

This Article corresponds generally to Article XIX of the 1945 Convention and Article 20 (Students) of the OECD Model Convention. Under this Article, payments which a student or business apprentice, who immediately before visiting a Contracting State was a resident of the other Contracting State receives for his maintenance, education or training, will not be taxed in the first-mentioned State if the recipient of the payments is engaged in a full-time education or training program and the payments are made from sources outside the State in which the education or training takes place. Payments will be considered to have been made from sources outside a State when they are borne by a person who is not a resident (as defined in Article 4 (Fiscal Residence)) of the Contracting State in which the education or training takes place. Like other articles referred to in paragraph 4(b) of Article 1, this Article will not apply to payments to students or business apprentices who are nationals of or residents with immigrant status in the first-mentioned Contracting State.

ARTICLE 22. OTHER INCOME

This Article follows Article 21 (Other Income) of the OECD Model Convention. It contains the general rule that income of a resident of a Contracting State, from any source, which is not dealt with by any specific Article in the Convention, shall be taxable only in that person's State of residence. This is the first United States tax convention to follow this rule. The scope of this Article is not confined to income having a source in the other Contracting State, but applies to a resident's income from sources in third countries. Moreover, this rule applies irrespective of whether the State of residence exercises its right to tax the income covered by this Article. Specific items of income not dealt with by other Articles of this Convention include child support payments, prizes or awards, and social security payments. These items are subject to the provisions of this Article and are taxable only in the State of residence.

This Article also makes it clear that the United Kingdom may continue to impose its tax on discretionary and accumulation trusts. United Kingdom law currently provides that discretionary and accumulation trusts are subject to the basic rate of income tax (35 percent) and to an additional tax of 15 percent. Trustees are eligible to claim double taxation relief in the respect of foreign tax paid on the income. Under United Kingdom law a distribution of income from a discretionary or accumulation trust is treated in the hands of the beneficiary as a payment from which tax has been deducted at the aggregate of the two rates (35 and 15) in force for the year of payment. That is, the distribution is grossed-up by 100 percent and the amount of the gross-up is treated as tax paid by, and creditable to, the distributee in the year of distribution.

Under paragraph (1) of Article 22 (Other Income) and paragraph (3) of Article 25 (Mutual Agreement Procedure), the United Kingdom will continue to impose its taxes on discretionary and accumulation trusts and will not be obliged to refund these taxes at the time of distributions to United States residents. However, to give double taxation relief, the United Kingdom will treat a United States person taxable on the income as if he were entitled to receive the income of the trust directly. Thus, the beneficiary will be given the benefit of relief provisions in United Kingdom domestic law (e.g., government securities held by nonresidents). Additionally, any income covered by the Convention, such as dividends and interest, will receive the benefits of the Convention to the extent that the payments from the trust are made out of this income.

This Article is subject to the saving clause provisions of paragraph (3) of Article 1 (Personal Scope).

This Article does not apply if the resident deriving the income carries on business in the other Contracting State through a permanent establishment situated therein or performs independent personal services from a fixed base therein, and the right or property in respect of which the income is paid is effectively connected with such permanent establishment or fixed base. In such cases, the provisions of Articles 7 (Business Profits), 14 (Independent Personal Services), or 17 (Artistes and Athletes), as the case may be, apply. As in the case of paragraph (1), this paragraph applies to income from all sources.

It should be noted that the proposed Convention specifically covers most types of income.

ARTICLE 23. ELIMINATION OF DOUBLE TAXATION

In order to prevent the double taxation of income covered by this Convention, each Contracting State agrees in this Article to provide a credit against its taxes for taxes paid to the other Contracting State.

Under paragraph (1), the United States agrees to allow a United States citizen or resident as a credit against United States tax the appropriate amount of taxes paid or accrued to the United Kingdom in accordance with the provisions and subject to the limitations of the law of the United States (as it may be amended from time to time without changing the general principle of paragraph (1)). In addition, in the case of a United States corporation owning at least ten percent of the voting stock of a United Kingdom corporation from which it receives dividends in any taxable year, the United States will allow credit for the appropriate amount of taxes paid or accrued to the United Kingdom by the United Kingdom corporation paying such dividends with respect to the profits out of which such dividends are paid. The rules for calculating the appropriate amount of taxes creditable in such a case are set forth below. However, the amount of tax credit is not to exceed the limitations (for the purpose of limiting the credit to the United States tax on income from sources within the United Kingdom or on income from sources outside of the United States) provided by United States law for the taxable year. This provision does not require the United States to maintain a per-country or overall limitation in the future so long as the general principle of a foreign tax credit remains in effect.

For the purpose of applying the United States credit in relation to taxes paid to the United Kingdom, the taxes referred to in paragraphs (2)(b) and (3) of Article 2 (Taxes Covered) shall be considered to be income taxes. In the case of dual-resident corporations described by paragraph (2) of Article 1 (Personal Scope), the United Kingdom petroleum revenue tax and the unrefunded portion of the ACT referred to in paragraph (1)(c) of this Article shall be regarded as an income tax for purposes of this Article. (See paragraph (2) of Article 1 (Personal Scope)). Any other taxes imposed by the United Kingdom on such corporation shall be treated as income taxes for purposes of the United States tax credit only in accordance with the laws of the United States.

Under paragraphs (2)(a)(i) and (2)(a)(ii) of Article 10 (Dividends), the United Kingdom allows residents of the United States certain tax credits or refunds in respect of dividends paid by a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom, subject to taxes withheld of 5 or 15 percent on the aggregate amounts received as dividends and tax credits. Subparagraph (1)(b) of this Article provides that the amounts withheld (5 or 15 percent) by the United Kingdom pursuant to paragraph 2(a)(i) or (ii) of Article 10 (Dividends) from the refund paid to residents of the United States shall be regarded as an income tax imposed on the recipient of the dividend. Thus, the United States foreign tax credit with respect to those amounts shall be computed in accordance with Code section 901.

In the case of tax credits allowed to corporate shareholders of a corporation which is a resident of the United Kingdom pursuant to subparagraph (2)(a)(i) of Article 10, only one-half of the credit otherwise paid to individual shareholders is paid to those corporate shareholders. Subparagraph (1)(c) of this Article provides that the portion of the cerdit not paid to these corporate shareholders, i.e., one-half of the ACT paid in respect to the distribution, shall be treated as an income tax imposed on the corporation paying the dividend.

In order that the derivative foreign tax credit be computed as intended under the Convention, corporate shareholders receiving the benefits of subparagraph 2(a)(i) of Article 10 (Dividends) must apply the following rules:

1. ACT paid with respect to a distribution shall be treated as attributable to the accumulated profits of those years in which it reduces the United Kingdom corporate tax imposed without regard to distributions (hereinafter referred to as "mainstream tax") for United Kingdom tax purposes. Thus, such ACT shall be treated as reducing mainstream tax and increasing (by the amount of the unrefunded ACT) ACT for the year or years for which the United Kingdom considers the mainstream tax to have been reduced; and unrefunded ACT shall not be considered to be attributable to accumulated profits until, and except to the extent that, it reduces British mainstream tax.

2. A distribution in respect of which the ACT paid reduces mainstream tax for the current taxable year may be treated by the Internal Revenue Service as made first out of the entire profits of that year (computed as of the close of the year). This rule, which applies regardless of whether the distribution is made in the first 60 days of the taxable year, will be applied where necessary to prevent crediting of a prior year's mainstream tax unreduced by ACT, while at the same time using such ACT to reduce the current year's mainstream tax.

3. Where a United States corporation owns less than all the stock of a corporation resident in the United Kingdom, the derivative tax credit will be calculated with reference solely to the proporationate interest in accumulated profits attributable to the United States shareholder. Thus, for example, the ratio which the distribution to the United States shareholder bears to accumulated profits in excess of income taxes, as well as the amount of mainstream tax and ACT paid with respect thereto, will be calculated as if the United States shareholder's proportionate interest in the accumulated profits were the entire accumulated profits of a corporation of which it was the sole owner. The amount of foreign tax credit will not vary according to either (1) the status of any other shareholder; or (2) the imposition or refund of ACT with respect to a distribution to any other shareholder.

In the case of dividends paid by a United Kingdom corporation wholly owned by a United States parent corporation, the determination of the appropriate amount of creditable taxes is illustrated by the following examples:

Example 1. A United Kingdom resident corporation wholly owned by a United States parent corporation has $100 of pretax earnings in year 1 and pays a dividend equal to 50 percent of the amount available for distribution in year 1.

1.	Accumulated profits	$100.00
2.	British mainstream tax at 52% rate	52.00
3.	Available for distribution	48.00
4.	Distribution	24.00
5.	ACT with respect to distribution before refund	12.92
6.	Net mainstream tax, reduced by ACT[*]	39.08
7.	Refund of one-half ACT pursuant to paragraph (2)(a)(i) of Article 10	6.46
8.	Unrefunded one-half of ACT treated as corporate tax pursuant to paragraph (1)(c) of Article 23	6.46
9.	Total corporate tax (39.08 mainstream plus 6.46 unrefunded ACT)	45.54
10.	Total dividend received before withholding tax (24.00 declared plus 6.46 refund treated as dividend pursuant to paragraph (1)(a)(iii) of Article 10)	30.46
11.	Accumulated profits in excess of British corporate taxes (100 — 45.54)	54.46
12.	Derivative tax credit $\left(\frac{30.46}{54.46} \times 45.54\right)$	25.47
13.	British withholding tax (5 percent of total dividend of 30.46)	1.52
14.	Total foreign tax credit	26.99
15.	Taxable income (30.46 dividend plus 25.47 "gross-up" of derivative tax credit)	55.93
16.	United States tax before credit (48% of 55.93)	26.85
17.	Amount by which foreign tax credit exceeds U.S. tax	0.14

Example 2. Assume the same facts as in the previous example, except that in year two the British corporation makes a distribution out of what, under United States tax law principles, are the remaining $24.00 of earnings from year one. Assume further that there are no earnings in year two for United Kingdom purposes, and that the ACT with respect to the distribution is carried back and credited against mainstream tax of year one.

1.	Distribution in year two	$24.00
2.	ACT	12.92
3.	Reduction in mainstream tax for year one	12.92
4.	Net mainstream tax for year one, reduced by ACT	26.06
5.	Refund of one-half ACT	6.46
6.	Unrefunded ACT	6.46
7.	Total corporate tax (26.06 mainstream + 6.46 unrefunded ACT in respect of distribution in year one + 6.46 unrefunded ACT in respect of distribution in year two)	39.08
8.	Total dividend received before withholding tax	30.46
9.	Accumulated profits in excess of British corporate taxes (100 — 39.08)	$60.92
10.	Derivative tax credit $\left(\frac{30.46}{60.92} \times 39.08\right)$	19.54
11.	Taxable income (30.46 dividend plus 19.54 "gross-up" of derivative tax credit)	50.00

It should be noted that the total taxable income in respect of the two distributions is $105.93 ($55.93 + $50), which is $5.93 more than the accumulated profits of $100; and the total derivative tax credit is $45.01, which is $5.93 more than the corporate tax of $39.08. The disparity occurs for two reasons: first, that the Convention treats refunded ACT as a dividend, but does not treat ACT that is potentially refundable as profits out of which future dividends can be paid[*]; and second, that $6.46 of the $45.54 mainstream tax considered paid in respect of the accumulated profits in Example 1 is subsequently refunded.

The above result is considered appropriate in order to ensure that, with reference to a 50 percent distribution, the British refund substantially benefits the United States shareholder. An adjustment is necessary, however, when tax which has been taken into account in computing derivative foreign tax credit in respect of a prior distribution—of whatever percentage of the accumulated profits—is refunded in the form of ACT. The refunded ACT must, with respect to such distribution, both

a) increase accumulated profits in excess of income taxes, and

b) decrease taxes paid in respect of accumulated profits.

By reason of the $6.46 refund of ACT in Example 2, therefore, the derivative foreign tax credit in Example 1 must be recalculated as follows:

1.	Calculation before adjustment (see (12) of Example 1)	$\frac{30.46}{54.46} \times 45.54$
2.	Addition of $6.46 to accumulated profits in excess of income taxes	$\frac{30.46}{60.92}$
3.	Subtraction of $6.46 from taxes paid	$45.54 — 6.46 = $39.08
4.	Derivative foreign tax credit $\left(\frac{30.46}{60.92} \times 39.08\right)$	$19.54

The adjusted result in Example 1 is the same as in Example 2. Both the taxable income and tax credit in respect of the prior distribution will therefore be decreased by $5.93, in accordance with section 905(c) of the Internal Revenue Code.

The determination of the appropriate amount of creditable taxes in the case of dividends paid by a less-wholly-owned United Kingdom corporation is illustrated by the following example:

Example 3. A United Kingdom resident corporation, W, is owned by U.S. corporation X (25%), U.K. corporation Y (60%), corporation Z (10%), and individual A (5%). W has $400 of pre-tax earnings in year 1 and pays a dividend of 50 percent of the amount available for distribution in year 1. Z is organized in country M and has no right to receive a refund of ACT from the United Kingdom. A, a United Kingdom resident, receives a tax credit equal to the entire ACT imposed, and Y makes an election under U.K. law to eliminate ACT with respect to distributions to itself.

1.	Accumulated profits	$400.00
2.	Mainstream tax imposed at a 52% rate	208.00
3.	Available for distribution	192.00
4.	Total distribution	96.00
5.	Portion of accumulated profits attributable to X's shareholding—25%	100.00
6.	Determination of X's United States foreign tax credit:
A.	Accumulated profits	$100.00
B.	British mainstream tax at 52% rate	52.00
C.	Available for distribution	48.00
D.	Distribution to U.S. corporation X	24.00
E.	For remainder of computation see Example 1

In the above examples it has been assumed that the earnings and profits used in calculating the indirect tax

---

[*] It is assumed in this example, as is generally the case, that ACT is fully credited against mainstream tax.

[*] If that were done, the fraction for computing the derivative tax credit in respect of the distribution in Example 1 would be

$$\frac{30.46}{54.46 + 6.46 \text{ potentially refundable ACT}} \text{ or } \frac{30.46}{60.92} \times \text{ taxes paid.}$$
